Mr. DISNEY. I said that the foundation of the right to make grants of this sort was to be found in the enhanced value given to the residue of the public domain, in consequence of the improvements made by virtue of these grants. And to sustain that proposition, I pledge myself—not now, but hereafter—to prove it to the gentleman's content.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman answer the question I have presented? I so understood him to say the other day, and I understand him to say so now.

Mr. DISNEY. I said that the whole domain in that particular locality was enhanced.

Mr. LETCHER. That is not the question to which I called the gentleman's attention.

If the gentleman will pardon me, I will read a communication from the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It is as follows:

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, March 1, 1854.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request of this morning to be furnished with a statement showing the quantity of land donated along the Illinois Central railroad, and the quantity reserved to the United States, subject to the double minimum price, I have the honor to state that the quantity donated, &c., as above, is as follows:

States.	Quantity donated.	Quantity reserved, &c.
Illinois.....	2,595,053 acres.	1,223,921 acres.
Alabama.....	419,528 "	*167,045 "
Mississippi.....	737,130 "	*288,495 "
Total.....	3,751,711	1,679,461

Of the 3,751,711 acres thus donated, 1,651,874 acres are within six miles of the road, and 2,099,837 acres are selected outside of these limits. With great respect,

JOHN WILSON, Commissioner.
*Estimated.

Mr. DISNEY. I am urged upon all sides to allow the vote to be taken immediately, and I therefore move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER: The question will first be taken upon the following amendment, reported by the Committee on Public Lands, which comes in at the close of section one, as follows:

"Provided, That no lands on either side of said road south of Janesville shall be granted to the State of Wisconsin by virtue of any provision of this act."

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon ordering the bill to be engrossed, and read a third time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 90, nays 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Banks, Barksdale, Benson, Bissell, Breckinridge, Campbell, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Clark, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullem, Cumming, John G. Davis, De Witt, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmonds, Ellison, English, Farley, Florence, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Henn, Hiestor, Houston, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Roland Jones, Knox, Lamb, Latham, Lindsey, Lindstey, Macy, Matteson, Maxwell, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Noble, Norton, Oids, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Peck, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Singleton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Straub, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tweed, Upham, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Yates—90.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Belcher, Bennett, Benton, Boeck, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Chastain, Churchwell, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Cutting, Dawson, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Drum, Eddy, Elliott, Everhart, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Grey, Grow, Andrew J. Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hill, Howe, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lane, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maurice, May, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Packer, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Seymour, Shaw, Shawer, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Snodgrass, Andrew Stuart, Tracy, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Israel Washburn, Wells, and Zollicoffer—87.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

Mr. DISNEY. The question now presents itself upon the passage of the bill; and upon that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The bill will now be read the third time, according to the order of the House.

The bill was read a third time by its title.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. LETCHER. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object to the withdrawal of the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

When the name of JOHN B. MACY was called—

Mr. LETCHER said: At this point I rise to a question of order. I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MACY] is a stockholder in this railroad; and if so, by the rules of the House he has no right to vote upon this question.

Mr. MACY. What railroad?

Mr. LETCHER. The Rock River Union Valley railroad.

Mr. BISSELL. There is no rule that will prevent the gentleman from voting if he is a stockholder.

Mr. LETCHER. Let the rule be read.

The Clerk read the 40th rule, which is as follows:

"No member shall vote on any question in the event of which he is immediately and particularly interested, or in any case where he was not within the bar of the House when the question was put. And when any member shall ask leave to vote, the Speaker shall propound to him the question: 'Were you within the bar when your name was called?'"

Mr. BISSELL. I do not understand that any railroad company is interested in this bill. It provides for giving land to the State of Wisconsin, who will dispose of it as she pleases.

Mr. LETCHER. The object of this bill, as I understand it, is to give land to the State of Wisconsin to be held in trust for the benefit of this railroad company.

Mr. BISSELL. Read the bill, and see what it provides for.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the bill will be read. A MEMBER. Read the note to the fortieth rule. The Clerk read the note, as follows:

"Of late, differences of opinion have occasionally arisen as to the kind of interest alluded to in this rule. It has been contended to apply to members who were merchants or manufacturers, or engaged in other business, to be effected by tariffs or other bills touching rates of duties, &c. This construction has never been sustained by the House. The original construction, and the only true one, is direct personal or pecuniary interest."

Mr. MACY. Without detaining the House further, I can satisfy the gentleman from Virginia in reference to his question of order. I am no stockholder in the railroad company to which he alludes. I disposed of all my stock in that company before I took my seat in this House.

Mr. LETCHER. I was informed, by a person who seemed to know, that the gentleman from Wisconsin was a stockholder in this company. If he is not, of course I have no question of order to make.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is this discussion in order?

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The calling of the roll was finished, and the Speaker announced the result—yeas 92, nays 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Banks, Barksdale, Benson, Bissell, Breckinridge, Campbell, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Clark, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullem, Cumming, John G. Davis, De Witt, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmonds, English, Farley, Florence, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Henn, Hiestor, Houston, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Roland Jones, Knox, Lamb, Latham, Lindsey, Lindstey, Lyon, Macdonald, McDougall, Macy, Matteson, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Peck, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Reese, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Singleton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Straub, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tweed, Upham, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Yates—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Thomas H. Bayly, Belcher, Bennett, Benton, Boeck, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Chastain, Churchwell, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Cutting, Dawson, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Drum, Eddy, Ellison, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hill, Howe, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lane, Letcher, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maurice, May, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Packer, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Seymour, Shaw, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Snodgrass, Andrew Stuart, Tracy, Trout, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Israel Washburn, Wells, and Zollicoffer—91.

Mr. DISNEY. As the morning hour has expired, or very nearly so, and as the Committee of Ways and Means are anxious to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up and disposing of the deficiency bill, I move to reconsider the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish to know if the Chair has not the right to vote upon the question just taken? The vote of the Speaker might change the result.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has certainly the right to vote under the rules of the House, but he regards the vote as rather an unimportant one, and he is therefore not disposed to avail himself of it. His right, however, is unquestionable.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise the question whether in the present instance the Speaker is not required to vote? I think the rule says that he shall not be required to vote unless there is a tie vote, or unless his vote if given in the minority would make a tie; and the inference is, that in such cases he shall be required to vote.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I raise the question of order, that the vote has been announced, and that it is too late for the Speaker to vote if he desires it.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the reading of the rule.

Mr. WHEELER. It is too late to raise the question of order. I object.

Mr. JONES. If the rule requires the Speaker to vote it is not too late.

Mr. TWEED. I ask the Chair if he had announced his vote?

The SPEAKER. He announced the result as—92 yeas and 91 nays; but he did not announce the effect of that result. In the mean time the gentleman from Ohio addressed the Chair, and being recognized, moved to recommit the bill. The question raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] was made in time, and if the rule requires the Chair to vote he shall conform to the rule.

The twelfth rule was read by the Clerk, and is as follows:

"In all cases of ballot by the House, the Speaker shall vote; in other cases he shall not be required to vote, unless the House be equally divided, or unless his vote, if given in the minority, will make the division equal; and in case of such equal division the question shall be lost."

The SPEAKER. Under the rule which has just been read the Chair is bound to vote. He votes in the negative, and the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table is therefore lost.

The vote being—yeas 92, nays 92, the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question then recurred upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The motion cannot be withdrawn without unanimous consent. There has been action upon it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that I have the right to withdraw my motion.

Mr. DISNEY. I renew the motion which I made some time since, to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered. Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CUTTING. I hope we shall go to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. TWEED. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to know what I am called to act upon? I understood that there was a motion made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY], to commit this Wisconsin bill, as it is called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submitted a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CUTTING. I move to proceed to the orders of the day, the morning hour having expired.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. SMITH. Does the gentleman from Ohio move to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? Why, it has never been referred to that committee. The motion so to refer it was defeated.

Mr. DISNEY. That was not my motion. I moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs pardon. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman's motion.

Mr. SMITH. Well, what has been done with that motion?

The SPEAKER. Nothing at all. It is still pending. A motion is also pending that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which is in order.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. The effect of the motion to recommit is to keep the bill before the House, and that is the object of the gentleman from Ohio in making it. I hope my colleague understands it.

Mr. DISNEY. Of course I made the motion to recommit with a view of keeping the bill before the House. There is no question about that.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SMITH. If the object of the gentleman is to keep the bill which he has moved to recommit before the House, why not let us go on and finish it now?

The SPEAKER. It is not for the Chair to determine the motives for the action of the House. The motion submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is strictly in order under the rules.

Mr. SMITH. We might just as well dispose of the bill now as postpone it till to-morrow morning. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky will not prevail.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I must call the gentleman from Virginia to order. I ask the Chair if the question before the House is debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

The question was then taken on Mr. BRECKINRIDGE's motion; and, on a division, there were—ayes 76, noes 90.

So the House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question recurred on the motion to recommit the Wisconsin railroad bill to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DISNEY. I withdraw the motion to recommit the bill, and demand the previous question on its passage.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. DISNEY. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I call for the enforcement of the last part of the 39th rule while the vote is being taken. I ask that it may be read and enforced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is called upon to enforce the last part of the 39th rule, which will be read.

The CLERK read the rule, as follows:

"No member or other person shall visit or remain by the Clerk's table while the yeas and nays are calling or ballots are counting."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will feel it to be his duty to enforce that rule.

The question was then taken on Mr. JONES's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 97, nays 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Thomas H. Bayly, Belcher, Bennett, Benton, Boccock, Boyce, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Caskey, Chandler, Chastain, Churchwell, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Cutting, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Drum, Eddy, Elliott, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hill, Howe, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kirtledge, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lyon, McCulloch, McNair, McQueen, Maurice, May, Mayall, Middlesworth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Packer, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Snodgrass, Gerrit Stuart, Tracy, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Israel Washburn, and Zollcoffer—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Banks, Barksdale, Benson, Bissell, Breckinridge, Campbell, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, De Witt, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmonds, English, Farley, Florence, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Henn, Hiester, Houston, Hughes, Hunt, Roland Jones, Knox, Lamb, Latham, Lindsey, Lindsley, McDougall, Macy, Matteson, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Peck, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Singleton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Yates—94.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

[Cries of "No! no!" and "Withdraw it!"]

Mr. TWEED. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. LETCHER. At the request of some of my friends, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FAULKNER. I rise to make a privileged motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My motion is privileged, I think.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not withdraw my motion.

Mr. CUTTING. The morning hour having expired, I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. Two privileged questions have already been submitted. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] moves that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] moves to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My motion takes precedence, and I do not withdraw it. The gentleman from Virginia has a right, undoubtedly, to have his motion entered, but not considered until my motion is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the motion to reconsider has been made and entered, has not any member a right to call it up at any time, even to the exclusion of a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The two rules, if the gentleman will refer to them, would seem to conflict one with the other. But the rule is so clear and positive that the House may at any time resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that when that motion is first made, the Chair thinks that it must take precedence even of a motion to lay a motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the Chair permit me to make a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. With a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There are two privileged motions pending—one that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the other to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Wisconsin railroad bill was laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides, if the gentleman will allow the Chair, that the motion to reconsider will be entertained, but that the question must first be put on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as that motion was first submitted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the view I take of the question.

The question was then taken on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and it was disagreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 75, noes 96.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER.]

Mr. BISSELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DISNEY. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The object of gentlemen, I presume, is to pass this matter over until to-morrow; and I would suggest, that instead of moving to adjourn, we go to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Is the motion to adjourn withdrawn?

Mr. BISSELL. No, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I demand tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 33.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 35, nays 138; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Bissell, Brooks, Campbell, Clark, Cobb, Cook, Disney, Eastman, Farley, Florence, Green, Harrison, Henn, Hiester, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Lindsley, Macy, Smith Miller, Thomas Ritchey, Sapp, Shannon, William R. Smith, Sollers, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Walbridge, Walker, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, and Yates—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Boccock, Boyce, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chastain, Churchwell, Clingman, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dent, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmonds, Elliott, Ellison, English, Everhart, Ewing, Faulkner, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hill, Houston, Howe, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kirtledge, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lyon, McCulloch, McNair, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, May, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Oids, Packer, Peck, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Andrew Stuart, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—138.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the proposition to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HIESTER. I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BOCOCK. Is that motion in order? Is there not another privileged motion pending?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. BOCOCK. Does not the question first arise on the privileged motion pending?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a privileged one of a higher character than that of the gentleman from Virginia, in the estimation of the Chair.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to say, once for all, to the House, that I have no disposition to worry it out by repeated motions, merely for the consumption of time. It is a reasonable request when I ask, so far as the Wisconsin railroad bill is concerned, that it be allowed to go over until to-morrow, to give time for members to reflect on it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is not in order.

Mr. BISSELL: I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Thursday next:

The question was taken, and the motion was disagreed to.

The question was taken on laying upon the table the motion to reconsider; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 93, nays 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Thomas H. Bayly, Belcher, Benton, Boccock, Bridges, Brooks, Bugg, Carpenter, Caskey, Chastain, Churchwell, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Cutting, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Drum, Eddy, Edgerton, Elliott, Etheridge, Ewing, Faulkner, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hill, Howe, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kurtz, Letcher, Lilly, Lyon, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maurice, May, Mayall, Middlesworth, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Packer, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Seymour, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Andrew Stuart, Tracy, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Israel Washburn, and Zollcoffer—93.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Appleton, Barksdale, Bennett, Benson, Bissell, Breckinridge, Campbell, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Ellison, English, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Florence, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Henn, Hiester, Houston, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Roland Jones, Knox, Latham, Lindsey, McDougall, Macy, Matteson, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Peck, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Reese, Riddle, Robbins, Sage, Shannon, Singleton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, Taylor, Thurston, Tweed, Upham, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, and Yates—85.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table; and the bill was finally lost.

Mr. SAGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COBB. I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot do so pending the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I presume, Mr. Speaker, that every gentleman wants the Nebraska bill taken up for consideration or reference.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending that the House adjourn, and discussion is not in order.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Whereupon, (at three o'clock and twenty-five minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 15, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of inhabitants of Lancaster, Massachusetts, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a remonstrance signed by 1,366 women, resident at Fall River, Massachusetts; a remonstrance from women of Westborough, Massachusetts; a remonstrance from citizens of Lawrence, Massachusetts; and a remonstrance from citizens of Indiana, against the passage of any act for the organization of the Territory of Nebraska without a provision for the prohibition of slavery therein; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FOOT presented a resolution adopted at the annual March meeting of freemen of Moretown, Vermont, against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of citizens of Greenpoint, New York, praying that the public lands may be granted, in limited quantities, to actual settlers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, the petition of John J. Harrison and others, remonstrating against the passage of the Nebraska bill in its present form; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BROWN presented a memorial of the Legislature of Mississippi, praying the establishment of a mail route by land from Jackson direct to the counties on the sea-coast; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented a petition of citizens of Green Bay, Wisconsin, praying that measures may be taken to secure religious liberty to American citizens residing or traveling in foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MASON presented the memorial of J. Balesier, praying remuneration for certain expenses incurred while special agent of the United States to southeastern Asia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CASS presented a memorial of citizens of New York, praying that measures may be taken to secure religious liberty to American citizens residing or traveling in foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, three petitions of citizens of Virginia, praying that measures may be taken to secure the rights of religious liberty to American citizens residing or traveling in foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred bills from the House of Representatives for the relief of James F. Green, of Pennsylvania, and for the relief of Lemuel Hudson, reported them back without amendment, and recommended their passage.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William Miller, praying a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of George S. Claffin, reported adversely thereon.

TERRITORIAL DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill to regulate the fees and compensation of the district attorneys in the courts of the United States for the Territories of Minnesota, New Mexico, and Utah, reported the same back without amendment, recommended its passage, and asked for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, accordingly proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to allow the district attorneys named the same fees and compensation as are now allowed by law to the same officers in Oregon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

COHASSET ROCKS LIGHT-HOUSE.

The joint resolution from the House of Representatives, "authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury and Light-House Board to determine upon the site, plan, and mode of constructing the light-house on Cohasset rocks, and for other purposes," was read a first and second time.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, that resolution has not been referred to the Committee on Commerce, but still they have investigated the subject; and I am directed by the committee to ask for the consideration of the resolution at this time. I will state, in a very few words, the reasons why it is necessary that it should be passed. By the law of 1852, an appropriation of $40,000 was made for the erection of a light-house on Minot's Ledge, on such plan as should be approved by the Topographical Bureau. By the act of 1853, an additional survey was directed to be made. The second survey has been made, and an inner and different rock has been recommended. This joint resolution now proposes to submit the whole question to the Light House Board whether the light-house shall be on the inner or the outer rock. It is to take away all restrictions, and leave the Light-House Board to determine on which it shall be erected, there being two conflicting reports.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate without amendment. It was ordered to a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

PORTS OF ENTRY.

Mr. STUART offered the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing ports of entry upon Lake Superior within the State of Michigan.

ARMY RETIRED LIST.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill to promote the efficiency of the Army by retiring disabled officers, was on its final passage a few days ago, but was not disposed of by the Senate for want of a quorum, and has been lying on the table ever since. I feel anxious to have it passed as soon as possible, and I hope the Senate will take it up now and dispose of it. The yeas and nays were ordered, and were being taken upon it, when it was discovered that there was no quorum; but I hope the call for the yeas and nays may be withdrawn, so as to allow the bill to be passed now. It was ordered to a third reading without objection, I believe, and would have been passed then immediately, but that I wished to have it engrossed before its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. NORRIS in the chair.) I understand that the yeas and nays have been ordered on the passage of that bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. I apprehend there is not a quorum present, and therefore I should like to have the call withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It cannot be withdrawn if there is not a quorum present.

Mr. SHIELDS. Not by unanimous consent? The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir.

Mr. PETTIT. I wish to record my vote against the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. If unanimous consent cannot authorize the passage of a law when a quorum is not present, it certainly cannot authorize the withdrawal of a call for the yeas and nays, particularly after they have been ordered.

Mr. SHIELDS. Very well, let the question be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, shall the bill "to promote the efficiency of the Army by retiring disabled officers" pass?

The question being taken by yeas and nays; resulted—yeas 25, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Evans, Everett, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Johnson, Mason, Pearce, Rusk, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Toucey, and Williams—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Hamlin, Norris, Pettit, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—10.

So the bill was passed.

VERMONT SENATORSHIP.

The Senate, at half-past twelve o'clock, proceeded to the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on the Judiciary respecting the right of the Hon. S. S. PHELPS to a seat in the Senate.

Mr. FOOT. Mr. President, at this stage of the debate, and especially after the able speech of the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PETTIT,] who opened this discussion, and after the very able and elaborate speech of my colleague in vindication of his right to a seat here, and in full response to all the points which have thus far been urged against his right, it will hardly be expected of me that I should attempt more than a sort of general summary or recapitulation of the argument, or some portions of it, upon the affirmative side of the proposition before us. Anticipating that this question would come before the Senate, I took occasion, in the early part of the session, to examine the subject with some degree of care. I looked through all the precedents, and read the debates upon the several cases, so far as they have been reported and published. The result of that examination was a confirmed conviction that my colleague was entitled to his seat; that my State was entitled to his services here as one of her Senators. I expressed that opinion to many of my associates of the Senate. Occupying the position I do; representing the State most directly interested in the result of this question, I deem it not out of place, although it may be unavailing, to express to the Senate the general views I entertain upon the question before us, and which have led to the conclusion at which my own judgment has arrived.

I need not say that the question raised in this case, aside from its general bearing and importance, is one of immediate and special interest to the State I represent. An adverse decision leaves the State without its full and equal suffrage in the Senate of the United States, at least during its present session, as a regular session of the Legislature of Vermont does not again convene until the second Thursday of October next. The question is one of construction, not an issue of fact. Its decision is entirely dependent upon the construction of a constitutional provision as applicable to the state of facts existing in the case presented—facts about which there can be no controversy, as they are all of public record and of public notoriety, of which the Senate will take notice, and act upon judicially without proof abundant.

The circumstances of the case, and out of which the question arises, are briefly these. The Hon. William Upham a Senator, from Vermont, died in the month of January, at the last session of Congress, and during the recess of the Legislature of that State, leaving vacant the residue of his constitutional term, which runs to the fourth day of March, A. D. 1855. Congress being then in session, the Governor of the State, in the exercise of his constitutional power and duty, immediately made a "temporary appointment" of a Senator to the seat which had been thus providentially vacated. That appointment was conferred upon the eminent citizen whose right to the seat is now in question; who was thereupon sworn and admitted to a seat upon this floor, which he occupied during the remainder of that session, and during the called Executive session of the present Senate which immediately followed. Since that time the regular annual session of the Vermont Legislature has been held, having convened agreeably to the requirement of the State constitution on the second Thursday of October last, and adjourned on the seventh day of the succeeding month of Deember, without having made an election of Senator to fill the vacancy which had happened by the decease of Mr. Upham.

These are the facts of the case, and they present this question directly to the Senate, and for the first time. What is the effect of the failure of the intervening session of the Legislature to fill that vacancy by an election of a Senator, upon the subsisting Executive appointment? My answer is embraced in this general proposition, which covers the whole ground, that an Executive appointee holds to the end of the constitutional term, unless superseded by a legislative election. The correctness of this proposition it is my purpose to endeavor to establish.

The constitutional provisions which relate to the Senate of the United States are contained in the third section of the first article of that instrument; and so much as is material to the point now under consideration, is in these words:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote."

This is the first clause of the section. The next clause, after providing for the classification of Senators, concludes in these words, and which have been repeatedly cited:

"If vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

It will be observed, that by the first clause of this section, the sole and exclusive authority to elect Senators, in the first instance, or, in other words, to make an original election, is conferred upon the Legislature. No authority is conferred upon the Executive, in any contingency, to make the original appointment of Senator. In the event, therefore, of the failure of a State Legislature to make an original election at the proper time, a vacancy must ensue, as there is no secondary or provisional authority vested in the Executive or other agent to make appointments of Senators to succeed the expiration of a constitutional term. There have been at the present session three instances of vacancies in this body in consequence of the failure of the State Legislatures to fill them at the appointed time, by original election. These were from Maine, North Carolina, and Mississippi, two of which, we rejoice to say, have recently been filled by legislative elections. There being no secondary authority lodged by the Constitution in the Executive or elsewhere to fill vacancies ensuing the expiration of a term, or even to make temporary appointments to them, it is conceded they must remain unoccupied until, by the exercise of the primary appointing power—the legislative power—elections shall be made to fill them.

But it is the latter clause of the section which more directly applies to the case in hand. The framers of the Constitution, foreseeing that vacancies in the Senate would be likely to happen from incidental causes, as by death, resignation, &c., which could not be provided against nor anticipated by the Legislature, conferred a provisional or secondary authority upon another party, to wit: the Executive, to act in the absence of the primary authority, the Legislature. So they provided, that—

"If vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature."

The manifest object and purpose of this provision is to enable the States, at all times, to keep their senatorial representation full, without incurring the inconvenience, the expense, and delay of convening the Legislature in special session to fill these incidental vacancies.

In the case we are now considering, the vacancy happened during the recess of the Legislature. The Executive, then, had authority to make a temporary appointment. It happened while Congress was in session; there was occasion then for the exercise of that authority. The appointment was made. It was a valid, it was a constitutional appointment. The person appointed was clothed with all the constitutional powers, rights, privileges, and immunities, as fully as though he had received his commission under the authority of a legislative election. Now, the question recurs, what is the constitutional limitation of that appointment? Or, in broader terms, if you please, what is the tenure of an Executive appointment? It will not be disputed, that if no legislative session intervene, it runs to the end of the constitutional term, as in a recent Georgia case. Mr. Charlton, whose recent death we have been pained to learn, was appointed by the Executive of that State to the vacancy which had happened by the resignation of Mr. Berrien; and no legislative session intervening, he held to the end of the term. The Executive appointment in such cases literally and technically fills the vacancy, or, in different phraseology, fills the broken term, as completely as a legislative election. But if a legislative session intervene—what then? Why, if they make an election, that supersedes and puts an end to the temporary appointment, we all concede. But if the Legislature adjourn without making an election—what then? What effect has it upon the temporary appointment? None whatever, I insist, and the temporary appointee continues to hold the office.

This whole question, I apprehend, turns upon the application of the words of limitation in the clause, "until the next meeting of the Legislature." I am aware that the general impression has been, upon the first glance, that these words applied to the appointments, that they limited the appointments, the tenure of the office, to the "next meeting of the Legislature;" and such is the form of many of the commissions which have been brought here under Executive appointments. And the discussions which have occasionally arisen upon this clause of the Constitution have turned, not so much upon the proper reference of the restrictive words, as upon the import of the word "meeting" in that connection, which I will define presently, according to my view of its true interpretation. But, I apprehend, that upon a more careful and critical examination, no one can fail to be satisfied that these words of limitation in the Constitution apply exclusively to the appointing power, and not to the tenure of the appointment. The Constitution, and not the Executive, controls the tenure of his appointments. "The Executive may make temporary appointments." When? Only when vacancies happen during the recess, most certainly. How often may he make "temporary appointments?" Just so often, clearly, as vacancies may happen during the recess. He may make not only a single appointment, but a succession of appointments, in case of successive vacancies happening during the recess. How long may he continue to make "temporary appointments," in case of vacancies happening in the recess? "Until the next meeting of the Legislature," and no longer, evidently, for you would otherwise bring the two separate and distinct appointing agencies into conflict. Why is the Executive authority limited to vacancies happening in the recess? Because, when they happen during the session, the primary and principal authority is then in a capacity or condition to act, and to fill the vacancy. For the same reason, the Executive has no authority to make appointments to vacancies happening during the recess even, unless he exercise it before the "next meeting of the Legislature." The secondary authority is restricted to the absence of the primary. It is restricted to the period of time between the adjournment of one legislative session and the meeting of the next. While the Legislature is in session, from its "meeting" or commencement to its close, it is in a condition to act; and being the primary authority; it necessarily suspends the secondary authority. Will anybody pretend that the Executive authority extends beyond the "next meeting of the Legislature?" I venture to say not. What, then, is the import of the word "meeting," in that connection? Most clearly it signifies the convening, the coming together, the very commencement or organization of the legislative session. To give it the interpretation which has been often claimed for it as synonymous with session, and comprehending the whole period of the legislative term as a unit, punctum temporis, a point of time, you carry the Executive authority along with it through the whole session; for that authority being limited to the "next meeting," if "meeting" means the session, and the whole session, then the Executive authority runs pari passu through the whole session—a position which, I presume, nobody is quite prepared to admit, much less to defend.

This interpretation is corroborated by the use of the word meeting in two other instances in the same article. In the third clause of the first section it is used in the following sentence:

"The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States."

And in the second clause of the fourth section of this article it is used in this connection:

"The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December," &c.

In both these connections it is most clear that the term meeting is used as signifying the assembling, the coming together of the Congress, and not as synonymous with session. It would, indeed, be absurd to say of the Congress, "it shall assemble every year, and such session shall be on the first Monday in December."

On the other hand, the word session is employed in three instances in the same article, and clearly as signifying the period of a term of Congress, each term being subdivided into two parts or sessions. In the fourth clause of the fifth section is this provision:

"Neither House, during the session of Congress, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days."

Again, in the first clause of the sixth section it is provided, that

"Senators and Representatives shall, in all cases, except, &c., be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses."

And again, in the third clause of the second section, it declares, that "The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies, &c., by granting commissions, which shall expire at the end of their next session."

In every instance wherein the terms meeting and session are employed in the Constitution, they are used in entirely distinct and different senses—the one as signifying the assembling or convening together of the legislative body, and the other as signifying and comprehending the duration of its term.

It appears to me to be very clear that the restrictive words in this clause of the Constitution have exclusive reference to, and limit the appointing power, and not the tenure of the appointment. If I am right in this view, then there is no limitation upon an Executive appointment, by any words, expressed or implied, that can be drawn from the Constitution, short of the expiration of the term, unless it be superseded by a legislative election. It is called a "temporary appointment," because of its indefinite and uncertain tenure, from its liability to be terminated by legislative action; and even when it runs to the end of the term, as when no Legislature intervenes, it is still called "temporary." The only limitation imposed upon it short of the expiration of the term is, that it is subject to be terminated by the intervening action of the primary power. It will be conceded that the "temporary appointment" continues to the end of the term, unless the primary power meanwhile comes into a condition or capacity to act. If while in that condition it does act by making an election, it is admitted, on all hands, that it puts an end to the "temporary appointment." But what if the Legislature fail to elect? How does it affect the subsisting "temporary appointment?" Why should it arrest that? The very act which puts an end to a "temporary appointment" is wanting. It requires the positive act of an election to put an end to it; and if there be no election, does that want of action produce the same effect upon the "temporary appointment" as an actual election, by putting an end to it? Does a failure to elect effect the same result in that regard as an actual election? I confess it strikes me very differently. I would rather say that the practical inability of the Legislature, from disagreement or other cause, to make an election while in session, was just as ineffectual to terminate a "temporary appointment" as the practical incapacity of the Legislature to make an election while not in session.

If it be claimed that when the Legislature, with whom is lodged the primary and original power, shall fail to exercise it by electing a Senator, when the duty devolves upon them, the Executive cannot afterwards come in and supply the omission, I agree to that position fully, and for the reason that the Constitution confers no authority upon him to act in such cases. I agree that if vacancies happen during the sitting of the Legislature, and they fail to "fill such vacancies," the Executive has no authority to make appointments to them. And I agree, further, that if vacancies happen during the recess of the Legislature, and the Executive omits to make appointments to them until the "next meeting of the Legislature," he cannot, thereafter, make appointments to "such vacancies," even though the Legislature should fail to fill them; and the reason is clearly that his authority ceases with the convening of the Legislature. The secondary authority then yields to the primary, and cannot be resumed, even though the antecedent vacancy remain unfilled by the action of the Legislature. When the Legislature have had the opportunity to perform the duty enjoined upon them by the Constitution of electing a Senator, either originally or to fill an existing vacancy, and yet fail to perform that duty, there is no authority conferred upon the Executive to meet the contingency by supplying the omission. And that is the full extent of the decisions in the case of Mr. Johns, of Delaware, in 1794, and in the case of Mr. Lanman, of Connecticut, in 1825, both of whose appointments were overruled by the Senate. And since those decisions, I am not aware that any Executive has attempted to assume the exercise of the authority in such instances. So in this case, if no Executive appointment had been made before the meeting of the Legislature, and the Legislature having failed to fill the vacancy when it had the opportunity, the vacancy must have continued until filled by the subsequent action of the Legislature, or until it expired by its own limitation. But non constat that an Executive appointment, previously and constitutionally made, and still subsisting, shall cease, or be in any manner affected by such failure of action or omission of duty on the part of the Legislature. The Legislature, when in a condition to act, we admit, has the exclusive jurisdiction of the election, and consequently suspends the provisional power; but its operation upon an appointment previously and duly made, I respectfully submit, depends upon the exertion and not upon the mere existence of the superior power. Indeed, strictly speaking, the legislative power is a continually existing power, though its condition for exertion is only occasional. When that power is not exerted, though in a capacity for exertion, it is as inoperative upon the act of the Executive as its passiveness when not in a capacity for exertion.

Let us take another view. Suppose the concluding words of the clause "shall then fill such vacancies" which, for the purposes of this argument, we will regard as mandatory upon the Legislature, had been omitted. That would have left the exclusive power with the Legislature, where it now is; to fill vacancies happening during its sessions; and with the Executive to fill vacancies happening during the recess; and his appointments in that case would unquestionably run to the end of the constitutional term, without regard to an intervening Legislature. How are his appointments any more or otherwise affected, when the mandate is in force, but not obeyed? Or, suppose the direction to the Legislature to "fill such vacancies" had left it discretionary with them to "fill the vacancies" or not, as they should think best; and in the exercise of that discretion, they should deem it best not to fill the vacancy in a particular case? Would that discretionary omission to act arrest a subsisting "temporary appointment?" Or would it still continue? Undoubtedly it would continue. How then, tell me, does the neglect or refusal of the Legislature to execute a mandatory order, any more than would their omission to execute a discretionary order, affect the "temporary appointment?" In either case, the very act is wanting which is necessary to arrest and supersede that appointment.

Again: It has been insisted in argument that the "temporary appointment" ceases with the authority which conferred it. According to this theory, the appointment must cease at the very opening, the commencement of the next legislative session; for, beyond all dispute or cavil, that is the limit of the Executive authority. But this construction is opposed to the uniform usage of the Senate for more than forty years. From the time of the case of Mr. Smith, of Maryland, in 1809, to the case of Mr. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, in 1851, and even to the case of Mr. Cathart, of Indiana, at the last session of Congress, Senators holding under Executive appointments have been allowed, not merely without question of their right, but by the deliberate and expressed judgment of the Senate, to retain their seats here for weeks and for months after the commencement of the next Legislature, and consequently for weeks and for months after the specific authority which conferred the appointments had ceased. It is enough to say that this theory is inconsistent with the long and settled usage of the Senate. Besides, if it be insisted, as it not unfrequently has been, that the words of limitation apply both to the power and to the appointment, you are then met with this difficulty. The same identical words which apply to the one apply also to the other; and it is clear, beyond all doubt or controversy, that the power ceases at the moment of the meeting of the Legislature; but, by a practical construction too long settled and acquiesced in, established by precedents too often repeated, and too numerous now to treat it as an open question, the appointment runs beyond that period of time, and, consequently, beyond the limit of the appointing power. The same words, in the same connection, cannot be applied in a restricted sense to the power, and in a latitudinous sense to the appointment. The theory furnishes but another exemplification of the argumentum ad absurdum.

If the fact of the superior authority, the Legislature, coming into a condition to act and to discharge its constitutional functions and duties, ipso facto, suspends or annuls the provisional appointment, as the minority of your committee seem to think, then it must do so at the instant of its organization, for at that moment it has assumed its full capacity to act. By what rule of logic, of reason, or analogy, then, may the provisional appointment hold until the superior authority is itself suspended by adjournment of the Legislature, and no longer? This theory must fail, or your precedents are all wrong. To maintain the one is to overrule the other. I invite to the task the logical powers of any man, of any Senator, to reconcile the settled practice of the Senate with the theory that the tenure of the provisional appointment is limited to, and terminated by, the "next meeting of the Legislature."

Again, Mr. President, if the word "meeting," as used in this connection, signifies the opening or beginning of the session, as it manifestly does, then whenever you have allowed Senators under "temporary appointments" to hold their seats here after the "next meeting of the Legislature," and until they were actually superseded by an election by that Legislature, as you have uniformly done these forty years, you have so far forth given a practical recognition of the construction I contend for, that "temporary appointments" continue until superseded by an actual election; and thus, virtually, if there be no election, that they continue to the end of the constitutional term. One of these events must occur to terminate them. I say, then, that the expiration of the term, or the interposition of a legislative election, is the only limitation upon an Executive appointment constitutionally made; and you have not the authority of an adjudged case upon your Journals adverse to this proposition. These "temporary appointments," by their terms, and from their nature, are not, and cannot be, and were never intended to be, subject to the law of a fixed limitation. They are analogous to the ordinary cases of pro tempore appointments which hold until superseded by the possession of the principal, or terminated by the expiration of the term of the office. The very object of a "temporary" or pro tempore appointment is to hold the place of a principal, and to hold during the absence or the want of a principal; and while holding it, is invested with the attributes of a principal, and therein differing from a mere locum tenens.

It is said by the dissenting members of your committee, that a "Senator, under an Executive appointment, may or may not represent the political views of his State; that he may be the mere personal favorite of the Governor." However this may be, it furnishes no argument against our construction, inasmuch as that construction does not at all interfere with the right and authority of the Legislature to supersede or to reaffirm that appointment. If they do not supersede it, the fair inference is, so far as any may be drawn, that the Executive appointee represents the political sentiment of the Legislature and of the State; and at any rate that they are unable to elect another more acceptable to them.

Looking, then, at the language of this provision of the Constitution, and having regard to its obvious purpose in connection with the rights and interests of the States, I have at least satisfied my own judgment that this is the most reasonable, the most just, and the most natural construction that can be put upon it. I will add, moreover, that this provisional clause, pertaining as it does to the right of representation in the States, its object being to secure to them a full representation in the Senate of the United States against incidental contingencies, like remedial statutes, should be construed liberally; so construed, as far as its language will admit, as most effectually to accomplish the beneficial end in view. If its language were of doubtful import, it should be construed most favorably to the States.

A full and equal representation in this body, at all times, is one of the most important rights, as well as one of the highest privileges, guaranteed to the States by the Constitution. So careful were its framers to guard this right against infringement, that, in the fifth article, defining the mode of making amendments to the Constitution, they add this proviso: "That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate."

I trust that in no case, and in no manner, will this right and privilege be abridged by artificial or forced construction. We are not asking you to "create a Senator" for us; but we ask you to allow us to be represented by a Senator created by the proper authority under your Constitution, whose appointment has not been superseded, and whose term of service has not run out by the limitation of the office.

The decision of this question affects not the present case alone, but all other cases of a similar kind which may hereafter arise; and they are likely to occur with more frequency with the increasing number of States, and the consequent increasing number of Senators, and, perhaps, I may add, with the increasing number of political organizations. This is not a question for Vermont alone, but for every State in the Union. The present is a most favorable time for the impartial judgment of the Senate upon it. The duplicate preponderance of political strength upon the opposite side of the Chamber, and a corresponding feebleness of numbers upon this side, repel all apprehension, which might perhaps be entertained in a more equal division of parties, that political prejudices or predilections can enter, in the smallest degree, into its consideration and decision.

Mr. President, I have felt it due to the relations in which I stand, and especially due to the State in whose behalf I am authorized to speak and to act here, to express the views I entertain upon the question before the Senate. The case having been brought before us, it calls for the action of the Senate. I claim, in behalf of my State, that my colleague is entitled to retain his seat upon this floor as a Senator from Vermont. He was duly appointed. The vacated term to which he was appointed has not expired. His appointment has not been superseded by a legislative election. It was not terminated by the "meeting" of the Legislature, you have long and oft decided. It was not terminated by the adjournment of the Legislature, by any words or by any theory, you can torture from the Constitution. It has not, in short, been touched by the action, much less by the non-action of the Legislature.

I have said all I intended to say, or deem it necessary to say for the present, on this question. The views I have ventured to express are the convictions of my own judgment. I have expressed them with some degree, I hope not an unbecoming degree, of confidence, yet with the most respectful deference to the dissenting opinion of the learned Senators of the minority of your committee, and of those concurring with them. I have expressed them with the more confidence, however, since I find, that upon the main point in discussion they accord with the views of the majority of your Committee on the Judiciary, and of other learned Senators, whose opinions upon questions of Constitutional construction are entitled to the highest consideration. Without pursuing the argument further, I submit the question to the consideration and judgment of the Senate.

Mr. MASON. It is known to many Senators that it is necessary to have an Executive session to-day. I therefore move that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until to-morrow, for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 15, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order for the consideration of the House is the report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I believe that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands is willing to give way, in order that the House may, if it desire to do so, take up the deficiency appropriation bill and act upon it. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

So the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session, it had under consideration the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSSELL,] to strike out the first section of the bill; and on that question the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] had the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I believe that under the rules of the House—I having introduced the bill—I am entitled to an hour, although I now have the floor, to close debate on it. But as I do not desire to occupy too much of the time of the committee, I will not now avail myself of my right to the floor, and will not, therefore, at present, address the committee. By the resolution which has been adopted, the debate on this bill is to close in two hours after it is entered on, and some other gentleman may desire to occupy the attention of the committee on this bill, or upon any other topic, during that time. Afterwards I will make some remarks on the bill itself, and I hope the committee will take action upon it.

Mr. BRIDGES discussed the merits of the Nebraska bill, and noticed some of the objections which have been urged against it. He cited various instances in the legislation of Congress since 1820 to prove that the North was justly chargeable with a direct and palpable violation of the Missouri compromise, while the South had adhered to it with an undeviating and steady purpose. The Abolitionists, he declared, had steadily repudiated the principles they first helped to establish, and for which they now clamored because it suits their selfish purposes. Inconsistency so gross could not be found in the history of legislation. Honorable or dishonorable, they were determined to force upon Congress their disorganizing efforts, and, if necessary, to dissolve the Union of these States.

Mr. B. then examined the effect which the compromise of 1850 has had upon the Missouri compromise of 1820, and contended that the former positively repealed the latter, and was a perfect abandonment of the arbitrary distinction established by the act of 1820, and a resort to the great principle of popular sovereignty upon which our Government is based—to wit: the right of the people to govern themselves.

He then replied to the objection urged against the bill—that if passed it would do gross injustice to the Indians inhabiting the contemplated Territories, and declared that the bill made the most ample provision for their protection.

He then admitted the right of Congress to decide by law whether slavery shall or shall not exist in a Territory; but was of the opinion that such a law could be of very little practical force, inasmuch as the people, when the Territory should be admitted as a State, would have, under their sovereign capacity, the right to pass entirely different laws, which might supersede the act of Congress on the subject, and be binding upon them. [See Appendix for his speech.]

Mr. BROOKS, in rising to speak on the subject of the Nebraska bill, said it asserted a great constitutional principle, and the inherent right of the people to determine all questions affecting their internal relations. He rejoiced that the West were united with the South in this glorious enterprise; he rejoiced that the stars of the Constitution and of empire bring their rays together; he rejoiced in the coincidence of opinion and common interest which brings the treasures of the West into the lap of the South. Had the Wilmot proviso been inserted in this bill, they would not now hear objections to the measure from certain quarters, and from those who love negroes more than they do white men; and charges of violation of plighted faith.

He then invited attention to the assumption that the original policy of the country was to restrict the extension of slavery, which he denied; and, in continuation of his argument, asserted that the Missouri compromise was not sacred and binding, having been violated by the North one year after its passage, and has been continued to be violated since. The South had lost, and not gained, as it had been asserted, by this division line. He further advocated the bill, speaking, as he proceeded, in favor of the institution of slavery. [See Appendix for his speech.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time appointed for the termination of the debate on this bill has now arrived.

Several MEMBERS rose to address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to assign the floor to any gentleman. The member from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has a right, in conclusion, to speak to the bill.

Mr. PRESTON. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, at which point of the bill we now are?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has been discussing the whole bill.

Mr. PRESTON. Have we come to the point of reading it by sections?

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet. The gentleman from Kentucky has now a right to speak to the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, in the very few observations which I propose to address to the committee, I intend to confine myself exclusively to the bill now under consideration.

When the deficiency bill was up before, it was very thoroughly discussed. That fact will obviate the necessity of a protracted discussion of it now; and my object is chiefly to explain the action of the Committee of Ways and Means under, as they consider, the instruction of this House.

The committee have reported two bills, and I will try to explain, presently, that they reported those bills under the instruction of the House, as indicated by its vote. The first bill contains matter which the committee regarded as clear deficiencies, and which they supposed the House regarded as deficiencies, by their action upon the bill when it was under consideration before.

The other bill contains simply appropriations for such custom-houses and marine hospitals as were added to the bill in the Committee of the Whole House, and in the House, not upon the report of any standing committee of this House, but upon the motion of individual members, representing the different sections of the country interested in those appropriations.

The total amount of appropriation in the bill now before this committee is $2,497,000 32. This aggregate is composed wholly of items reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, and of items added to the bill when up before, upon the recommendation of the standing committees of the House. The other bill which we have reported independently, for the action of the House, in relation to the custom-houses and marine hospitals, embraces appropriations of between four and five hundred thousand dollars.

The bill which is now reported is the bill matured by the House when under its consideration before, and afterward defeated—less the appropriation for the custom-houses and marine hospitals.

Before I say anything in regard to the bill for those appropriations, I have a few observations to make in regard to the items in the bill now under consideration. The whole of them are unexceptionable, and perhaps no serious objection can be made to any of them, except the item for the purchase of an assay office in the city of New York. There is an appropriation in this bill of $530,000 to purchase—if the House shall ratify the action of the Secretary of the Treasury—certain property for an assay office in that city. That matter was discussed at considerable length when the bill was formerly before the committee. But my honorable friend from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] in some remarks which he addressed to this House yesterday, or the day before, objected to this feature of the bill. I am sure my friend has not considered it with his usual care, or he would not have objected to it upon the ground which he urged. I understood him to say, that the renting which has been made was for too long a period; that the price given in the lease is too high; and in the third place, that there is no occasion for an assay office in the city of New York, and that we did not want any lot for such an office.

The latter objection would more probably have been made when the act of the last session of Congress was passed, providing for the establishment of that office, and appropriating $100,000 to assist in carrying out that law. I will call the attention of the committee to the act of the last Congress, under which the Secretary of the Treasury took the measures he has for the establishment of this assay office. By the act of the 3d of March, 1853, and the tenth section of that act, it is provided, that "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to establish, in the city of New York, an office for the receipt, and the melting, refining, parting, and assaying of gold and silver bullion and foreign coin, and for casting the same into bars, ingots, and disks."

The bill goes on at great length in detail to provide that the Assistant Treasurer of the United States shall be superintendent of the assay office, and also for the manner in which coin shall be received, receipted for, refined, melted, and assayed. This portion of the bill covers four or five sections. The fifteenth section provides that the Secretary of the Treasury "shall be authorized to procure—that is the word—by rent, by lease, or otherwise, a building or apartments in the city of New York, suitable for the operations of said office, unless he shall be of the opinion that suitable apartments in the custom-house in that city can be assigned for that purpose." The Secretary is also directed and authorized to procure the necessary implements and machinery for carrying on the operations and business of said office.

By another section of the same act $100,000 are appropriated to assist in carrying out the provisions of the law. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the last Congress intended to establish in that great commercial emporium an office for assaying the coin which comes from San Francisco and elsewhere, and intended obviously to establish it permanently; and for that purpose it authorizes the Secretary to procure, by rent or otherwise, suitable buildings for that purpose, all the necessary implements and machinery, and $100,000 were appropriated to begin with. Everybody knows that there is no building in the city of New York proper for the purposes of assaying. An assay building had to be erected, and accordingly the Secretary has proceeded to erect an assay building some fifty by seventy feet. It is permanent upon the soil. He had authority, in my judgment, to purchase ground and to erect a building for an assay office. What did he do? Instead of making a purchase, he made a contract of lease with certain parties, for ground and buildings, with a condition in the contract by which he saved the right to the Congress of the United States, if they chose to exercise it, of purchasing the property at a certain sum. Let us look at the conditions of the contract. The lease is for fifteen years, and my friend from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] objects to it upon that ground. The first observation I have to make in reply to the gentleman, is this: that the Secretary of the Treasury could not have obtained a fair lease upon a short term; and secondly, if he could have obtained a lease upon a short term, it would not have been just to the interests of the United States to have made a short lease, when he had to expend nearly $100,000 to put up the adequate assay buildings with which to commence operations. It was said by my friend from Virginia that the price was exorbitantly high. We have no evidence of that fact. On the contrary, your committee are satisfied that the contract was a reasonable one. The gentleman gave it as his opinion that the price was exorbitant, but he supported that opinion by no facts.

Mr. BAYLY. I dislike very much to interrupt my friend from Kentucky; but I hope that he will not object to my doing so. I did not make the point that the Secretary had no right to make a lease, or even a purchase; but the point that, in this respect, a sound discretion had not been exercised.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I thank my friend for the correction.

Mr. BAYLY. Will the gentleman allow me to finish my sentence? I contend that a sound discretion had not been exercised in regard to this matter, because there could have been procured as good a lot in other parts of the city for a tithe of the money paid under the lease; and that it never was in the contemplation of Congress, when they appropriated $100,000 for that purpose, that $500,000 should be given for the site alone.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The Secretary has not given $500,000. It is for Congress to determine in regard to the matter.

Mr. BAYLY. The Secretary has made a lease to that effect.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No, sir; but he has in the lease reserved to Congress the right to purchase the property for $530,000; and the exercise or not of this right is one of the matters under consideration. In regard to reasonable discretion, I tried to show by the law that it was in the contemplation of Congress to establish a permanent assay office in the city of New York. Then, I say, the necessary buildings for assaying had to be erected; and the Secretary caused such buildings to be erected, at a cost of nearly $100,000. Now, if he had rented the ground for a short period, I need not say that at the termination of the lease the buildings would go over to the lessors; and therefore it is evident that it was the policy of the United States—that it was a matter of economy—for him to lease the property for a long period.

But my friend from Virginia says that a much better site could have been obtained for a less sum of money. Well, sir, that is also a matter upon which he has adduced no evidence. And even if a naked lot, in a distant part of the city, could have been rented for a less sum, does not the gentleman know that it would have been necessary to erect buildings on it at a heavy cost, the whole of which would pass to the owners of the property at the end of the lease? I will state the reasons which the committee suppose controlled the Secretary in the selection of this site. It is well known that the custom-house in New York is situated in Wall street, a place so abhorred by my friend from Virginia; but there it is in Wall street, and I think he will agree with me that it is a very necessary and valuable building.

It was important that the buildings for the assay office and custom-house shall be contiguous, and the Secretary selected this site because it was the only suitable ground in the vicinity, the lease or purchase of which could be made; and besides, there were already on the lot most of the buildings required. I believe my friend from Virginia is now aware of the fact that the custom-house in New York is full to overflowing; that there is not room enough for the necessary business to be transacted; that the assay buildings had to be altered, and a large number of clerks and other officials removed to them from the custom-house, and that still the accommodations of the latter building are insufficient for the wants of the establishment. I say, therefore, that Congress will be but performing its duty under the circumstances, if it sanctions this act of the Secretary of the Treasury, and makes the buildings and grounds leased by him for the assay office the property of the country. Unless this course is taken, we shall ultimately be compelled to abandon the present custom-house, for there is no other ground which can be obtained on which to enlarge the building.

But I do not deem it necessary to continue the discussion of this branch of the subject at greater length. There is an existing contract of lease of fifteen years, binding this Government to the payment of a certain sum. But there is a provision, as I have remarked, which authorizes Congress to purchase the property; and the question now is, whether under the circumstance it is proper and economical to do it? Why, sir, the rent of that property for fifteen years, at $53,000 per annum, the price agreed on, will amount to $795,000. To that add the $100,000 for improvements which have necessarily been put upon it in order to have the assay office go into operation, and you have the total amount of $895,000 which you will have paid at the termination of the lease, while all the improvements, as I have already remarked, must go over to the lessor. On the contrary, if you adopt the proposition of the Committee of Ways and Means, and expend $530,000 now in the purchase of this property, which, as it adjoins the custom-house grounds, will be necessary for the accommodation of that establishment, the money which has already been expended will not ultimately be lost, but the Government becomes immediately the owner of the whole property.

With this simple statement of the matter, it seems to me that whatever opinion any gentleman may entertain as to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury in making this lease, sound policy, as a matter of economy, requires that the House should adopt the suggestion of the Committee of Ways and Means, and ratify the conditional purchase.

But it may be asked why the Committee of Ways and Means placed this item in the bill when the House rejected the other deficiency bill, with this provision among others in it? Our answer is this: It is the duty of a committee of the character of the Committee of Ways and Means, when they report original bills to the House, to exercise their best judgment as to the provisions they recommend; but when the House has indicated its own desires, its own preferences, it is the duty of that committee to carry out those desires and preferences, as far as they can ascertain them. Now, sir, this appropriation was adopted by the House upon a vote by yeas and nays, by a more decisive majority than any other contested item in the bill which was defeated; and if gentlemen will refer to the Journal they will discover that fact.

But it may be asked, why, upon the same ground, did you not also report back in this bill the appropriations for custom-houses and marine hospitals? The answer is this: there was some difficulty in understanding exactly what the House wanted, and why that deficiency bill was defeated. Much was added to it after it was brought in here by the Committee of Ways and Means. This item for the assay office at New York was added to it, and also these items of appropriation for custom-houses and marine hospitals, although by a vote not so decisive.

Now, sir, something defeated that bill. It is not to be presumed—I will not presume that irregular and improper coalitions, or any stampede in the House, produced its defeat, but something defeated it. It was not the appropriation for the assay office, because that was carried in the House by a larger vote than was given for the other contested items. It could not have been the ordinary appropriations for deficiencies, contained in the bill, for they were perfectly unexceptionable, and, as a general rule, no opposition was made to them. What remained? Every gentleman here recollects that the great struggle, both in the committee and in the House, was upon appropriations for custom-houses. They were not reported by any standing committee. True, they were estimated for by the Treasury Department, but they were introduced into the bill upon the motion of individual members on their own responsibility. Gentlemen will bear me out in making this statement. I may be allowed to say that I make the statement as a friend to these appropriations. I voted for them all in committee, and in the House, and I will do it again when they come up after this bill has been disposed of.

What then have the Committee of Ways and Means done in reporting this bill? We have acted according to the sense of the House, as far as we could gather it. We have reported a deficiency bill, which we respectfully ask the House to stand by and pass. We have also reported, for the action of the House, another bill, containing the items for custom-houses and marine hospitals, which were passed in committee, and rejected by the defeat of the bill. It may be that an attempt will be made, and I presume it is proper for me to say, from what I have heard, that an attempt will be made, to add the appropriations for custom-houses and marine hospitals to this bill, by way of amendment. I hope the attempt will not be made. I say this to the friends of those appropriations, because, as is very well known, I have been all the time the friend of these appropriations. I believe that if those amendments are offered they will fail, or, if adopted, they will imperil the success of the bill. I believe, at the same time, that they have strength enough in the House to bear them through, if they come up as independent propositions. It may be that some gentlemen may consider themselves bound by a sense of public duty, and I question no man's motives, to plant themselves on three or four items, and if those are adopted, sustain the bill; if they fail, war upon the bill. Of course I cannot object to gentlemen pursuing that course if they deem it their duty to do so; but it strikes me that it is an improper mode of legislating, and one which I hope the House will not sanction or adopt. I hope that it is not the case that we cannot get through any bill, even for the ordinary and necessary appropriations to carry on the Government, without arrangements which require members either to vote against the bill, or to vote for numberless items which they object to. There are gentlemen here who are in favor of the custom-houses, and perhaps opposed to some other items of the bill; and there are others who are opposed to the custom-houses, and in favor of other items. If we mature the bill exactly in the form we did before, what reason have we to believe that the House will not kill it exactly as it killed the former bill, by a union of the opponents of the custom-houses with the opponents of other items.

The point that I feel most solicitous about just here is to satisfy this committee that the Committee of Ways and Means have not acted capriciously, or even, I may add, according to their own notions of what ought to be done in the premises. They have acted under the directions and instructions of the House, as far as they could ascertain its wishes and preferences from the action on the former bill.

That there is an urgent necessity for the passage of a bill, Mr. Chairman, nobody will deny. I would respectfully call the attention of the committee to the fact, that since the last deficiency appropriation bill was defeated we have done nothing. We have not made one step in the progress of practical legislation, except to pass the home-stead bill. In the mean time the urgent necessity for the passage of some deficiency appropriation bill is growing every day. Why, sir, no gentleman will dispute that the bill is full of items which ought to be passed. There are your debts due and unpaid. There are the deficiencies in the Post Office Department. There are the deficiencies in the payment of the humble employees of the Government. There are many items. They ought to be paid. The Government is able to pay them; and surely the House of Representatives is able to mature and to pass a bill by which these existing and pressing debts can be paid. It is not anything which appeals to political feeling in this committee.

I know the opinion has been expressed—I have heard it expressed upon this floor—that a majority in Congress is responsible for the carrying on of the Government, and that all the minority has to do is to stand by and look on, or, if you choose, to embarrass the majority. That is no doctrine for this Government. We are all interested in the necessary and proper expenditures of the Government. I do not believe it is the sentiment upon this floor; but if there should be a gentleman who entertains it—if it should prevail to any extent, and I mention this only on that hypothesis—then, I say, an additional responsibility devolves upon those who are in the majority to pass a bill demanded by the exigencies of the public service, and to unite for the purpose of doing it. But I make no appeal of a party or political character, because I believe that the bill is not of that character. I have not, in the last suggestion which I have made, intended to say anything disrespectful to any portion of the committee, or the friends of any of the various provisions in these two bills. I respectfully say to the committee, then, that your Committee of Ways and Means have, according to the basis which they could deduce as to your wishes in the premises, reported two bills. One is before you now, called the deficiency bill. Immediately after, and reported from the same committee for your action, is the bill for the appropriations to custom-houses and marine hospitals. We ask the committee to take the two bills as they come, to defeat them if they are wrong, and to pass them if they are right, but not to imperil the success of both by welding them together, when they may meet the same fate as they did before.

I appeal respectfully to the committee, sir, to take this bill, to strip it of anything objectionable it contains, if they see proper, and to add to it, if they choose, anything which they desire; but after they have matured it to their own satisfaction, and taken it to the House, then to pass it, and not wreck it again when the great mass of its provisions are demanded by the pressing exigencies of the public service. [To Mr. FLORENCE.] You wished to ask me a question.

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. Chairman, when the former deficiency bill, containing the appropriation for the purchase of an assay office in the city of New York was under consideration, the committee may recollect that I raised a point of order, which was overruled by the Chair, that it was not, in the general acceptance of the word, a deficiency.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has very eloquently urged the committee to sustain this bill because of the urgent necessity for the immediate passage of some such proposition for the defrayment of the deficiencies in appropriations for the current year. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman most respectfully, whether the urgent necessity existed for putting upon the deficiency bill a burden like the one requiring an appropriation to be voted of $530,000 for the purchase of an assay office in New York, for the reason, as the gentleman admitted himself, that there has been a lease entered into for fifteen years, at a cost of $53,000 per annum; and that two years of the period for which the lease was made were reserved as the time within which the property could be purchased. I do not know exactly at what period the lease was entered into, but it was a few months ago.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It was last August.

Mr. FLORENCE. Yes, sir, last August; two years from the date of that lease was given for the consummation of the contract. Now, if there is an urgent necessity for the passage of a deficiency bill, and I admit that there is—indeed I have sustained this position by my votes; I sustained almost every appropriation by my vote when there was a division of the House by yeas and nays, perhaps every one, except that for the assay office in New York, when the last deficiency bill was under consideration. I say, if there is this urgent necessity for the passage of the bill, I submit to the gentleman from Kentucky whether it would not be better that this appropriation should come in in the regular appropriation bill, because I cannot see any urgent necessity for its special consideration at this time. Indeed it seems to me that this appropriation is the millstone around the neck of the bill which sunk it so deep before, and will now prevent its passage in the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, (interrupting.) I yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania because he said he rose merely to ask a question; but he is now making an argument.

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not desire, Mr. Chairman, to make an argument. My remarks seem to me to be appropriate in this connection, for the reasons which I have briefly stated; and perhaps I may have ventured on making an argument, with a view to elaborate the question, so as to obtain a good reason for the appropriation in the answer I may receive. I desire, however, to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether there is any necessity for urging this appropriation of $530,000 at this time, and whether he will make a statement which will satisfy me on that point? And now, having asked this question, I will, with his consent, occupy the floor a moment longer, to make a few remarks which I consider pertinent to the subject before the committee.

Sir, at the time when this appropriation was previously under consideration as part of the deficiency bill, the gentleman from Tennessee over the way [Mr. JONES] made a very strong argument why this purchase should be made. I, in the ardent—I might say, without egotism, the honest—impulse of my nature, concluded, at that moment, that his argument was satisfactory. I am generally satisfied with the position which that gentleman assumes upon most questions involving the expenditure of the public moneys. I do not mean to flatter him on this floor; but I have always felt satisfied that anything which meets his approval is most generally right. And I hastily concluded, at that time, without much thought upon the subject, that perhaps, under all the circumstances, it might be better this appropriation should be passed. Commercially I still think so, regarding it merely as a business transaction; but I do not now, upon reflection and examination of the subject, indeed, I cannot bring my mind to the conclusion that there was any necessity for entering into the contract at all. I consider it, in all its bearings, as an entirely unnecessary and extravagant expenditure.

[A message in writing was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of his Private Secretary, Mr. SIDNEY WEBSTER.]

Mr. FLORENCE, (resuming.) I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that, at the period I referred to, I thought it was, perhaps, better the appropriation should pass, but that I had now changed my opinion; and I was going further to say that there was, in my judgment, no more propriety in the establishment of an office in New York merely for assaying and refining gold than there is for the establishment of a pork-packing office in Cincinnati, or for a cotton-packing office in Charleston, by authority of and under the patronage of the General Government. That is the reason why I withdraw the remarks which I made on that morning, and in doing so, to say that I intend to oppose this appropriation from a sense of duty. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for his kindness and courtesy in permitting me to occupy so much of his time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If, Mr. Chairman, I can, out of the speech made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, pick his question, it is this: He asks me what necessity there is for introducing this item in the bill, and whether it is a deficiency?

It is true, sir, that this appropriation might be made in the general appropriation bill. It is also true, that if the House chooses to ratify the course which has been taken, it is then a deficiency, and proper in the bill. Instead of asking me why the committee has thought proper to burden the present bill—to use his own language—with this matter, let the gentleman ask the House itself, which, by a decided majority—more decided than upon any other appropriation—put it into the former bill. I consider that the Committee of Ways and Means acted under instructions in reporting it. I will not go into the original arguments as to the propriety of establishing an assay office in the city of New York. It may be added here that by the terms of the contract—if Congress elects to take the property—the purchase money is to bear six per cent. interest from the date of the contract, while it is to be credited by the rent paid in the mean time; and why should the Government continue to pay six per cent. interest, while it is redeeming its five per cent. stocks at a high premium?

I believe there is—I know there is—a sense of justice in this House which will bear this deficiency bill through. If dissatisfied with it in its present form, the House will mould it into a shape satisfactory to itself, and then pass it. If it should not, what are we to do? What step shall we take next? Are we to allow this matter to go on until the general appropriation bill comes up, and then have the same struggle over that?—virtually, the clearest obligations to be repudiated? Are the employees of the Government to be starved when the money is at hand to pay them? What is to be the next movement, if the bill, being matured, the House shall see proper to reject it? I do not believe the House will do it. The committee have done their best to carry out your wishes, as indicated in the very complex action of the House, and the result is these two bills. Whatever course the House may take, the committee reporting them has discharged its duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for closing debate upon this bill, under the order of the House, has arrived. There is a motion pending, made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH], to strike out the first section.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If there be no objection, I will withdraw the motion.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read the first section of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. May I inquire whether the whole bill is to be read before amendments are offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, would say that it is the custom to read the bill by sections, pausing at the end of each for amendments to be offered; if none are presented, then to proceed with the reading of the next, and so on to the end of the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to offer an amendment at the close of the bill.

The Clerk then proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. TRACY. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "for the collection of agricultural statistics and purchasing seeds, to be paid out of the patent fund, $10,000," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

For the collection of agricultural statistics and the procurement and distribution of seeds and cuttings, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Patents, $10,000.

I have but a word to say in explanation of this amendment. The item in the bill, as it now stands, makes an appropriation out of the patent fund for the purchase of these seeds. I am informed by the Commissioner of Patents that the patent fund is exhausted, and that the appropriation, if made with the condition that it is to be paid out of that fund, will be entirely unavailing. It will be seen that my amendment has somewhat enlarged the appropriation contained in the bill. It was drawn up by the gentleman having charge of the seed department, and is such as he considered the wants of his department required. I, myself, think the proposition a proper one. I have therefore offered the amendment; and I hope the gentleman who reported the bill will not object to it.

The amendment was again reported by the Clerk.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The original item contained in the bill, providing for the purchase of seeds, made the appropriation payable out of the patent fund. The gentleman from Vermont says he has seen the Commissioner of Patents, who informs him that there is no patent fund out of which it can be paid, and that any such appropriation will be useless. It must, therefore, be a direct appropriation, or it will not be available. It will be for the committee to determine whether such an appropriation shall be made. If they are in favor of the item, they will support the gentleman's amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRESTON. I now move my amendment, to come in at the end of the 115th line. I submit it now, because it may as well come in there as at any other place. I ask that it may be read.

The amendment was read by the Clerk; and is as follows:

To complete the custom-house, court-rooms, and sub-treasury at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, $100,000.

To complete the custom-house, with suitable offices and rooms, at Mobile, in the State of Alabama, $65,000.

To complete the custom-house, with suitable offices and rooms, at Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, $40,000.

To complete the custom-house and post office, with suitable offices and rooms, at Louisville, Kentucky, $40,000.

To complete the custom-house, with suitable rooms and offices, at Bangor, in the State of Maine, $20,000.

To complete the custom-house, with suitable rooms and offices, at Bath, in the State of Maine, $20,000.

To complete the custom house and court rooms, with suitable offices and rooms, at Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, $12,000.

To complete the marine hospital at Cleveland, in the State of Ohio, $25,000.

To complete the marine hospital at St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, $10,000.

To complete the marine hospital at Chicago, in the State of Illinois, $8,000.

To complete the marine hospital at Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, $12,500.

To complete the marine hospital at Paducah, in the said State of Kentucky, $5,000.

To complete the marine hospital at Evansville, in the State of Indiana, $2,000.

To complete the marine hospital at San Francisco, and to inclose the site and drain the same, and for the necessary out-buildings $44,000.

Mr. PRESTON. The amendment which I have offered contains items which were voted by the House into the bill which failed on its passage by a tie vote. The same appropriations are reported by the Committee of Ways and Means in a separate bill, which has been referred to this committee; but the friends of custom-houses thought it was rather dangerous to wait for action upon that bill, and that we had better try the measure here, and if it should fail as an amendment to this bill, then try it again when the other bill comes up.

I differ with my friend and distinguished colleague from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] in thinking that it was better to report these appropriations in a separate bill; and I also differ with him in the reasons he has assigned to justify the course taken by the Committee of Ways and Means in reference to this subject. If I understand it, the reason why these appropriations have been reported in separate bills was that assigned by a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] that guards might be placed around the Treasury; that a bill might come here with proper checks to be placed upon the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, to prevent him from sending recommendations to this House for appropriations for the completion of custom-houses and marine hospitals, when they were in fact original estimates, made under the guise of continuing the public works. It was sent back, and a second bill, providing such a guard, was reported.

But why can we not incorporate this matter into this bill? The House, if the Committee of Ways and Means choose to consider themselves instructed, has expressly pronounced, by the yeas and nays, as well as in committee, by divisions with tellers, in favor of these various amendments; and there is no reason why they may not as well be inserted in the bill as the appropriation of $530,000 for the New York assay office, which has been applied for, and for which there has been no precedent appropriation. The Committee of Ways and Means ought to have taken the action of this House as their instruction, and not to have fixed upon a certain number of votes as constituting a recommendation. A majority, be it ever so small, is a majority; and they ought not to have assumed that only a majority of a certain number of votes should give validity to the action of the House, and induce them to re-report appropriations.

Sir, I am perfectly willing, for one, to let all these amendments go together. It is simply a question between the Secretary of the Treasury and the Committee of Ways and Means. There is nothing in the amendment which I offer that a Democratic Secretary has not recommended; there is nothing in it that has not emanated from the Administration itself; and it is simply for this House to decide who can form the soundest opinion in relation to these expenditures—the Committee of Ways and Means, or the estimating officers who have transmitted estimates to us.

I believe that recent occurrences may have imperiled somewhat the success of this amendment; but I trust in the justice of the House to reaffirm that which it has heretofore done after discussion, and upon a call of the yeas and nays, and not now to stultify itself by voting down what it has heretofore passed. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] failed to make a joint report of these bills because of the objection of a brother member. He recollects well the struggle in which he was engaged, and the willingness of this whole House to pass the bills as they then stood. Ingraft the amendment that I offer on to this bill, and it is precisely in the situation in which it fell, and if you adopt a subsequent amendment, which I shall offer to guard the expenditure—

Mr. HOWE, (interrupting.) I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he will adopt what I hold in my hand as a part of his amendment? It is on a kindred subject.

Mr. PRESTON. I will listen to the amendment in a moment. I have only to say, further, that I have discharged my duty in presenting these amendments. I would not have presented them collectively, but for the fact that they have all been acted on separately heretofore, and it will economize the time of the House to offer them in this way.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky accept the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOWE?]

Mr. PRESTON. I have not heard what it is.

Mr. BAYLY. I decline to accept any amendment, because I have one to offer myself, and I believe I can only offer one amendment at a time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Virginia on my left [Mr. CASKIE] desires to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] and I presume he has a right to do that before his colleague offers another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] has the floor, and the Chair does not yet know for what purpose.

Mr. BAYLY. I have the floor to move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Some gentleman can first have the floor to speak in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

Mr. BAYLY. Well, I will give way to my colleague for that purpose.

Mr. CASKIE. Mr. Chairman, I take advantage of the present opportunity for the purpose of defining my position in reference to the matter under consideration—a position which, I trust, will be that of a good many members upon this floor. I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] and the committee generally, that I voted when the deficiency bill was before us, on a previous occasion, for all expenditures for the completion of custom-houses which are recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. I did not give that vote on his recommendation alone, though I attached much weight to it, but I gave it not only on that recommendation, but upon my knowledge of the wants of the places where they were located, derived from my previous service in this House, and upon an investigation considered sufficient, by myself, at least, of the whole subject.

But, sir, I am utterly opposed to any amendment providing appropriations for any of those custom-houses, in connection with this bill. In my judgment, the Committee of Ways and Means design a fair and proper thing when they come forward here with two bills—the one involving simply those appropriations to which, as they suppose, there is no objection; and the other embracing all the custom-houses and marine hospitals, and asking the judgment of this committee on them upon their own merits. And allow me to tell the friends of these appropriations that I put the decision of this body on these appropriations—for I have such a one myself to ask—upon their own merits, unconnected with anything else.

I have, sir, risen to make a mere statement of position, and to ask my friend who introduced this bill here to take the New York assay office out of it? That is a matter which gives trouble here—about which there is doubt and difficulty. Let us just pass those appropriations on which all of us agree. Remove from the bill, therefore, the appropriation for the New York assay office, which will give trouble, and let it go along with the custom-houses. Let no man here asking an appropriation from this Government shrink from a test of it upon its own merits, by grafting it upon a deficiency bill.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to strike out the words "to complete," wherever they occur, and to insert the words in their stead "to continue the construction of."

That amendment explains itself. I move it, that this committee and the country, when they read the bill, may really understand what is its meaning. These proposed appropriations are not to complete any of these establishments; they are to continue the construction of them.

Mr. LETCHER. That is a fact.

Mr. BAYLY. Now, when I spoke the other day in reference to some of these appropriations, I find by the remarks of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that I was not entirely understood; but I shall try to be so before this debate is through. I have nothing to say now about the assay office; but I have something to say on that amendment of mine to strike out "to complete" and to insert in lieu thereof "to continue the construction of."

I undertook, sir, the other day to say here, and on a familiar knowledge of the manner in which these things have been managed of late years, that there is a deceptiveness—I am not disposed to use a stronger expression—in these appropri-tions. When most of these appropriations to commence the construction of custom-houses were made they were made on limitations, on positive and distinct limitations, that they were to cost no more than the sum appropriated. And yet that limitation of Congress was utterly—utterly, and, I might almost say, laughingly—disregarded by the authorities who had to administer these laws.

Sir, if this were an isolated case; if it were merely true in respect to these custom-houses, I should not care so much about it. But I say that it has become a fashion of late to show their utter disregard of the limitations of Congress on the appropriations of money. If I had time to do it, I could go into the recital of a number of instances of the most flagrant disregard of the will of Congress in that respect. I recollect once, very well, we appropriated a hundred thousand dollars for a temporary hospital below New Orleans, for the accommodation of the soldiers returning from Mexico. We put a positive prohibition in the bill that no more than a hundred thousand dollars should be expended on the institution. A letter of instructions was at once written to the officers there, in which the law was quoted, and the observance of the condition was insisted on. They paid no more attention to it than if there had been no letter written at all, and expended a hundred and eighty odd thousand dollars. Demands were made on the paymaster to pay for this extra expenditure, but he said he could not settle these bills. He was compelled to obey the instructions of his superior officer, the law, not only not authorizing but prohibiting him. That was the condition of affairs there. Now I want this House to understand—and, as far as my humble voice can be heard, I mean that it shall be understood—that in these appropriations there is an utter and absolute disregard of the limitations which Congress may put on the expenditure of money.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, as the hour is now getting late, and as an important communication from the Executive is on the Speaker's table, which it is very desirable to have given to the country at as early a moment as possible, I move that the committee do now rise, so as to permit of this document being read.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish to say something in opposition to this amendment, and then the committee may rise.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I would comply with the gentleman's suggestion with great pleasure, but this is a very important communication from the Executive in relation to the difficulties with Cuba.

The question was put, on the motion of Mr. WALBRIDGE; which was agreed to.

The committee thereupon rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under their consideration the Union generally, and especially House bill, (No. 271,) entitled "A bill to supply the deficiencies in the appropriation for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854," and had come to no resolution thereon.

SEIZURE OF THE BLACK WARRIOR.

The SPEAKER, by the unanimous consent of the House, presented the following communication from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 10th instant, I herewith transmit a report of the Secretary of State containing all the information received at the Department in relation to the seizure of the Black Warrior at Havana, on the 28th ultimo. There have been, in the course of a few years past, many other instances of aggression upon our commerce, violations of rights of American citizens, and insults to our national flag by the Spanish authorities in Cuba, and all attempts to obtain redress have led to protracted and, as yet, fruitless negotiations.

The documents in these cases are voluminous, and when prepared will be sent to Congress. Those now transmitted relate exclusively to the seizure of the Black Warrior, and present so clear a case of wrong that it would be reasonable to expect full indemnity therefor, as soon as this unjustifiable and offensive conduct shall be made known to her Catholic Majesty's Government. But similar expectations, in other cases, have not been realized. The offending party is at our doors, with large powers of aggression, and none, it is alleged, for reparation. The source of redress is in another hemisphere, and the answers to our just complaints, made to the home Government, are but the repetition of excuses, rendered by inferior officials to their superiors, in reply to representations of misconduct. The peculiar situation of the parties has undoubtedly much aggravated the annoyances and injuries which our citizens have suffered from the Cuban authorities, and Spain does not seem to appreciate, to a full extent, her responsibility for the conduct of these authorities.

In giving very extraordinary powers to them, she owes it to justice, and to her friendly relations to this Government, to guard with great vigilance against an exorbitant exercise of those powers, and, in case of injuries, to provide for prompt redress. I have already taken measures to present to the Government of Spain the wanton injuries of the Cuban authorities, and the detention and seizure of the Black Warrior, and to demand immediate indemnity for the injury which has thereby resulted to our citizens. In view of the position of the Island of Cuba, its proximity to our coast, the relations which it must ever bear to our commerce and other interests, it is in vain to expect that a series of unfriendly acts, infringing our commercial rights, and the adoption of a policy threatening the honor and security of these States, can long consist with peaceful relations.

In case the measures taken for an amicable adjustment of our difficulties with Spain should unfortunately fail, I shall not hesitate to use the authorities and means which Congress may grant to insure an observance of our just rights, to obtain redress for injuries received, and to vindicate the honor of our flag. In anticipation of that contingency, which I earnestly hope may not arise, I suggest to Congress the propriety of adopting such provisional measures as the exigency may seem to demand.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

WASHINGTON, March 15, 1854.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to make a motion, and I beg to say that my admiration is excited by the character of that message. I move that the message and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and be printed.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to ask whether it would be in order to move that we print an extra number of copies of the document?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion would have to go to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the War Department, covering a report of the Board of Officers appointed to collect evidence of the claims for funds advanced, subsistence and supplies of all kinds furnished, and taken for the use of the volunteers under the command of John C. Frémont, in California, in 1846, when thus engaged in the public service.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, the communication was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution, without amendment, of the following title: (H. R. No. 18.) Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury and the Light-House Board to determine upon the site, plan, and mode, of constructing the light-house on Cohasset rocks, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles:

S. No. 120. An act to promote the efficiency of the Army by retiring disabled officers.

S. No. 271. An act to regulate the fees and compensation of the district attorneys in the courts of the United States for the Territories of Minnesota, New Mexico, and Utah; and asking the concurrence of the House therein.]

DISTRIBUTION OF ARMS TO THE STATES.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to bring to the attention of the House a bill which requires early and prompt action upon the part of the House. The time for the distribution of arms to the several States and Territories is rapidly approaching, yet, owing to a defect in the law relating to such distribution, it can be but very imperfectly performed. The Department ask, therefore, that the bill which I report from the Committee on Military Affairs, to enable the Secretary of War to make a proper distribution of arms to the several States and Territories, be passed at once.

The bill was then read by its title, as follows:

An act to provide for the distribution of arms to the several States and Territories.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. What is the basis of distribution of arms now?

Mr. BISSELL. I will answer the gentleman. Under the law of 1808 the annual distribution of arms provided for is required to be made according to the enrolled militia of the several States and Territories. There is now no way of ascertaining the precise strength of the enrolled militia, for the reason that some of the States make no returns at all, others make very partial ones, and others again make them but once in two or three years.

Mr. JONES. If they do not make returns, they certainly ought not to have any arms.

Mr. BISSELL. The whole difficulty lies in this fact, that heretofore the distribution of arms has been required to be made according to the enrolled militia of the various States, which there was no means of ascertaining, with any degree of accuracy, because the States do not make the proper returns. The bill I have reported from the Committee on Military Affairs provides that the distribution shall be made according to the representation in this House.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman that I cannot see the necessity for it. I do not think it would be just and equitable to make such a distribution.

Mr. BISSELL. Let me say to the gentleman from Tennessee that, under the present system, some of the States will get no arms at all. They do not make the proper returns of the militia within their limits; hence they cannot, under the existing law, recover their proper quota of arms.

Mr. JONES. They ought not to receive them if they will not make their returns.

Mr. BISSELL. That may be; but the Government desires that the citizens within the States shall have these arms.

Mr. JONES. The States which have the most militia ought to have the most arms; and if they will not make returns, it is not right that arms should be given to them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remark that this discussion is somewhat irregular until the bill has had its second reading.

The bill was then read a second time by its title.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. BISSELL] for the purpose of making an inquiry. The distribution proposed by the bill under consideration undoubtedly is proper; but I wish to ask the gentleman whether he has reflected upon, or whether his committee has had under consideration, the question as to the propriety of extending the distribution in the same manner to the Territories?

Mr. BISSELL. The intention was to make the provisions of the bill alike to all the States and Territories. If the Territories have been omitted, I will ask to have an amendment, including them, inserted. I will say, further, that the same provision which is made in this bill was made for the Territory of Iowa at the time of its organization.

Mr. HAVEN. I was under the impression that it did not apply to the Territories.

Mr. LILLY. I would like to inquire of the gentleman what rule will be adopted in making the distribution for States where the States have not made their regular returns?

Mr. BISSELL. I do not know. I suppose where the States have not made their returns of their militia regularly, the last returns made will be taken as a basis on which to make the distribution.

Mr. LILLY. My own impression was, that the last report made would be taken as the basis. I do not know as I have any objection to the passage of the joint resolution. I only rose to make the inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am satisfied that this bill is substantially right. It proposes a proper distribution of the arms, and, if adopted, will do substantial justice to all the States. But without trespassing upon the time of the House by any remarks upon the subject, I move the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina to withdraw the motion for the purpose of enabling me to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will hear the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think it would be much better to repeal the original law, providing for the distribution of arms.

Mr. STANTON. That is precisely what I propose to do. I desire to offer the following amendment:

And that all laws requiring or authorizing the distribution of arms among the several States be, and the same are, hereby repealed.

Mr. STANTON. The States can take care of themselves.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not withdraw the motion for any such purpose. I am not in favor of having a large standing army. I would vote for increasing it considerably beyond its present limits; but twenty or twenty-five thousand is as large a standing army as it would be best for the Government to maintain; and for this reason I think it is wise for us to arm the militia of the country. I move the previous question; and I hope the bill will be adopted as reported by the committee.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JONES. Well, sir, then I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

And thereupon (at half past three o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 16, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FREMONT'S BATTALION.

The PRESIDENT. I present to the Senate a communication from the War Department, dated March 14.

Mr. GWIN. That is a communication respecting a very complicated case in California from the claims arising from what is known as the Frémont Battalion. It has been examined by a board of officers with great care, but still it wants a full and very thorough examination by some committee of this body; and though I am entirely opposed to the raising of select committees when it can possibly be avoided, I am of the opinion that this ought to go to a select committee. The papers are very voluminous; and, as I have said, it is a most complicated case, and one which should go to a committee who could give their entire attention to it. I therefore move the reference of the communication and papers to a select committee; and also, that they be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. STUART. Let the communication be read.

It was accordingly read. It states that by the sixth section of the Army appropriation act of August 31, 1852, an appropriation was made for the pay and equipment of the volunteers serving under the command of Lieutenant Colonel John C. Frémont, in California, during the year 1846; and the Secretary of War was authorized and empowered to employ three officers of the Army to examine and report to Congress upon all such claims as might be presented for amounts advanced, and subsistence of all kinds taken, for the use of the battalion while thus engaged. In pursuance of that provision, the officers were appointed, and made a partial report on the 29th of December, 1852, respecting the claims which had been presented. Subsequently other claims were presented, and new evidence was offered in regard to claims previously considered; and the officers now make another report, which is transmitted, embracing all the claims heretofore presented, as well those noticed in their partial report as those since presented.

Mr. GWIN. As I stated, this is a very complicated subject, and it has been already examined with a great deal of attention and care. It has been eight years before Congress, and a bill once passed this body appropriating $700,000 to meet the claims, and providing the manner in which the board of commissioners should be provided for; but that bill was lost in the other House; and it has been a source of the greatest irritation in the State that no disposition has been made of the matter. I therefore move the reference to a select committee, on the ground that it needs a very thorough and attentive examination from a committee which can give their whole attention to it. Under any other circumstances I would not submit such a motion. I move that the committee consist of five persons, and be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. PEARCE. These claims, as I understand, are claims growing out of the war in California. I think their reference properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs; and I see no necessity for referring them to a select committee. If they did not appropriately belong to any of the standing committees, they might then go to a select committee; otherwise such a reference is useless. The Committee on Military Affairs, in this case, it seems to me, is the one most properly chargeable with their consideration, and I see no reason for sending them to a select committee. Select committees are generally chosen to investigate a case with a view to a favorable report. I think that these claims should be investigated by an impartial committee, one neither prejudiced against them nor disposed to overlook anything connected with them.

Mr. GWIN. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not want a committee appointed partial to the claims; but I want them settled as soon as possible. They have now been before the various standing committees of Congress for eight years. I know that the Military Committee will do its duty fully and faithfully; but as this is a very complicated case, and an enormous number of papers have been sent in, I was requested and appealed to, as representing the State of California, to ask their reference to a select committee, who would be able to devote their entire time to their consideration, and submit a report upon them. If, however, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs thinks his committee can take charge of them, I shall not object; but they will be a pretty heavy burden upon any committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Committee on Military Affairs, as the Senator from California has intimated, had this subject under consideration once before, and a commission was appointed, on the recommendation of that committee, to investigate the claims, and this, as I understand, is the report of that commission. It is the report of a commission which was appointed on the recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate the claims; and from what I have heard, I believe it is a report that some of the claims were honest, and should be allowed, and that there are others which are still doubtful, and call for further examination. I do not positively know the nature of the report; but I presume it is that a portion of the claims are settled and adjudicated, and that there are portions still left unsettled and undetermined. I agree with the Senator from California that is a complicated case; and I should certainly desire, if I could, with propriety, to get rid of its further consideration.

Mr. GWIN. I merely made the motion because it was suggested to me that, inasmuch as in my State a great deal of irritation had been caused by the long pendency of these claims, which have been eight years before Congress, it would be better to have the subject referred to a select committee, in order that they could examine thoroughly the whole action of the commission, and that some provision should be made in regard to the claims. I know that the Committee on Military Affairs will do its duty in the case; but inasmuch as my constituents are particularly interested, and have been appealed to to have the subject thoroughly examined in as short a time as possible, in order that the Board of Commission may be ordered to California—if sent at all—(probably by an amendment to the deficiency bill, which will be here in a few days,) I have made the motion. I have no doubt that if the Committee on Military Affairs take charge of it, they will do their duty faithfully.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will suggest to the Senator from California, that, as the subject has been heretofore referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, it perhaps had better be referred, for the present, to that committee, because I desire to give it a little further attention myself; and if then we find that we cannot bring forward a proposition, we can report it back to the Senate, and permit the honorable Senator to move its reference to a select committee.

Mr. GWIN. I agree to that; and I move, also, in addition to it, that the communication and papers be printed. They were ordered to be printed in the House yesterday, and therefore this will incur but little additional expense.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the petition of Francois Cousin, praying the confirmation of his title to a tract of land in Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, presented the petition of Sarah R. Russell, one of the creditors of the late Republic of Texas, praying the payment of an amount due her by the State of Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BROWN presented the petition of A. G. Bennett, a paymaster in the United States Army, praying to be released from his liability to account for certain Government money lost, while in his possession, by the accidental burning of the steamboat Volante in the Yazoo river; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EVANS presented the memorial of Robert Mills, on the subject of the improvement of the pavement of Pennsylvania avenue, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. WADE presented a petition of members of the General Assembly of Ohio, praying a modification of the bill commonly known as the homestead bill, so as to extend its benefits to all foreigners who have filed, or may hereafter file, a declaration of intention to become citizens, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of citizens of Portage county, Ohio, praying that one hundred and sixty acres of land may be granted to every head of a family being a citizen, and not possessed of other land, upon condition of settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of R. M. Browne and others, remonstrating against the ratification of any treaty creating an international copyright between the United States and Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of John O'Leary, praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER presented the memorial of Susanah Hayne Pinckney, praying remuneration for the services of her father, Richard Shubrick, in the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. GWIN presented a resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon, in relation to an increase of the mail service between New York, New Orleans, San Francisco, Umpqua Harbor, Astoria, and the intermediate points of mail delivery which may hereafter be established by future mail contracts; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of John Gusman be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

OWEN'S GEOLOGICAL REPORT.

Mr. WALKER. I find, Mr. President, that the Legislature of Wisconsin has turned its attention to a very important subject, and addressed to the Congress of the United States the memorial which I hold in my hand. Though it does not, in express terms, instruct the Senators, yet it contains a very urgent request, and one which meets my views so fully that it will afford me the extrement pleasure to bring such a subject to the attention of Congress. Notwithstanding it does not impart instructions to the Senators from that State, and contains only a request, I wish to say that the subject is of that character and of that importance that I shall feel myself under obligations to comply with the request. I introduce the memorial now, and ask that it may be read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The memorial was read. It requests the Senators from Wisconsin to procure from the Senate of the United States an order to reprint the geological report of D. D. Owen, on the mineral lands of Iowa, Wisconsin, and northern Illinois, with the accompanying illustrations, in the same style as his report of the geological survey of Wisconsin, Iowa, and Minnesota, which was published in 1852, by Lippincott, Grambo & Co., by order of the Senate. The report alluded to was submitted to Congress on the 6th of June, 1840.

Mr. WALKER. I think the subject ought to be committed to the Committee on Printing. I suppose it is not necessary to move any specific instructions for that committee. They can consider and dispose of the subject.

Mr. BADGER. Had my friend not better make a proposition to print before the reference?

The PRESIDENT. The memorial, being from a State Legislature, will be printed as a matter of course, under the rules.

Mr. WALKER. If that were not so, I should make a motion to print it.

Mr. BADGER. I mean a motion to print the matter referred to in the memorial, so as to let the motion go to the committee with the memorial.

The PRESIDENT. The memorial will be printed, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

ACCESSORY TRANSIT COMPANY.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill to authorize the issue of registers to vessels owned by the Accessory Transit Company.

The bill was reported to the Senate, without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

POST ROAD IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred a bill "to establish a post road in the State of California," have instructed me to report it back, and recommend its passage. It is necessary to have the post route to which the bill refers established soon, and there can be no objection to the bill; and, therefore, I ask the Senate, by unanimous consent, to consider it now.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to declare the road from the Nevada City, by Minnesota and Downieville, to Gibsonville, in California, to be a post road.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD SURVEYS.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred an order of the Senate directing them to inquire into the expediency of printing five thousand additional copies of the report of the Secretary of War, communicating copies of the reports of engineers and other persons employed in explorations and surveys to ascertain a practicable and eligible route for a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean, have directed me to report against printing. The reports which have already been made have been ordered to be printed, and this resolution asks for the printing of an additional number. I think that all the reports should be printed together.

Mr. GWIN. I prefer that that matter should lie on the table for a few days, until we can look into it.

The PRESIDENT. The report will go on the Calendar.

LAND PATENTS.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill to authorize the issuance of patents to lands in Louisiana in certain cases, to report it back with an amendment.

Mr. SLIDELL. I presume there can be no possible objection to the bill which has just been reported by the Senator from Iowa. It is merely to provide for a defect in the present law. There are many cases in which the rights of individuals to lands in Louisiana and Arkansas are recognized, but where the present law does not authorize the issuing of a patent. I understand that the Committee on Public Lands were unanimous in regard to the bill, and I ask the Senate now to consider it, and put it upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to enact that, in the case of any claim to land in Louisiana which has heretofore been confirmed by law, but in which no provision is made by the confirmatory statute for the issue of patents, it shall be lawful to issue patents for the claims so confirmed, upon the presentation to the Commissioner of the General Land Office of plats of survey duly approved by the surveyor general of Louisiana, with a proviso that the patents shall operate only as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was to strike out the word "Louisiana," in each case where it occurred, and insert "in any State or Territory," so as to make the bill general in its operation.

The amendment was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed; and,

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, its title was amended so as to read, "An act to authorize the issuance of patents to lands in the States and Territories in certain cases."

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. SEBASTIAN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Miles Knowlton.

He also gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to extend the time for the location of certain donation claims in Arkansas.

NEW MAIL ROUTE.

Mr. SEBASTIAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing by law a mail route from Desarc Bluff, on White river, intersecting the military road near the Cadron ferry, in Conway county, by way of Lewisburg, Lemoine's ferry, and Dardanelle, to Fort Smith, all in the State of Arkansas, and report by bill or otherwise.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. EVERETT, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of John Bozman Kerr, late chargé d'affaires at Nicaragua, praying compensation for official services under commissions to other Republics in Central America, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the memorial of Llewellyn Washington, praying compensation for services performed in the Post Office Department, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution for extending an existing contract for carrying the mail in Alabama, reported it back without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of the Broadstreet Bridge Company, of Nashville, Tennessee, praying that the bridge over the Cumberland river may be made a lawful structure and established as a post route, reported a bill to establish a post road; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of the heirs of the late Brigadier General Richard B. Mason, praying to be reimbursed certain expenditures made by him while he was civil and military governor of California, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill to authorize the sale of reserved lands, and for other purposes, reported it back, with an amendment.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Summers, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

VERMONT SENATORSHIP.

On motion by Mr. PETTIT, the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution of the Committee on the Judiciary affirming the right of the Hon. S. S. PHELPS to a seat in the Senate.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I had no idea of taking any part in the debate on the question involved as to the seat of the honorable gentleman from Vermont; and I should not do so but that, on a former occasion, I expressed some views which would seem to reach this case, rendering it, in my opinion, of some consequence to me, more than to others, that I should have the opportunity of restating them.

The question in the case of the gentleman from Vermont is simply this: whether, under an appointment from the Executive of his State, he can retain his seat as a Senator, after the adjournment of the first Legislature following his appointment? On a former occasion, some two or three years ago, I, as did other gentlemen, I believe, expressed some opinions upon that very question in the Senate, but it was on an occasion when the question itself was not before the Senate for decision. It was the case of Mr. Winthrop, of Massachusetts, who was here under an appointment from the Governor of his State to fill a vacancy which had happened in the recess of the Legislature of that State. The Legislature met while Mr. Winthrop was here in his seat; and soon after the Legislature met it elected his successor, in the person of Mr. Rantoul. Information came to Washington through the ordinary channels, that an election had been made by the Legislature of Massachusetts, and that Mr. Rantoul had been elected as the successor of Mr. Webster, and in the place of Mr. Winthrop. A few days after that Mr. Winthrop, whose character was well known and appreciated here, not only as that of an enlightened statesman, but an accomplished gentleman, stated to the Senate that he had received from the Governor of the State the appropriate letters, showing the fact that Mr. Rantoul had been elected the successor of Mr. Webster, and that he felt under some difficulty in knowing whether, being thus advised that an election had been made, he could retain his seat under the Executive appointment. The question was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that Committee reported, as their opinion, that the presence of the credentials here was official information to the Senate that an election had been made by the Legislature, and that Mr. Winthrop's seat was ipso facto vacated. But an incidental question arose, which was whether, as the Senator elect was not here, and as the Senate had no information that he would accept the appointment, the election made by the Legislature of Massachusetts had been so far perfected as to vacate the seat; and that was, in truth, the only question. In the course of the debate a collateral inquiry was made, how far the Executive appointment would extend, if it should turn out as the judgment of the Senate that we were not to consider the election made until the Senator elected presented himself and claimed the seat, or gave other evidence of his acceptance of it? and it was during some debate on that question that I expressed the views which the Senator from Vermont did me the honor to read the other day, (as he did the views of other Senators,) expressive of the opinion that there was nothing in the Constitution to limit the duration of the Executive appointment, but an election by the Legislature, and that if no such election was made the Executive appointee would continue until one should be made. That was about the substance, I think, of the views which I then expressed.

Now, sir, it is a very sound and philosophic rule of law, which all lawyers, all jurists admit, that when an opinion is given by a judge upon a question not before the court, it is not entitled to the judicial respect to which an opinion given by a judge upon the question immediately before the court is entitled; and the reason is a very plain and a very sound one. The judicial mind in throwing out incidental views is not acting under the responsibilities which control it when it is passing a judgment. But, sir, had those views been expressed under more grave responsibilities, I trust I have the candor and frankness of mind to acknowledge my error; and I am now free to admit they were given without a full review of the whole question, and am prepared at once to say so.

Mr. President, the clause of the Constitution, out of which this question more immediately arises, is one which, as I read it, is not free from doubt. It is not clear. It is not determinate. The clause of the Constitution is:

"If vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

The question discussed with so much ability by the honorable gentleman from Vermont was upon the proper grammatical construction of this sentence in the application of the word "until"—whether that word, "until," limited the power of appointment, or whether it affected the duration of the office under the appointment; and he came to the conclusion, by a most clear and logical argument, that, grammatically, the word "until" qualified the power of appointment only, and did not affect the duration of the office.

Sir, as I have said, if we confine our inquiry to this clause of the Constitution, it is not free from doubt. The grammatical construction put upon the sentence by the gentleman from Vermont may be the correct one. By referring the words in the sentence to their proper places, and giving them their proper grammatical significance in construction, it may be that the word, "until," limits only the power of appointment; but yet it does not follow, when we look at the whole text of the Constitution, that that grammatical construction is to control the meaning.

If it was the intention of the Constitution, that the word "until" should limit the power of appointment and limit that alone, it would follow, as the honorable gentleman makes it follow, as a necessary consequence, that the Executive appointment when once made would continue until superseded by election by the Legislature; but if that were the construction of the Constitution, those who framed the sentence would hardly have used the expression, that the Executive appointment was to be "temporary." Far less would they have refrained from giving to that Executive appointment the function of filling the vacancy—a phrase which they carefully abstain from.

Mr. President, in reviewing my former opinions on this subject, I have felt it necessary to look to the structure of the Government under the Constitution. I was strongly and forcibly impressed with the remarks which fell from the honorable gentleman who is the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, [Mr. BUTLER.] We must look to the structure of the Government under the Constitution; and what is that structure? Why, sir, the Federal Legislature is composed of two branches—the House of Representatives and the Senate; and the constituencies of each are clearly defined. In the House of Representatives the people of the States are represented numerically. In the Senate they are represented, not numerically, but with an utter disregard to numbers. The popular voice in the Senate is not heard or felt numerically; but the Senate, as it is constituted under the Constitution, is the representative of the States, and of the States alone. The voice—the will of the States, under the constitutional intentment, is to be learned only through the Legislatures of the States. By the structure of the Federal Government, the power of appointing Senators is given to the States through their legislative bodies. But the Constitution provided (and provided only in a single case) that where a vacancy happened when the legislative bodies, the organized representatives of the States, were not in being or not in session, an appointment should be made—of what character? An appointment to fill a vacancy so happening? No, sir; that meaning is clearly excluded from the Constitution. It does not give to the Executive of a State the power to fill a vacancy, even when it happens in the recess of the Legislature. It excludes any such idea by careful language. Power is given to the Executive only "to make temporary appointments." The very next succeeding words of the clause show the constitutional intentment to be clearly that such an appointment is to be temporary only—the power being lodged in the Legislature only to fill a senatorial term. The Constitution goes on to say that when a vacancy happens during the recess of the Legislature, the Governor "may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

Now, sir, what is the vacancy to which the Constitution refers? Is it the vacancy in the senatorial term, for senatorial terms are carved out by the Constitution and made to endure for six years. When a vacancy happens, the term once begun, and the succeeding Senator is elected by the Legislature, he is elected, not for a term of six years—the Constitution prohibits that—but for the unexpired term, and thus he "fills the vacancy." That power of filling the vacancy is reserved to the legislative body—the only power to fill it. I say, then, that if the Executive appointment can endure beyond the period when the legislative body meets, it may become a power to fill the vacancy. Thus, sir, if we give this restricted meaning to the clause in question, as was strongly illustrated by the honorable and able Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BAYARD], on a former day, it would enable the Legislatures of the various States; by their action under the Constitution, to make these "temporary appointments" temporary or not, at their pleasure. The Constitution says they shall be "temporary appointments;" not appointments to fill a vacancy, but such as are in their character purely temporary. If, however, you give this restricted meaning to the clause under consideration, it would enable the Legislatures; by failing to elect, to destroy their temporary character, and enable a Senator holding under them to hold during a full term; and as the Legislature might elect or not, at its pleasure, the Executive appointment would be held, not under a limitation of tenure prescribed by the Constitution, but at the will of the State Legislature. I cannot, therefore, place upon the clause such a construction as would lead to these consequences, unless the text clearly requires it.

Now, sir, the concluding words in the clause are: "Until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies." This is not a mandate upon the legislative body. There is no power on earth that can compel the Legislature of a State to fill the vacancy. The Constitution never contemplated a mandate upon the Legislature to fill the vacancy, because there is no sanction to such a mandate. The Legislature may fill the vacancy or not, at their pleasure. What, then, is the meaning of the Constitution, if it is not a mandate under the sanctions of a mandate? Why, the meaning simply is, that the power residing in the Legislature, it is the constitutional intentment that it shall be exercised when the organized constituency of the State is in a condition to do it. If they fail to do it, it results that the temporary appointment is at an end, because the properly organized constituency have declined to act.

Sir, as I understand the Constitution, it is a federation of the States, as well as a Government. If the States determine to put an end to the federation, by refusing to elect Federal Senators, they may do so under high responsibilities to their people; and it is demonstrable, in such a view of the Constitution, that if it could be in the power of the Governors of the States to keep up a representation in the Senate under appointments emanating from themselves, they might, by so doing, defeat the will of the State.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. SEWARD. Do I understand the Senator correctly as saying that the Legislature has a right or has the power to leave a State unrepresented in this body?

Mr. MASON. I am not aware that I used the term "right;" but if I did, I meant it of course to be synonymous with power.

Mr. SEWARD. The Senator used the term "right," and it was because I thought it liable to misconception that I interrupted him.

Mr. MASON. Sir, the States are the parties to the Constitution. Under that Constitution they have obligated themselves each to the other to send representatives to the Senate; but if they fail to send them, I apprehend it is perfectly immaterial whether they fail to send them in the exercise of a right or in the exercise of a power. They may fail to do it, and they are responsible only to their own people for that failure. The honorable Senator from South Carolina, who is the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, strongly illustrated this point in the remarks which he made on the subject. If we give it this construction, it will be in the power of the Executives of the States, against the policy, against the will of the Legislature, to keep up a full representation in the Senate, although the legislative body refuse to authorize it, and may be sustained by their people in so doing. That, as I apprehend, would be to overthrow the intention of the instrument, and it is a construction to which we are brought by too close an adherence to its letter in disregard of its spirit.

I should not, Mr. President, have gone even thus far into the subject, but that it seemed due to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. PHELPS,] who, I am gratified to say, has shown in this debate, as he has never failed to do in the Senate, an enlightened and gifted mind, governed only by a sincere and patriotic purpose. If there has ever been an insinuation that that honorable gentleman desired to hold his seat only because it was a desirable seat to him, it could come only from a quarter unworthy the least respect. Sir, it has been my good fortune to be associated with him on this floor for several years; and I am sure I speak the opinion of the body when I say, that he has never addressed himself to the Senate upon any subject when his audience did not leave him gratified and instructed. I shall be exceedingly sorry by my vote to be compelled to part with him; but I am perfectly satisfied, upon a thorough examination of the subject, that the Executive appointment under which he claims to sit, terminated with the session of the Legislature of his State which has since intervened.

Suppose that we stick to the mere letter of this clause, to what shall we be brought? According to grammatical construction of the terms employed, the Executive appointment would terminate on the first day that the Legislature assembled; yet we all agree, I presume, that the decision in Mr. Smith's case was a correct decision, that the Executive appointment must last during the session of the Legislature. Nor, I confess, in upholding that decision, do I see that it is at all necessary to resort to the analogy on which the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] relied, that it was because the Constitution considered that the whole legislative term or session was but one day, like the term of a court at common-law. Why, sir, "meeting," in its popular sense, is pretty much the same as "session." A meeting of the Legislature is a session of the Legislature; and it is in that sense, I suppose, it was used in the Constitution. Many of the religious societies designate their assemblages for religious purposes as "meetings;" and they speak of the "meeting-house." They do not use "meeting" as meaning the mere coming together of the congregation, but it is the assembling of the congregation and their session for the prescribed period. That is the "meeting," and that is what the Constitution meant by the "meeting of the Legislature." The phrase is not to be understood in a confined and restricted sense, as the mere coming together of the members who meet each other, but as a "meeting" in the popular sense. The "meeting," as used in the Constitution, is, I think, undoubtedly the assemblage and the session of the body. It could never have been intended that the Legislature should make the appointment at the first coming together of the members. I think, therefore, that the decision which was made by the Senate in the case of Mr. Smith, by the adoption of the resolution of Mr. Giles, was the correct and sensible exposition of the meaning of that word in the Constitution. Great difficulties would ensue if we were to give too narrow a construction to the phrase; if, in the effort to give to each word its peculiar and significant meaning, we disregard the larger intentments of the Constitution. Suppose we give the clause a literal construction. It says that the Legislature, at the first meeting after the vacancy, or after the temporary appointment, "shall then fill" the vacancy. Suppose that the Legislature, as in the case from Vermont, does not fill the vacancy; then, according to the strict letter of the clause, no subsequent Legislature could, because by the Constitution the power of filling the vacancy would seem to be reposed only in the first Legislature which met after the vacancy. The language is: "The Executive thereof may make temporary appointments, until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies." If they do not fill it then, I think, by strict grammatical construction, the power is gone from them. This is an illustration of the well-known and strictly just rule, that if one sticks to the letter, his arrow will stick in the bark, and not penetrate beyond the surface. I am constrained, therefore, to vote that the gentleman from Vermont is not entitled to his seat.

Mr. TOUCEY. Mr. President—

Mr. RUSK. I propose, if the Senator will allow me, to move to postpone the further consideration of this subject until to-morrow, in order that we may have an Executive session. I understand that others wish to speak, so that we shall not get through to-day, at all events.

Mr. MASON. The Senator will allow me to say that I have learned that there are many Senators who desire yet to be heard, and I do not think there is any probability of having the vote taken to-day; but I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to have the vote taken, and the question disposed of, if possible.

Mr. TOUCEY. I am willing, personally, to take any course which may be agreeable to the Senate. I shall not occupy much time in submitting my views in regard to this question. Being a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and not having participated in its deliberations on this subject, I feel as if it were due to myself that I should express my views, which are in opposition to those of a majority of the committee who participated in the report.

I have listened with attention to the debate in favor of the right of the honorable gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PHELPS] to a seat here; but I confess, sir, I have not been able to bring my mind to any doubt—any real, practical doubt—as to the matter of right. I should, personally, be very glad to be able to vote in favor of allowing him to retain his seat; but with the view which I entertain of the provision of the Constitution under which this controversy arises, it is impossible for me to do so. Sir, I think that the particular intent, and the general intent, of the Constitution are both against his retaining the seat; and, although I have attended very strictly to the construction which he has put upon this clause, yet I do not think that it is justified, either by the letter or by the spirit of that instrument.

Now, sir, there is one general provision, to which, I think, in giving a construction to the clause under consideration, particular attention should be drawn. It has already been often alluded to:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years."

This is a general proposition, universal in its terms. It confers upon the Legislature the exclusive power to appoint members of this body. No language could be adopted which would be more general and comprehensive. And in this language the framers of the Constitution, and the people who adopted it, evinced the most entire and unlimited confidence in the Legislatures of the States for the discharge of this duty. I would state it, as a proposition to which there is no exception, that when the legislative body has an opportunity to act upon the subject, the Executive has no right to act upon it. There is no intent to grant to the Executive a power to supervise the action of the Legislature. There is no intent to give to the Executive the power to supply an omission, to remedy a neglect, or to overrule a decision of the Legislature. If the Legislature see fit to postpone the subject, I apprehend they have a right to do so. If they permit the subject to pass by silently, or if they come to a formal resolution to postpone it to a future session, they have a right to do so. And in neither of these cases has the Executive any power to revise their action. The only power to revise it is with the people. I will put the strongest case that can exist. If the members of the Legislature should undertake to subvert this Government, and should refuse from thenceforward to appoint Senators to represent the State here, there is no remedy for it, except with the people, by electing a Legislature that will discharge its constitutional duty. There is no express provision to enforce this duty except that imposing upon the members of the legislative body an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and that reserving to Congress the power to make or alter regulations in regard to the time and manner of choosing Senators.

Now, sir, if it had been the intention of the framers of the Constitution to provide that if the Legislature fails to appoint, the Executive might, in order to supply the want of representation arising from the omission of the Legislature, there would have been express words to that effect in the Constitution. "Whenever there is a vacancy not filled by the Legislature the Executive may make a temporary appointment" would have been sufficient. But there is nothing of the kind. On the contrary, to the general provision which I have noticed, there is one single exception only, limited to the case of a vacancy that must inevitably happen, and that exception is when an unexpected vacancy arises, which the Legislature could not foresee. In that case there must be a vacancy in the representation until the meeting of the Legislature, unless some further provision is made for a temporary appointment outside of the Legislature, and therefore a power is devolved upon the Executive. With regard to that, the clause of the Constitution is in these words:

"And if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

"If vacancies happen;" that is, if they occur, upon a contingency that could not be foreseen, a power is granted to the Executive; and hence, if the vacancy occurs by the expiration of the senatorial term, no power is given to the Executive to make a temporary appointment, because the preceding Legislature knows that the vacancy will occur, and it is its duty to fill it; and therefore the Executive has no power. Now, in that case, if the Legislature do not make an appointment, it is then equally important, as in all other cases, that there should be a full representation; but no power is given to the Executive, because the Legislature has had no opportunity to act, and either silently or expressly has postponed action. That is according to the uniform course of precedents since the case of Mr. Lanman.

"If vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State." If the Legislature is in session, and a vacancy happens by death, resignation, or otherwise, and the Legislature permits the subject to pass over, or postpones it, it is perfectly clear that the Executive has no power. Because, again, the Legislature has had an opportunity to act, and the exception was not intended to extend to any case of that kind. Here, again, there is the same reason which is urged in behalf of the Senator from Vermont that he should keep his seat, that there was a necessity that the State should be fully represented; and yet it is not a constitutional necessity in the view of the framers of the Constitution. They had confidence in the Legislatures of the States; and if the Legislature has had an opportunity to act upon the subject, they did not think it necessary, for the purposes of the Constitution, to devolve any power upon the Executive.

If, again, the Executive omit to make a temporary appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature, and the Legislature omit to act also, there is the same reason why the Executive should have the power to make temporary appointments as before; but every one admits that he has no power, and for the same reason that the Legislature has had an opportunity to act, and therefore no power is given to the Executive. Or, again, if the person appointed by the Executive should resign, or die, during the next session, or after the session, there is no power in the Executive to make a temporary appointment; and yet the same reason exists which seems to be relied upon in the present case.

In the case that arose in Arkansas, where, by casting lots here in this Senate, after the adjournment of the Legislature of Arkansas, the term of one of the Senators expired before the next meeting of the Legislature, this body held that there the Executive might make an appointment. It was a new appointment. It was to commence a term; but the Legislature, at the next preceding session, could not have foreseen that there was to be any vacancy, and the vacancy that occurred did happen upon a contingency, and therefore the Executive had no power. But there is no case where, according to the settled course of decisions in this body, according to all the precedents except those that were overruled more than thirty years ago, there is no case whatever where the Legislature has had an opportunity to act, and fill a vacancy, and has not done it, in which it has been held that the Executive could then interfere; and the reason is, because the framers of the Constitution, as clearly appears in every part of it, trusted implicitly and exclusively in the Legislatures of the several States to discharge that duty when the subject was before them; and, therefore, in their views, no constitutional necessity for Executive interference existed. The Legislature is the organ of the State as a sovereign State, and, therefore, has the appointment of those who represent it in that capacity; and the whole power of appointment is conferred exclusively upon the Legislature, whenever it can have the opportunity to exercise it.

There is no principle incorporated in the Constitution by which its action or non-action can be supervised or controlled by the Executive.

"Which shall then fill such vacancy." The power of the Legislature does not arise from that expression. It had already been granted. It is much broader, and would exist if that expression were not there. The expression is inserted for the purpose of showing clearly that the temporary appointment shall not extend beyond that meeting of the Legislature; that it shall then terminate; that the Legislature shall then fill the vacancy by exercising then its general power of choosing a Senator; and it was not presumed that that duty would not be performed. If, indeed, in consequence of the State of public affairs, the Legislature resolve to postpone the election until next session, that action of the sovereign State upon the question is conclusive.

The whole argument on the other side is intended to bear upon the true construction of a few words, "the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature." Does the word "until" qualify the next preceding word, "appointments;" or still farther back, the words "may make?" I think that it qualifies the word "appointments," and that it is to be an appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature; and that the temporary appointment is to terminate, at all events, with the next meeting of the Legislature. It is a forced construction to say that the word "until" qualifies the previous words "may make," which confer the power. If that had been the case, the collocation of the words would have been different. The Executive thereof may, until the next meeting of the Legislature, make temporary appointments, &c.; but instead of that, the expression is, "the Executive may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature." The grammatical construction, and the plain, obvious meaning, I think, to be as generally, I may say, almost universally, understood, that the appointment was qualified by that word. If it be said that one has an appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature, it would generally be understood that the appointment was limited to that time.

There are three classes of precedents on this subject. I shall refer but briefly to them. One is, that where the Legislature next preceding the vacancy has knowledge that the vacancy will occur, as where it does by the expiration of the term, there that Legislature may and ought to fill it; and, in that case, there is no power conferred upon the Executive; and for the reason that I have stated, that, in the view of the framers of the Constitution, and of the people who adopted it, there was no constitutional necessity for it, it being deemed a sufficient provision that the Legislature should have the opportunity to act. The second class is where the vacancy happens upon a contingency that cannot be foreseen during the recess of the Legislature. In all those cases, including that from Arkansas, it is held that the Executive may make an appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature, because such necessity exists. The third class is that which has already been alluded to—where it has been decided that the appointee of the Executive can hold beyond the first day of the next meeting of the Legislature, and through its session, unless prevented by an intermediate legislative appointment.

Notwithstanding the doubt which has been cast over the propriety of this class of precedents, they are, I think, to be vindicated. They give, in my judgment, the true construction of the Constitution. I think the decision in this class of cases is entirely right, and I will state my reasons for it.

"The meeting of the Legislature." These words are susceptible of two distinct meanings. One is the act of their first coming together—the moment when they meet. That is the meeting of the Legislature, in a very narrow and limited sense of the term. The other is, that the meeting of the Legislature comprehends the whole period of its being assembled. It meets from day to day, and the aggregate of its meetings from day to day, until the time of its final adjournment, is the meeting of the Legislature. Thus, we say, the Legislature passed such a law at its meeting in January or in May—not at the moment when they met, but at the session in January or in May. In this sense it is precisely equivalent to the word "session." It embraces the whole. If I were to say at the January meeting of the Legislature of Maryland such a thing was done, no one would suppose that I meant the first moment of their coming together, but that the act done by them was during the session of the Legislature; that is, the aggregate of the meetings from day to day. And it is precisely so in regard to the word "session." We have a morning session and an evening session. We adjourn from day to day; and the aggregate of all these sessions is designated by the general term, the session of the Legislature. This is the popular meaning of the term. So in regard to the words "until," "to," "unto," "from," and "after." All these are words which are either exclusive or inclusive, according to the meaning of those who make a contract or enact a law. If there is power to grant leases for three lives, or twenty-one years, and the lease is from the day of the date, it is construed to include the day of the date, in order to give it validity. So if I enter into a contract—to put a very plain case—to keep a horse until the 1st of January, when the owner is to call for it, I am not to turn that horse loose at one minute past twelve o'clock on the morning of the first day of January, but my contract is that I am to keep it unto the first day, and through the first day, of January. I use this familiar illustration because it conveys very clearly the meaning of the term. It evinces it more perfectly, especially when we are considering an instrument which derives its force from the assent of the people; and the inquiry is, What did they mean, and what did the framers of the Constitution mean?

"The Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

To my mind it is very clear that the word "until" there comprehends the whole of the meeting of the Legislature, or until that body can act upon it during its session. And what renders it conclusive, is the expression which has been adverted to by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] "until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies." "Then" is precisely commensurate with the words "next meeting of the Legislature;" and if it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the vacancies should be filled during the whole session, they meant precisely the same thing when they spoke of an appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature.

That class of precedents is therefore right in which it is held that the person appointed by the Executive holds during the whole session of the Legislature which follows, unless, in the mean time, the vacancy is filled. But if it is filled, and notice given of it, then the appointment terminates. The other construction is a forced one. It is an unnatural construction. It discloses a recondite meaning—one which the mind, upon the first perusal of this clause, would not detect. It requires the ingenuity and the ability which, I may be permitted to say, have been displayed in a very great degree in this debate, to discover and to enforce the construction which has been urged in behalf of the right of the Senator from Vermont to hold his seat. I say that the framers of the Constitution would not, in my judgment, put that construction upon it. The people adopting it would be equally strangers to it. On the other hand, the construction which is generally looked upon as the true one, is in fact the palpable, obvious construction that strikes the mind upon the first perusal of the words; and then, when you may add that it is precisely in conformity with the theory of the Constitution, that the States are represented in the Senate, that its members are chosen by the State Legislatures, and that an Executive appointment is a mere exception founded upon absolute necessity, and limited by that necessity, it seems to me that the result is inevitable. I am, therefore, constrained to cast my vote against the resolution reported by a majority of the committee, and against the right of the claimant.

Mr. GEYER. As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and one of the majority responsible for the report under consideration, I regard it as part of my duty to state the reasons which influenced my vote in committee. I do not intend to discuss at large the questions involved, nor even to present an extended argument in support of my opinions; but I desire to present some considerations which seem to me to have been entirely overlooked by gentlemen who have spoken on the other side in this discussion.

There is but one section of the Constitution that makes any provision for the appointment of Senators or their term of office, and when that is analyzed, it will be seen that, if the letter is adhered to, there are several cases unprovided for.

Provision is first made for the representation of the States in the Senate, and the appointment of Senators for the full term; next for the classification of Senators, and then for supplying vacancies. Thus far no difficulty has arisen in reference to the two first clauses; but at a very early period a question was made upon the latter clause, which provides for appointments to supply vacancies, whether the word "until" qualifies the power of the Executive, or limits the term of the temporary appointment. It was deliberately resolved by the Senate that the appointment extended beyond the first meeting of the Legislature. Since then there have been a great number of cases in which that decision has been affirmed in practice; and, although it has been said that the case now under consideration is entirely new, it is only so in some of its parts; the principle involved has been long since decided, and that decision uniformly recognized in practice, as the true interpretation of the Constitution.

Since the commencement of the present session of Congress I heard it asserted, for the first time, that the temporary appointment is limited by the words "until the next meeting of the Legislature," while it is admitted that it extends beyond the commencement of the session, according to the decision and practice of the Senate. This position is attempted to be maintained by substituting the word "session" for the word "meeting," in the clause in question, so as to embrace the entire period between the meeting and the final adjournment of the Legislature. This interpretation, or, rather, change of the phraseology of the clause in question, is, in my judgment, inadmissible. It rejects the limitation on the power of the Executive altogether, or it extends it through the entire session of the Legislature, or else it assumes that the words in question limit both the appointment and the power of the Executive; but the word "meeting" means the commencement of the session in reference to the power, and the end of the session in reference to the appointment.

According to my understanding of the clause in question, the only qualification or limitation of the appointment, is the adjective "temporary." The Executive may, until the next meeting (the commencement of the session) make temporary appointments which ex vi termini continue until the vacancy is filled by the Legislature or the original term expires.

But let us look at the whole section which provides for the appointment and classification of Senators.

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years, and each Senator shall have one vote."

This clause provides for the original appointment of Senators, and their successors, for the full term, after the classification according to the next clause, which provides for the classification of the Senators first appointed, and does not in terms include Senators from the States thereafter admitted into the Union. The Senators are to be divided as equally as may be into three classes, and

"The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year."

When a new State is admitted into the Union, you class her Senators by lot, but not in virtue of any authority expressly delegated, but to carry out the intent of the framers of the Constitution, that the Senators should at all times be divided as equally as may be into three classes, and the terms of one third vacated at the expiration of every second year.

It has been repeatedly said by Senators that the primary power of appointment is vested in the Legislature; and it is true that they have not only the primary but the sole power of making an appointment for the full term, but their authority to supply a vacancy is conferred by the same clause which authorizes the Executive to make temporary appointments; and, according to the interpretation put upon that clause by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] it confers no power on the Legislature to supply a vacancy happening during the session of that body.

It is in these words:

"And if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill said vacancies."

Of course if we adhere to the letter of the clause, the Legislature can fill a vacancy only when it happens in the recess, not when it occurs during their session; and yet such appointments have been often made and never disputed, not because of any specific grant or recognition, by the Constitution, of the authority of the Legislature to make them. The power is derived by implication to carry out the apparent intent of the framers of the Constitution, that all vacancies should be filled so that, as far as practicable, each State should be fully represented at all times. The Executive is authorized to make temporary appointments only in cases where a vacancy happens in the recess of the Legislature, and he can exercise it only during such recess. Whenever the Legislature is in session, their power to fill the vacancy attaches, by the letter of the clause in question, if it happened in the recess, and, by necessary implication, if it occurred during a session.

The honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. TOWCE] has given us the true reading of the Constitution as it is, by supposing that if it had been the intention only to limit the power of the Executive, the precise phraseology of that part of the clause in question would have been, "the Executive may, until the next meeting of the Legislature, make temporary appointments;" and because the collocation of the same words, in the clause under consideration, is somewhat different, and therefore not quite so clear, he supposes that it was intended to limit the appointment to the meeting of the Legislature. The plain answer to this argument is, that the use of the adjective "temporary" qualifies and limits the appointment, and therefore no other limitation could have been intended. The term of each Senator is fixed by the Constitution; and of course when a vacancy occurs the tenure of an appointment filling such vacancy is also fixed. The "temporary appointment" is of uncertain tenure, it is determined when the vacancy is filled by the Legislature, which may be at any time during a session, and cannot, under any circumstances, extend beyond the end of the original term, though "the next meeting of the Legislature" shall not take place for a year or two thereafter.

I have said, that I understand it to be the general purpose and intentment of the Constitution that each State should be fully represented in the Senate. There are, however, a number of cases in which a vacancy may exist not expressly provided for by the Constitution. There may happen a vacancy during the sitting of the Legislature, but unknown to that body, and they adjourn without making an appointment. In that case, if the rule suggested by the honorable Senator from Connecticut is the proper one, we might, perhaps, recognize an appointment by the Executive, because the Legislature had not an opportunity to act. This he supposes to have been the principle of the decision in the case of a Senator from Arkansas—not from Iowa, which, by mistake, I think, was referred to by the Senator.

But the principle upon which the appointment by the Governor in the Arkansas case was recognized as valid, is, I think, mistaken by the Senator from Connecticut. The Senators from Arkansas were appointed for six years, subject, of course, to be assigned to a class to serve for a shorter period. The term of one of them [Mr. Sevier] was cut short by that process; and his term, so limited, expired during the recess of the Legislature. Thus an unexpected, an accidental vacancy, happened when the Legislature of Arkansas was not in session, and for that reason a temporary appointment by the Governor was recognized as valid.

That case, I think, might be referred to as authority in favor of the interpretation for which I contend. Certainly there was nothing in it, especially after the decision in Lanman's case, to refer the power of appointment by the Executive to any specific grant in the Constitution; the power was deduced by implication, in order to carry out the general intent of the Constitution, to have a full representation of each State in the Senate.

And now, sir, when we are to construe a clause of the Constitution admitted to be doubtful by the honorable Senator from Connecticut, and others, ought we to adopt a construction which will add to the number of cases in which a State must remain for a time unrepresented? On the contrary, is it not our duty, Mr. President, to give to doubtful words that interpretation most favorable to the intent of the framers of the Constitution of which they are susceptible? I have said that originally the controversy was whether the word "until" limited the power of the Executive or the appointment, or both. It was held that the appointment extended beyond the meeting of the Legislature, and consequently the power of the Executive only was limited. That being the established doctrine of the Senate, I maintain that it decides the case under consideration, unless the construction now for the first time contended for, is adopted, by which the words of the Constitution are to be displaced and others substituted.

We are told by the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER]—and his interpretation is adopted by the Senators from Virginia [Mr. MASON] and Connecticut [Mr. TOWCE]—that the word "meeting" means "session;" that is, the whole space of time between the first meeting and final adjournment of the Legislature. But the Senator from North Carolina informs us that the true rule of construction requires that the language of the Constitution should always be understood in its popular sense, except where technical words are used; and I understand him to assert that "meeting," in its popular sense, means "session."

Now, sir, I recognize the rule of interpretation mentioned by the Senator to be sound, but I cannot agree that "meeting" means session, in a popular sense. I have consulted all the lexicons to which I had access, and in no one of them have I found that signification attached to it. In all of them "meeting" means an assembling, a coming together—sometimes a congregation or collection of people—but it never signifies a legislative body, or the session of a Legislature. I think I am safe in affirming, that nowhere, in popular or legislative language, does this word "meeting" mean "session." Certainly the framers of the Constitution did not intend it in that sense. On the contrary, if we refer to other clauses in which the word is employed, we find it always used in the sense given by the lexicons—"the coming together."

The Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Foor,] who addressed the Senate on yesterday, read three clauses in which the word session occurs—in all cases comprehending the whole period between the first meeting and the final adjournment. There is, therefore, no warrant for the assumption that "meeting," in the clause under consideration, means session.

But if "meeting" means "session," as contended for by the Senator from North Carolina, one of two consequences must follow: either that it has a signification when applied to the Executive power that it has not when applied to the tenure of the appointment, or else the Executive power of appointment runs pari passu with the power of the Legislature, from the first meeting to the close of the session. Let it be remembered that the grant of power to the Executive and to the Legislature, in cases of vacancy, during the recess—and there is no limit of the Executive power but what is found in the words "until the next meeting of the Legislature;" and if that means the end of the next session, then the Executive may make temporary appointments as well after the meeting as before.

The Senator from North Carolina, however, contends, as I understand him, that the power of the Executive is not limited by the clause in question, but from its nature continues only during the recess, because the grant is made from necessity, and the power expires when that necessity no longer exists, that is, at the commencement of the next session of the Legislature. When the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. Phelps,] whose seat is now in question, replied that the necessity was quite as great after the Legislature adjourned as before the commencement of the session, the Senator from North Carolina said that it was not the necessity for making an appointment, but the necessity for the grant of power to the Executive.

Mr. BADGER. My friend entirely misunderstood me. The application made by the Senator from Vermont of the expression "necessity," as used by me, was, that there was a necessity for keeping the Senate full. I said that was not the necessity of which I spoke. The Constitution thought it proper and right, and reasonable and just, that every State should have a full representation; and consequently it provided, and the necessity of the case required, when a vacancy occurred in the recess of the Legislature, that body, the appointing power of the Senate being not able to act, that the appointing power should devolve elsewhere, to wit, in the Governor. The necessity was not that of having a representation here, but it was the necessity of devolving the power upon the Governor, the Legislature not being in session, in order that what the Constitution deemed to be right, proper, and just towards the States should be carried out.

Mr. GEYER. Precisely so. I did not misunderstand the Senator from North Carolina. But the necessity for conferring the power of appointment on the Executive before the meeting of the Legislature is not greater than it is after the adjournment without filling the vacancy. There is the same necessity that the office should be filled, and the same necessity for a deposit of the power of appointment after the close as before the commencement of the session. So that nothing is gained by the argument of the Senator, so far as the limitation of the power of the Executive is concerned; and we are obliged to return to the phraseology of the Constitution, which authorizes the exercise of the power only until the next meeting of the Legislature.

The honorable Senator [Mr. Badger] relies upon the word "then" as indicating the peculiar signification which he gives to "meeting." Now I suppose that one word may sometimes be of service in determining, in which of several known significations, another word in the same clause is used; but it can never be made available to change the meaning, or authorize the substitution of another word. Another objection to the use attempted to be made of the word "then," upon which the Senator from North Carolina relies with so much confidence, is, that the vacancy must continue in this case until the fourth of March, 1855; and in every case in which there happens a vacancy not filled at the close of a session of the Legislature, the seat will remain vacant until the original term expires. If the Legislature must then, (during that session,) and at no other time, fill the vacancy, the seat in controversy may be vacated by a vote of the Senate, but Vermont cannot fill the vacancy.

Mr. BADGER. The Constitution has already conferred the power to elect Senators. The language there is imperative, that at the next meeting of the Legislature they shall fill the vacancy. It is not to confer a power, but to require the discharge of a duty.

Mr. GEYER. The appointment of Senators for the full term of six years is provided for by the first clause of the third section, but that clause does not authorize appointments to supply vacancies; such appointments are provided for only in the second clause of the same section, and nowhere else in the Constitution.

Mr. President, I cannot better express my understanding of the true construction of the Constitution than by reading from the speech of the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Mason,] delivered when the report on the case of Mr. Winthrop was before the Senate. And I will here say, that if I am in error, I must attribute it to the report of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Butler] in that case, and the speech of the honorable Senator from Virginia. I will now read a few sentences from that speech, which, I think, has not been answered. The honorable Senator said:

"I submit, then, with perfect confidence, that the word 'until' is intended to limit the period within which the Executive may appoint, and to limit nothing else. The Executive may appoint until the Legislature meets. But when the Legislature meets, the power vested in the Executive ends. The word 'until,' then, limits the time within which this duty shall be discharged by the Executive, and it limits nothing else. It has been construed by some, I believe, to limit the period during which the appointee of the Executive shall continue in the Senate. It does not fix such limit at all. The term of the office is six years; and if a 'vacancy' occurs in that term, that vacancy, in the contemplation of the Constitution, is not filled until somebody is appointed for the whole of the remainder of the term."

"It is asked what would be the case if the Legislature does not fill the vacancy? It is not in the power of the Constitution, by any mandate, to coerce the appointing power. The Legislature may or may not act, as it may seem best. There is no means by which you can compel a Legislature to discharge its duties; but if the Legislature does not fill the vacancy, I apprehend the temporary appointment would continue. There is no limit to that temporary appointment but the filling of the vacancy. Nothing ends the temporary appointment but the filling of the vacancy."

This is precisely the view I take of the question, expressed in better language than I can command.

I now read from the report made by the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. Butler,] then, as now, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary:

"Your committee are of the opinion that the sitting member under Executive appointment has a right to occupy his seat until the vacancy shall be filled by the Legislature of the State of which he is a Senator, during the next meeting thereof. To fill such vacancy, it is not only necessary to make an election, but that the person elected shall accept the appointment."

According to this report, the duration of the temporary appointment depends not upon the meeting or the adjournment of the Legislature, but upon other events—an appointment to supply the vacancy, and the acceptance by the person appointed. The appointment and acceptance alone put an end to the temporary appointment. It cannot be that the temporary appointment is terminated by the close of the session, if it is to continue until the acceptance of an appointment by the Legislature. The person appointed may not accept at all, or not until after the adjournment of the Legislature. In fact, he may be dead at the time of the election, and that fact unknown to the Legislature then, or at the time of adjournment; but, according to report, the temporary appointment continues until there is an acceptance.

It appeared to me very clear that the strength of the argument in Mr. Winthrop's case was decidedly against those who contended that the appointment was limited to the meeting of the Legislature, and in favor of the position maintained by the Senators from South Carolina and Virginia, that the limitation applied only to the power of the Executive, and not to the tenure of the appointment—which I think is the true interpretation of the clause in question. If, as it has often been decided, the "temporary" appointment extends beyond the first day of the session, there is no limit but in the nature of the appointment, unless we substitute "session" for "meeting," or attach to the latter a signification that does not belong to it.

The appointment is qualified only by the adjective "temporary," but the power to fill the vacancy is vested by the same clause in the Legislature, which power may be exercised on the instant of their next meeting, or at any time thereafter. And this, I suppose, to be the meaning of the words "which shall then fill such vacancies."

I trust, Mr. President, that I have made myself understood; and if I have, I am sure I said enough to justify my concurrence in the report of the committee, and to defend the opinions I have expressed on the question under consideration.

Mr. STUART. Mr. President, supposing that whenever the question is taken on the resolution now pending before us, I shall vote upon it, and differing, as I do, in some respects, from the views submitted by Senators on both sides, I shall ask the attention of the Senate for a few minutes, not while I argue the question, but only while I state the grounds upon which my vote will rest. I then, sir, for the purpose of illustrating my own views, submit, that what is termed the primary power to appoint Senators is vested in the Legislatures of the respective States. Having done that, the framers of the Constitution evidently deemed it necessary to provide for the happening of vacancies when there should be no Legislature in session. To provide for such a contingency, therefore, we find the provision in the Constitution, to which reference has been so frequently made in the course of this debate, for the purpose of ascertaining how that vacancy can be filled. It provides, that temporary appointments may be made by the Executive. Now let me ask Senators to suppose that the provision stopped at that point, and, to make myself clearly understood, I will refer to the very language:

"And if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments."

I ask, sir, suppose the language had stopped there? Two questions would have arisen: first, how long can he make those appointments—for what length of time? That question is answered by the words, "until the next meeting of the Legislature," clearly; and it seems to me, and has from the beginning of this discussion, nothing short of a perversion of the English language, to assume that the words "until the next meeting of the Legislature," qualify anything except the power of the Executive to appoint. As I said, the mere interrogatory—how long may he make these temporary appointments?—is answered by the words "until the next meeting of the Legislature," and he may make just as many as shall be necessary. If he appoint an individual who declines, he may appoint another. If his appointee dies or resigns, he may appoint another; and so on successively "until the next meeting of the Legislature."

What is the other question? It is as to the tenure of the appointment after the Executive has made it. And I submit again, that if the language were this: "And if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature"—if that were the only provision in the Constitution, there would be no limit upon the tenure of that appointment except that of the original term, the vacancy in which the appointment was intended to supply. But the very next words which follow, in my judgment, do limit it: "which shall then fill such vacancies." To what does the word "which" refer? To the Legislature. The Constitution, then, having given, in the previous language, the power of the Governor to appoint, by this language terminates the limitation of the office; and why? By providing distinctly how and when another appointment shall be made—not a temporary appointment, as the first, made by the Executive, is designated, but an appointment which shall fill the vacancy; that is, they shall appoint for the whole unexpired term. Now, the question is asked, supposing the Legislature does not act, what then? Here I think that we might with great propriety have stopped, if we had considered nothing except what the framers of the Constitution evidently had in view, and what the framers of all laws have in view when they enact a statute. They proceed upon the presumption that the power conferred will be used; and this case, or any other similar case, never could have arisen if the evident intention of the framers of the Constitution had been carried out by the Legislature of Vermont.

Now, Mr. President I submit—and I do it certainly with great deference to the source from which the opinion comes—that the chief difficulty which has arisen in this question has been from supposing that the framers of the Constitution intended that the Constitution itself, by its own effect, should keep each State represented in this body. There was no such power; there is none such now; but they did intend so to frame that instrument that every State should have the opportunity, full and complete, to have itself represented in this body. Having received the opportunity, if the State does not see fit to exercise its right, the only answer to the whole thing is, that the State chooses not to be represented here.

The question is asked, suppose the Legislature, at its next session, shall decline to elect, can a succeeding Legislature exercise that authority? Here, I think, we might safely return to the case of the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON] wherein he says, that certain views put forth by him on another occasion were not within the true limits of that case, but were what the courts call obiter dicta, and that neither he nor the Senate is bound by them.

Profiting by that experience, I might say that this case does not embrace that question, and for that reason alone might very properly decline an answer. But, sir, I will venture a mere suggestion, and will qualify it by the rule which the Senator has laid down, for I should feel myself at perfect liberty, if that case should ever arise, to disavow this view, if, on a more full examination, I should think it incorrect. But I make the suggestion for the consideration of Senators, that without this provision of the Constitution the fair intendment of the instrument, and of the prior portion of this section, would be that the Legislature, whenever in session, could fill a vacancy if there was one existing; and to strengthen my supposition upon that point, let me call the attention of the Senate to this language:

"If vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State—"

Evidently, sir, by intendment, saying, that if they happen while the Legislature is in session there is already a power to fill them without this provision; so that I venture the suggestion, that if the Legislature of Vermont hereafter shall fill this vacancy, the power will be found, not in the clause which we are considering, but in the general clause preceding it, which confers on the Legislatures of the respective States the power to appoint Senators.

The only question, therefore, left in this case is, how long does this office continue? I have said that the language is clear to my mind, that the limitation contained in the words "until the next meeting of the Legislature" refers to the appointing power held by the Executive, and to nothing else; but that the next words, "which shall then fill such vacancies," give the power to the Legislature then in session, and give it during that entire session. Now let me illustrate it for a moment, and I have done. If vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the Legislature shall meet. That is the meaning of the language; and that the Legislature having met shall proceed to fill the vacancy. Now, sir, the intendment of the Constitution evidently is, that they may exercise that legislative discretion on this subject which they do upon any other legislative subject; and at any time during that session, when it shall be convenient to them, they may make the appointment which shall fill the vacancy. But if they follow the direction of this provision in the Constitution, they must fill it at some time during that session. And thus the words "which shall then fill such vacancies" terminate the temporary appointment made by the Executive, by directing when and how the whole vacancy shall be filled.

As the framers of the Constitution presumed that the Legislature would exercise the power hereby conferred, if they do exercise it, then the intention of the framers of the Constitution is complete; the organization of this body is complete; and there is no necessity for looking further. But I answer the other question by saying that if you go an inch beyond this, you have to conclude that a State may not refuse to send Senators here at all. They may do that. The States may refuse to elect at all. They may refuse to elect at the commencement of a term, and the Constitution does not and could not provide a complete remedy for such a case. If the power in that case were given to the Executive to appoint, he might omit or refuse to exercise it, and the State thus remain without its full representation here. So if they refused to exercise this power the answer to the argument is, the State chooses not to be represented. My view then, it will be seen, is predicated upon a different statement from that made by the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PETTIT] who opened the argument on this question. He insists that the Constitution intends that the State shall be represented. There, in my judgment, is the error. The Constitution intends that the State shall have an opportunity to be represented. If it will not, when that opportunity is presented, embrace it and be represented, the Constitution contains no power to compel it to do so. The State chooses not to be represented, and having made that choice, the Senate has only to determine that it is to be bound by it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, when the case of Mr. Winthrop was under consideration, I, among others, took occasion to submit some observations to the Senate upon the question then and now involved; and I felt myself then as concurring in opinion with a majority of the Senate. Upon a review of the opinions then expressed, some gentlemen have concluded that they were wrong, and they now retract those opinions. So far from that being the case with myself, I feel only the more confirmed in the views which I then expressed—confirmed, I believe, by the very strong arguments which I have heard on this case.

It would seem that the construction which has been contended for by some, that the word "until" in the clause of the Constitution under which this question arises, limits the tenure of the office, is now almost abandoned. It is true, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. TOUCER] seems still to adhere to that construction; but I think he will, at some time or other, have to review his speech; and if he adheres to his opinions in regard to the results to which his views lead, he will have to assign other reasons than those which he has assigned at this time. He says that, in order to make the Constitution limit only the power of appointment, or the time within which the appointment may be made by the Executive, a different collocation of language must be used. In order to give the sentence that signification he words it thus: "If vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may, until the next meeting of the Legislature, make temporary appointments." Construct the sentence in that way, and, for my life, I cannot see any difference in its signification. In reality that was the very construction of the language which I proposed to make, in order to show the real meaning of the Constitution, for it only makes more plain what the clause is as it now stands. You do not change in the least the grammatical sense of the sentence by placing the word "until" immediately after the word "may." If the sentence were constructed in that way the Senator from Connecticut concedes that it would be a limitation upon the time within which the Governor might make an appointment; and if so, I do not see how he can avoid conceding that it constitutes just such a limitation reading as it now does.

If the limitation, then, be merely upon the appointing power, if it merely applies to the time within which the Governor may make appointments, let me ask gentlemen where they get a limitation on the tenure of the office. It is conceded by others that the word until limits that time, and that only; and no language could have been more emphatic on this point than that which has been quoted from a speech which was made by the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. MASON] upon the case of Mr. Winthrop. Then where is the limitation upon the office?

If the question should be asked, why cannot the Governor appoint after the next meeting of the Legislature, the answer is a simple one. The Constitution gives him no such power. Then, when gentlemen are asked where they find a limitation upon the tenure of the office, and they answer in the Constitution, I ask them to show it. They cannot do it; and, finally, after conceding that the word until does not limit the tenure of the office, they fall back upon their old position, and say it does. I say, then, that you can find nothing in the Constitution to limit the office, except the happening of an event—an election by the Legislature—which it is clearly inferable from the Constitution does limit it.

But, sir, it is contended that that election is to be at the next session of the Legislature, under the words "which shall then fill such vacancies." Here I will, for an instant, review the argument of the Senator from Michigan on this point, and do it interrogatively. Suppose the Legislature do not exercise the power to fill the vacancy at that next session, what follows? The Senator answers, they can do it afterwards. Is that derived from the Constitution? You say the word "then," in this clause, does not mean "afterwards," but "at that time." Now, we contend that it means afterwards. Let me illustrate this. Suppose I should say to one of the messengers of the Senate, "There are several places to which I wish you to go: I wish you to go to the Treasury Department," and I should stop with that. He would ask, "Where shall I go then?" It would seem nonsensical for me to answer, "Why, go to the Treasury Department then." He would answer, "Well, but I do not mean then in the particular sense of time when I shall go to the Treasury Department, but after I go to the Treasury Department, where shall I go then?" "Why, go to the Treasury Department, and then go to the War Department." This would clearly imply, that after he had gone to the Treasury Department, he should go to the War Department.

Now the Constitution declares, that "if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then," that is, afterwards, "fill such vacancies." If "then" is here used in the sense of "at that time," the power is gone, unless they fill the vacancy at the next meeting. I concede that it is not gone, but I say that it is gone if "then" is used in that sense, and it is gone under the common-law construction in similar cases. We know that the law in regard to corporations is such that where the power of electing officers upon a particular day is given by the charter or by letters patent of the sovereign, and that day is permitted to pass without the exercise of that right, the corporators cannot exercise it afterwards; and the corporation is dissolved. So it will not do to give to the Constitution the construction that the word "then" signifies "at that time;" but the meaning is, that the Governor may exercise his power of appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature, and "then," that is, afterwards, the Legislature shall take up the subject and fill the vacancy. That is the plain signification of the clause.

Well, sir, if we cannot find in the Constitution a limitation in express terms upon the tenure of the office, we have necessarily to infer what will constitute a limitation upon it; and I think the Constitution, with equal plainness, limits the tenure of the office, not by any fixed time, but by the happening of an event. What is that event? It is the filling of the vacancy which the Legislature have power to fill; and when that event occurs, and not till then, the temporary appointment is determined. There is nothing in the Constitution which limits the tenure in point of time. It is limited by an event spoken of in the Constitution, which event is the filling of the vacancy by the Legislature. The Legislature are not to fill the vacancy at the very moment when the Governor ceases to exercise the power of appointment, but afterwards; and the word "then" in this clause clearly means "afterwards."

Then, sir, in this case, has that event mentioned in the Constitution happened? Have the Legislature of Vermont brought about that event? Has the contingency happened which is to determine the right of the Senator from Vermont to occupy his seat? I think not. If then you cannot find in the Constitution a limit to the office except in so far as it is limited by the happening of this event, I ask, is it not a forced construction which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Toucey] would put upon the Constitution, when he makes the word "until" limit as well the tenure of the office as the time within which the Governor shall exercise the appointing power. I think that, and not the construction given by those who take the opposite view, is the forced construction. He would evidently do violence to the grammatical construction of the sentence, and I cannot believe the framers of the Constitution were such poor grammarians that they could not construct a sentence as simple as this, so as to express their meaning. I have no doubt that the meaning of the convention was precisely what they have expressed in the Constitution, that, until the next meeting of the Legislature, the Governor may make temporary appointments, and that then, that is afterwards, the Legislature may fill the vacancy; and when it is filled, and not before, the office created or the seat conferred by the temporary appointment shall be ended.

It will not do to say, in answer to this, that the temporary appointment spoken of in the Constitution might run on to the end of the full term. Suppose it should, and suppose the State says she is satisfied with the manner in which the seat is filled; and suppose the Legislature, for successive sessions up to the end of the term, should say, being satisfied with the sitting member, we will not elect, who would have a right to complain? The original power of appointment exercised by the Governor was certainly a constitutional power. The construction which determines the seat of the sitting member with the meeting or session of the Legislature is a forced construction of the Constitution; and why? Because you cannot find any such thing in the Constitution, and the language does not authorize any such construction, and the word "until" does not limit the duration of the office at all. This is a forced construction, because while you find nothing in the Constitution limiting the duration of the office, it speaks of an event which, in this case, has not yet occurred. The State will turn round to you and say: "You cannot turn out our sitting member, because the event on the happening of which his term was to expire has not occurred, and we think we are as good judges as you can be of the time when we shall fill the vacancy, and thus supersede the appointment of the Governor."

Now, sir, where is the great harm, where is the great injury, that will result from the construction for which I contend? Why, it is said party considerations may influence the appointment; and views have been presented which would lead one to suppose that my construction could be reprobated only because of the fact that parties might be differently constituted after the appointment from what they were before. In other words, it is supposed that a Governor making an appointment may not represent the will of the people. What if he does not? The people certainly have it in their power to elect a Legislature who will represent their views; and when they do it, that Legislature can elect a Senator whose political sentiments are in accordance with those of the people of the State. It will not do to complain that the people may do themselves the wrong of perpetuating a Legislature of the same political character as the Governor, and who may therefore sustain the Governor, and continue the appointee in his seat. If they were content with it we should have no right to complain. The State would be represented, and nobody would be injured.

There is really, Mr. President, very little left to be said on the subject, after the many and very able arguments which have been made; and I rose rather for the purpose of glancing at what scraps were left, than for the purpose of presenting any argument; and to throw out these views, that gentlemen may reflect and see whether there is in fact so much objection to the Senator from Vermont occupying his seat as it is contended there is. I cannot see where the great harm lies, and I cannot think that it exists after all. I am of opinion, that, in the mind of the convention that framed the Constitution, more importance was attached to the fact, that the States should be represented in this body, than to the manner in which their representatives should be chosen. I believed the convention, regarding the States in their sovereign capacity as equal, the smallest with the greatest, having the same amount of representation in the Senate of the United States, felt that it was vitally important that that equality should be maintained. They designed, in my opinion, when this clause of the Constitution was framed, that it should contribute, as far as possible, to keep up the full representation of the States in this body, and therefore, they give to the Governors of the States the right to appoint in the case of an accidental vacancy, and they limit the time within which the right shall be exercised. A Governor may exercise this right until the time of the meeting of the Legislature. If he exercises it, then, they say, there is a certain event which shall supersede his appointment, but there is no time fixed within which or at which it shall expire. It is the happening of the event—the election by the Legislature—which is to terminate the right of the Executive appointee to occupy his seat. That event not having happened in this case, my opinion is, that the gentleman who claims the seat is entitled to occupy it, and that Vermont is entitled to her full representation here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ADAMS in the chair.) Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. BADGER. It is of the highest importance, from the very nature of the question itself, that it should be settled by a full Senate. Many gentlemen are absent now; and if Senators are not disposed to discuss the question further, I would suggest that, if we could agree by the general understanding of the Senate, that this vote should be taken on Monday next, at one o'clock, we should probably have a fuller attendance than we have now. It is a question which should not be decided by a bare quorum, and I think there are not more than thirty-one or thirty-two Senators here now; and therefore I make this suggestion.

Several SENATORS. Why not to-morrow?

Mr. BADGER. To-morrow is private bill day; but, by common consent, we might take the vote then if the Senate desire it.

Mr. MASON. I have no objection in the world to the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina; but the Senator from Massachusetts told me this morning—and that led me not to interfere with the progress of the debate by a motion to go into Executive session—that he was called away, and would necessarily be absent from the city for a few days, on an occasion of a good deal of interest and concern. I would ask him, therefore, how far the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina would comport with his convenience?

Mr. EVERETT. It would be a great accommodation to me if the vote could be taken to-day; or, at all events, not later than to-morrow at one o'clock, if it can be done without any sacrifice, in the opinion of those most nearly interested.

Several SENATORS. Take the vote now. Send for absent members.

Mr. BADGER. I have no objection to that, if the Senate agree to it. I imagine that if the Sergeant-at-Arms were sent out, he could find several members. We can wait and see, at all events.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no motion to postpone. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. FOOT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Phelps] claims a seat in the Senate in virtue of the appointment conferred by the letter of the Governor of that State, which is in these terms:

STATE OF VERMONT, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, }
ST. JOHNSBURY, January 17, 1853. }

SIR: I have the honor to inform the Senate that I have this day appointed the Hon. Samuel S. Phelps, a Senator in Congress, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Hon. William Upham, until said vacancy shall be provided for by the General Assembly of the State of Vermont.

I have the honor to be, sir, with high consideration, your obedient servant,
ERASTUS FAIRBANKS.
To the President of the United States Senate.

This appointment was made to fill the vacancy which happened in the recess of the Legislature of Vermont, by the death of Mr. Upham. Mr. Phelps was, by this authority, admitted to a seat in the Senate at the last session. Since that, the Legislature met and adjourned without electing a Senator. Mr. Phelps claims the seat according to the terms of the appointment, "until the vacancy shall be provided for by the General Assembly of Vermont." This case depends upon the construction of the clause in the third section of the first article of the Constitution, which, after providing for the election and regular vacation of the seats of Senators in classes, directs that

"If vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies."

The great object—the general intent of this clause in the Constitution—was to prevent vacancies in the seats of Senators. That, therefore, ought to be the principal guide in the construction of the clause. We ought not so to interpret it as to create a vacancy, or to permit a vacancy to exist in any case, if we are not compelled to do so by express words or necessary implication. And we are bound to suppose that the framers of the instrument have not employed language to defeat their own object, if we can construe their language consistently with that object. If, in the investigation, we discover that where they desired to create vacancies in other offices, under similar circumstances, they have used entirely different words, and such as leave no room for doubt as to their intent, we should, I think, not admit words of doubtful meaning in this clause to have the same effect to create a vacancy.

The limitation in this clause is clearly a limitation on the power of the State Executive to appoint, and is not a restriction on the appointment itself. "He may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature," &c. It is not written, and it was not intended, that the tenure of the office should continue only till that event. To apply the limitation to the appointment, it would have been necessary to insert the words "to continue" after the word "appointments," and then the clause would have read thus: "The Executive may make temporary appointments, to continue until the next meeting of the Legislature." This construction has been long settled. Indeed I think it was never doubted that, by force of these words, the Governor of a State could not make a temporary appointment at any moment after the next meeting of the Legislature succeeding the happening of the vacancy. I believe this has been held so clear that no Governor ever ventured to make an appointment while the Legislature was in session; and in the case of Kinsey Johns, who was appointed by the Governor of Delaware on the 19th day of March, 1794, after a legislative session held in January, 1794, to fill a vacancy which happened in the recess by the resignation of Senator George Reed, on the 18th day of September, 1793, the principle was decided that no Executive appointment can be of any validity if made after the next meeting of the Legislature. The whole course of the Senate on this subject has been uniform. It has settled this, if it can settle anything, that the restriction arising out of the words "until the next meeting of the Legislature," is a restriction on the power of the State Executive to make a temporary appointment of a Senator, and not upon the term of the office.

In twenty-two cases enumerated in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, on the case of Robert Winthrop, the Senate may be considered as having fully sustained the principle that the temporary appointment by the State Executive extended beyond the next meeting of the Legislature, and was terminated by an election of a successor by the Legislature. This is a judicial question; and when deciding such a question, the Senate ought to be as much bound by precedent as any other judicial tribunal. The Senate never held a single case that the Executive power of making these temporary appointments extended beyond the next meeting of the Legislature.

[Mr. C. then entered into an extended argument to show that "meeting" of the Legislature and "session" of the Legislature were different in their meaning—the one applying to the time of assembling of that body, and the other to the whole period from that time to the end of the legislative term; and in reply to Mr. Mason, and others, he fortified his position by referring to the second clause of the fourth section of the first article of the Constitution, and to the second section of the same article, showing the meaning of the word "meeting," when applied to the assembling of Congress; also, to the fourth clause of the fifth section of the first article, and the sixth section of the same article, and the second section of the second article, showing the meaning of the word "session," as used by the framers of the instrument. He denied the conclusion to which the arguments of gentlemen who, opposed the claim to this seat had driven them, that the meeting and the session were the same in meaning, and that the meeting was identical with the adjournment. He then quoted the words of the second article relative to appointments by the President and Senate: "That the President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session."]

This clause is in pari materia with the clause relating to temporary appointments of Senators by the State Executive. It is evident that from the former the framers of the Constitution knew well enough how to limit these temporary appointments to the end of a session when they designed to do so; and the very fact that men so skilled in the use of language should have totally omitted to limit the duration of the senatorial appointment by the State Executive to the expiration of the legislative session next after the happening of the vacancy which caused it to be made, was strong evidence that they had no such meaning as is ascribed to them by those who deny the claim of Mr. PHELPS to the seat. No one had attempted to account for this difference of language on any other supposition than that the convention meant a difference in the duration of the terms of office.

The words of the first sentence in the third section of the first article are, that "the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years." The Senator from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] whose remarks presented the strongest view of the case made to-day by the opposition to the claimant of the seat, contended that the Legislature in this case would not derive its right to fill this vacancy hereafter, in case the Senate now held the seat vacant, from the clause in the third section, which directs that the State Executive "may make appointments till the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancy." Will he tell us, then, from what other clause that Legislature will derive the power to fill this vacancy for a broken term? The first sentence of the third section is the only other sentence in the Constitution which provides for a senatorial appointment. Does the Senator contend, under the authority of that section, that the Legislature can extend the term of six years beyond that period? Not he. He is too sound a lawyer for that. Does he contend that, by virtue of that provision, the Legislature can abbreviate the term and elect a Senator for one year instead of six, thus exercising the power to change the term and tenure of the office, and to destroy the permanency of the Senate? If not, how does he derive from this sentence the power of the Senate to elect for a broken term, (of say four or five years,) caused by the happening of a vacancy during the recess of the Legislature? Here, in the third clause of this section, is the power expressly conferred upon the Legislature of Vermont, to elect in case this seat is vacated, notwithstanding the omission of the Legislature to do it at their first session after the happening of the vacancy. For I hold the reasoning conclusive which would teach us that the word "then" in this clause does mean "afterwards," and not "at that time." The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WALKER] has explained and illustrated this so well that I will not repeat the grounds of this opinion. By interpreting these words, "the Executive may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies," to confer the power to fill the vacancy at any time after the next meeting, the Legislature, at a subsequent session, may fill it. By interpreting the same words as the opponents of the claimant do, to restrict the Legislature to the filling of the vacancy only at the time of the meeting, or during the session of the next Legislature, after the happening of the vacancy, the seat of Mr. PHELPS, if vacated now, would remain vacant to the end of Mr. Upham's term; for at no subsequent session could the Legislature fill it; and thus a seat might remain vacant for five years, without any power of the Executive or Legislature to fill it.

Mr. STUART. Will the honorable Senator point out what clause in the Constitution would authorize the Legislature to fill a vacancy happening by resignation or otherwise during its session?

Mr. CLAYTON. There is no clause expressly conferring such a power, but I concur with the honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. GEYER,] that it would be and ought to be exercised as a fair implication from the third clause in the third section. The power is expressly given in case of the vacancy happening in the recess; first, to the Executive; second, to the Legislature. But the denial that this power is conferred by this clause on the members of the Legislature at any other than the first session after the vacancy shows to what straights the opponents of the claimant are driven to sustain themselves. "Then," means in this clause "afterwards," and the meaning of the same word is sometimes "at the time," sometimes "therefore," and oftener still "after!" as if I now say to the Senate I will take my seat, then the Senate may vote. The true meaning of the word may always be gathered from the context or the intent of those who use it. In this case any other meaning than "after" leads to palpable absurdities.

Sir, when this case was first presented to my consideration, my inclination was against the claim of the gentleman from Vermont. Subsequent examination has convinced me of my error. I have heard with great interest the speeches on both sides, especially the very able arguments of my colleague, [Mr. BAYARD,] and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, [Mr. BUTLER,] and others. As I know the Senate is impatient to vote, and the hour is late, I shall omit much of what I intended to say to sustain the clear and cogent reasoning of Mr. PHELPS. I am the better reconciled to this omission, because I think a careful examination of that argument will satisfy the country of the justice of his claim without any aid from me. But let me say, in conclusion, that I hold the great intent of the whole third section of the first article to be to prevent or to fill vacancies in the Senate, not to create them. That construction of this section which best answers the wishes and fulfills this great design of the framers of the Constitution (to prevent vacancies) is the construction, and the true construction. I have long since learned, by experience, that vacancies in the seats here are greatly to be regretted. I rejoice when I find a Senator sent to supply a vacancy, viewing him as a friend, sent to aid and assist me in the national councils by his advice and his example. I shall seek to avoid the evil which the convention intended to prevent, and however apparent it is, or may have long been, from the speeches we have heard, that the Senators present will reject the application of the gentleman from Vermont, I shall take both pride and pleasure in recording my vote in favor of the resolution which recognizes his right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary, in these words:

"Resolved, That the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS is entitled to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States."

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 12, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clayton, Dodge of Iowa, Everett, Fessenden, Foot, Geyer, Morton, Norris, Sebastian, Wade, Walker, and Williams—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Clay, Dodge of Wisconsin, Douglas, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Hamlin, Hunter, Mason, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, and Toucey—26.

So the resolution was rejected.

Mr. BADGER. I desire now to submit a resolution, which I hope the Senate will immediately consider and adopt:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS a sum equal to the amount of mileage and per diem compensation of a Senator, from the day of his attendance at the present session to this day, inclusive.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 16, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to lay before the House a communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MATTESON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present the proceedings of certain public meetings held in the county of Oneida, in the State of New York, without distinction of party—one held at Rome in the said county on the 23d of March last, and the other held in the city of Utica on the 10th instant, remonstrating against the passage of the bill organizing territorial governments for Nebraska and Kansas, and protesting against the repeal of the Missouri compromise.

Objection was made.

SEIZURE OF THE BLACK WARRIOR.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the President's message in relation to the seizure of the Black Warrior was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I desire to press the motion now. I make it solely for the purpose of addressing the House for a few moments.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman from Ohio proceeds, the Chair asks leave to lay before the House a communication from its Clerk, in order that it may be referred.

The Clerk read the communication, transmitting a corrected estimate for the miscellaneous item in the deficiencies for the Clerk's office; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. A few days since, the House postponed the consideration of a certain special order, being House bill No. 1, I think, in regard to the graduation of the public lands. I propose an amendment to that bill in the shape of a substitute, which I ask the House to have printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where the bill now is.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Before the gentleman from Ohio commences his remarks on his privileged motion, I would suggest that the communication from the Clerk, instead of being referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, should be laid upon the table. The deficiency bill is now under consideration, and there will, perhaps, be no meeting of the Committee of Ways and Means before it is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the communication will be laid upon the table instead of being referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The communication having been already referred, the gentleman from Kentucky cannot accomplish his purpose except by a motion to reconsider, objection being made to the course suggested.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I should like to inquire if the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is of so privileged a character that a motion to lay it on the table would not be in order?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order if the gentleman from Louisiana could obtain the floor to make it; but he cannot take the floor from the gentleman from Ohio for that or any other purpose.

Mr. PERKINS. Then the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio as entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The floor was regularly assigned to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I believe I have the floor. I am too old a fogey to be caught in that way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio rises in his place to a privileged question. He was recognized by the Chair, and submitted the privileged motion to reconsider the vote of yesterday, by which the President's message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed. He has the right to occupy the floor on his motion if he claims it. The motion referred to by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr.

PERKINS.] would be strictly in order if he could obtain the floor for the purpose of submitting it. He cannot take the floor from the gentleman from Ohio for that purpose.

✓ Mr. GIDDINGS. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the gentleman from Louisiana should feel uneasy in reference to the motion which I have just submitted. It is my design to occupy the floor for a few moments only. If I could feel it consistent with the duty which I owe to the people and to this House, the President's message of last evening should remain undisturbed, as it has been already referred. On hearing it read last evening, I hoped that some political friend of the present Administration, some member recognized as such, would have called the attention of the country to its extraordinary character. It was not done. I trusted, if they failed, that some lending gentleman who had opposed the election of the present Executive, would have done what had been neglected by his friends. In that I was also disappointed; and in this extremity I feel constrained myself to detain the House with a few remarks in reference to its character.

✓ The circumstances attending the case, so far as we are informed, are few and simple in their character. An American steamer named the Black Warrior (perhaps the name was ominous) cleared from Mobile for New York, via Havana. On her arrival, in violation of truth, as is acknowledged by all the documents which we have received, in violation of the laws of Spain and the laws of fair and honest dealing, she was reported through her accredited officer that she was in ballast, when, in fact, she had four hundred or five hundred bales of cotton on board. In this there is nothing extraordinary—nothing unusual. It is frequently the case that steamboats entering foreign as well as our own ports violate our own revenue laws, as well as those of other nations. It appears that the laws of Spain render the commanding officer of a vessel smuggling goods into that country liable to fine, and the goods to confiscation. In this there is nothing in the Spanish laws to distinguish them from our own or those of any commercial nation. The laws are those of self-protection. They are those by which the revenues of the Government are secured. Whenever a ship enters the port of any nation, she voluntarily subjects herself, her crew, and cargo to its laws. On the arrival of the Black Warrior, the Spanish officers of the revenue found these cotton bales on board, and they were seized and held for trial; and if condemned, will be confiscated. In this there was nothing unusual.

I would call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that it is precisely the same case in all its bearings which was pursued by our authorities in regard to the British steamers of the Cunard line. They have, on more than one occasion, been seized for having goods on board in violation of our revenue laws. One was seized in New York precisely as the Black Warrior was seized. In Boston, since we convened here, another instance occurred. They were seized, and those goods not mentioned in the manifest were confiscated. No voice has come from Old England in remonstrance. She has not called on her Parliament to prepare for war. She expects her citizens who land in our ports to conform to the laws and to the revenue system which we have established. I will here say, however, that it is said in some of the documents on this subject, that the British steamers at Cuba have not been subjected to the Spanish law as the American steamer in question has been. The statement is, however, contradicted in the documents before us, by our consul at Havana. He declares, that on inquiry of the British consul, it has been ascertained that the British steamers had been subjected to the same scrutiny, examination, and laws, to which our steamer was subjected. In this respect we have received just the same treatment as all other nations have received, and are now receiving at the hands of the Spanish Government in Cuba. Sailing vessels of other nations have been seized and their cargoes confiscated on this identical law of Spain enforced in Cuba.

Sir, as I before remarked, there is nothing to distinguish this case, so far as we are informed, from the ten thousand cases that occur from time to time in our own ports, and in the ports of every commercial nation in the civilized world; yet, sir, this case has been regarded by the Executive as calling for extraordinary attention of Congress and the people. Some gentlemen in this Hall seem to have taken an interest in this case above all others. To that we make no objection. The resolution of the gentleman from Louisiana, across the way, [Mr. PERKINS,] calling for this information to be communicated, was most cheerfully accorded by the unanimous consent of the House. There is no man within the sound of my voice who opposed any objection. It was right and proper that all intelligence on this subject should be communicated to us. The resolution went to the President, and in response to that call for information, we yesterday received a full and complete answer. I will read it, because there should be no mistake in this business. The President says:

"In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 10th instant, I hereby transmit the report of the Secretary of State, containing all the information received at the Department in regard to the seizure of the Black Warrior at Havana on the 28th ultimo."

That is the first paragraph in the message of the President in response to our resolution. It is full and complete. It is to this extent, in accordance with the universal practice of this Government, from its earliest period down to the present day. And here let me say that this is the first instance in the history of Executive communications to this House, so far as my recollection extends, where a President has traveled out of the record and undertaken to obtrude his opinions on this House, or dictate to this representative body the course which they should pursue under such circumstances.

Sir, I call the attention of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to this point. (And, by the way, I want to say to my friend, [Mr. BAYLY,] that it is time he gave us that speech of his which he promised to deliver for the purpose of showing my errors in regard to the Amistad case. Some young friends in my district want to understand my errors which he promised to show, and have written to me for copies of his speech not yet delivered. I could not furnish them, but am waiting very anxiously for his speech on that subject. This by way of episode.)

As yet we have not heard from the Spanish Government. We know not what justification they will urge. Nor has the President thought proper to wait for any excuse or justification, but he addresses us, urging upon our consideration other matters outside of this seizure of the Black Warrior, and undertakes to call up the indignation of this body in reference to a transaction of ordinary character. I will read the next paragraph:

"There have been in the course of a few years past many other instances of aggressions upon our commerce, violations of the rights of American citizens, and insults to our national flag by the Spanish authorities of Cuba."

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, has this nation pocketed insults? Where—where are the Representatives of this nation; where is the former Executive who has pocketed an insult from Spain—that inert and decayed Government? When and where, sir, has the American flag been insulted by Spain? On what occasion? What officer of this Government has demeaned himself as so unworthy of the name of an American citizen?—and when did this Government sit silent under insult from the feminine majesty of Spain—that weak and powerless kingdom?

Sir, I myself feel that, coming from the people of the United States, and authorized and commissioned by them, we are authorized to act upon our own judgments—our own responsibility; and we are not to sit here and listen to lectures from the Executive upon the maintenance of national honor or our duties. We were not sent here to be dictated to from that or any other quarter; and I would that members in this Hall should feel the dignity of their position, and hurl back from this Hall such efforts to excite our indignation against the powerless Government of Her Most Christian Majesty of Spain. Sir, I would say to the President, consult your own duty, discharge your own obligations, and we will attend to ours. Why, sir, elected as he was by a most triumphant majority, the scepter of his power has already departed. His influence gone, he is now paralyzed, and unable to carry a majority of this body.

Sir, I served with that gentleman in this Hall.

I am an older man than he is, and I have seen more service than he has—I do not say in war, [laughter;] and I feel as competent to examine this subject as he is. Sir, this is a digression. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this encroachment upon our dignity and rights should be met by gentlemen in this Hall, and promptly rebuked. Other gentlemen may sit quietly under it, but I will not. The friends of the Administration may pocket these lectures; the opponents of the Administration, who have acted with the Whig party, may do it, but I will not do it.

However, I will not detain the House upon that point. The President goes further; he says: "The documents in these cases are voluminous, and when prepared will be sent to Congress."

Who asked the President to send them to us? Why does he attempt to protrude upon us documents uncalled for, which he has no authority or precedent to send us? Sir, let him transmit them, and I would like to see whether this House will order them to be printed. I wish to impress upon this Executive the fact that he is our servant, and not our master. I want to teach him—no, that expression is not, perhaps, courteous—but I desire to let him know that while he executes our laws, and makes suggestions to Congress, under the duty imposed upon him by the Constitution, as to such matters to which he wishes to call our attention, I will respect him. But how stands the matter here? Does he send this information to the other branch of the National Legislature? No, sir.

Mr. Speaker, has this communication been sent to the other branch? No, sir. Why are we called upon to prepare for war? The Senate is proceeding as usual with its ordinary business, just as though there were no war called for, unconscious of the necessity of calling up indignation against her girlish Majesty. The President does not pretend to communicate, under the constitutional provision, of calling the attention of Congress to matters which he may deem important. He says nothing to Congress. He speaks solely to this House.

But I must hasten to a conclusion; I have already detained the House longer than I intended. I ask attention for a moment to what I deem the most important part of this most extraordinary communication. It may be found in the two last paragraphs of the message, which certainly looks ominous. The President says,

"In view of the position of the Island of Cuba and its proximity to our coast, and the relations which she must ever bear to our commercial and other interests—"

I desire my friends upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs to look well to these "other interests," and see that their slaves do not suffer—

"It is vain to expect that a series of unfriendly acts infringing our commercial rights, and the adoption of a policy threatening the honor and security of these States can long exist with peaceful relations."

I need not tell gentlemen what that language means. Every member within the sound of my voice knows its meaning. The policy of Cuba, as it is now known and read of all men, is a "progress towards civilization; it is the emancipation of her slaves, an effort to strike off the shackles of her bondmen, and to allow them to stand forth clothed with the attributes of humanity." That is the policy which the President considers as "threatening the honor and security of these States." He then, in the last paragraph, advises a preparation for war. This, then, is the policy which we are called upon to guard against, and to involve ourselves in war, to prevent which we are to resort to arms, to the last dreadful resort of battle and deadly strife. In order to prevent the progress of civilization and freedom in Cuba we must prepare to send our countrymen to premature graves. Our freemen are therefore to die that Cuban slaves may continue to sigh and groan in chains.

The President calls for authority to resist these encroachments upon the barbarous institution of slavery in Cuba. He no longer holds to non-intervention; that only applies to Nebraska; but in Cuba he will interfere to maintain slavery, at the point of the bayonet, at the expense of our blood, our treasure, and our honor. This course of policy is in precise accordance with the views which the Executive organ has put forth for the last year, speaking the sentiments of the President, as I suppose. Indeed, some of the articles, it has been said, were written by members of the Cabinet. We have seen the Administration press of the country teeming with appeals to the passions of the people, in order to prepare them for war with Cuba. We have seen it heralded through those presses that her emancipadoes were to be set free. We have seen it proclaimed through the same press, that she had limited the price of slaves, that her scheme of colonization would eventually emancipate all her slaves; and those presses have appealed to the people to prevent this sad progress of civilization, lest it should interfere with the slavery of our southern States.

Every member is conscious of our diplomatic efforts, under a slaveholding President, when a hundred millions of dollars were offered to secure the slavery of Cuba from the influences there operating in favor of its then future overthrow.

Now we are officially called on by the President to arrest this advancing improvement in the moral and physical condition of Cuba, by the most decisive action in the power of the nation. Sir, nearly the whole southern press is teeming with articles similar to those put forth in the Union of this city. I have before me an extract from an article published in the Fairfield, South Carolina, Herald, of a recent date, which I will read to the House. It is as follows:

"Cuba is overlooked, Nebraska is fought for, and what will be the result of the fight? The future alone can tell. Both of these countries are about being snatched from the South; the loss of the latter would be but a slight restriction to slavery, while the former, in the hands of emancipated blacks, or of foreign Powers determined to emancipate, would be a total loss to the commerce of the world, and a death-blow to the extension of slavery."

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that is the sentiment of the whole southern press devoted to the support of this Administration; but it is no part of my purpose to stand here and read proofs in support of facts, with which every one must be acquainted, and which no member will doubt or deny.

I must also refer to the inaugural address of the President himself. When he came into power he declared to the people of the nation that he recognized the institutions of slavery in the southern States as standing upon the same basis as other recognized rights, and equally entitled to the support and protection of the Federal Government. I speak from recollection, and do not repeat the language, but I am certain I express the precise ideas which the President put forth. He holds that this Government, with all its mighty powers; with all its unlimited energies; with its character, as one of the great Powers of the earth; with all its moral, its political, and physical influence, is to exert its utmost energies and influence to uphold and protect the barbarous institutions of African slavery in the southern States. It is a deliberate attempt to revolutionize the Government of the United States. I pronounce it as such here, and I pronounce it as such everywhere. Sir, it was in vain that our fathers attempted to establish the great and undying truth, that all men are created equal, and that it is the province of Government to exert its power and influence for the security and maintenance of the rights of all the people to life and liberty, if these views of the Executive prevail.

Sir, this Administration is endeavoring to turn the energies of this nation to the overthrow of this great fundamental principle, which lies at the basis of this Republic. It is an effort radically to change its essential elements; to eradicate its life-giving, its vitalizing energies. I feel it my duty to meet and expose this design at its first distinct, unmistakable enunciation. The President now proclaims that intervention against freedom—against emancipation in Cuba—is to become the watchword of this Executive and his party.

I will further remark to the House, that I believe, in one of the States of this Union, resolutions are pending, or have been pending, censuring the Executive of the United States for his non-interference to prevent emancipation in Cuba. I repeat, that I am told through the public press, and that is my only source of information, that such is the fact at this time in Louisiana.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, (interrupting.) I should like to correct the gentleman as to that point.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I will hear the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. PERKINS. The Legislature of Louisiana is not even in session. Such resolutions were introduced and laid upon the table when it was in session.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Well, such resolutions were offered when it was in session.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. GIDDINGS. Certainly; I wish gentlemen to understand that when they desire to interrupt me, I yield the floor most cheerfully for any correction.

Mr. JONES. I understand that the gentleman has said that he has been informed through the public press that resolutions are before the Legislature of Louisiana complaining of the President, and denouncing him for not interfering to arrest the progress of civilization in Cuba. I tell that gentleman, sir, that I do not believe, in the first place, that he has seen any such statement in the public prints, and I say, further, that all such statements are false.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I am very happy to hear it. Gentlemen will not disturb my temper or ruffle my feelings when they tell me I am wrong. No, sir, in God's name, set me right. If I have done injustice to Louisiana, I recall it. The member, however, was not quite as polite to me as I would have been to him when he said he did not believe I had seen the statement in the papers. I tell him that I have seen it, and that he has no authority to tell me that I have not seen it.

Mr. JONES sought the floor.

Mr. GIDDINGS. No, I do not yield to the gentleman. When a man tells me that he does not believe what I assert on this floor, I do not listen to him a second time. When a gentleman treats me with propriety I will treat him with forbearance; but when a gentleman says he does not believe my word, I have done with him. I desire no further interchange of civilities with him. For the satisfaction of that member, I can tell him that he will find the statement to which I have referred in one of the papers of this city, in one of the papers of New York, and I think he will find it in many others; but his colleague has admitted all I stated.

Now, let me proceed a little further, and examine the time when this demonstration is attempted to be made. France and England have guaranteed to Spain the integrity of her colonial possessions in both hemispheres; and now, when England is employing all her energies, and France all her power, to protect the national liberty and national independence of Turkey; when a new and sublime spectacle is presented to the civilized world; when the Cross and the Crescent are floating together on the same breeze, intermingling their folds; when the Turk and the Christian stand side by side in favor of freedom; when the backs of France and England are opposing the progress of Russian despotism, and all their energies are employed to maintain the rights of nations and of mankind, we are called upon to strike them like assassins in their backs, to become the allies, the aiders and associates of Russian tyranny, to stay the progress of Christianity, of civilization in this western hemisphere—to meanly and piratically steal Cuba, in order that the chains of slavery may be more securely riveted upon her bondsmen. This does not look like chivalry. I do not know what the opinion of southern members may be; but to me this attempt to strike the back of a foe is not in accordance with the ideas of honor in which I was educated. If we are to set up as a nation of pirates; if we are to go into a war of conquest; if we are to set Great Britain, France, and Spain at defiance, let us do it manfully, in open daylight, and before the world. Let us at least show ourselves men. Let us have a fair fight. I am a man of peace. I go for peace; but if we are to fight, I would have an honorable combat. I would give the enemy notice, and meet as a foe worthy of our steel.

This, sir, is not the most objectionable feature of the message; but it is one which calls for consideration. I hope and trust that the crown of Spain will notice these preparations to wrest from her the Island of Cuba—the fairest jewel that ever graced the diadem of a European Queen—the richest and fairest of her dominions—and I trust that, in accordance with a policy heretofore adopted by her, on the approach of an American army, her slaves shall be emancipated. Then, if we conquer it, we shall conquer an island of freemen. The Army of the United States will meet those men who have been emancipated, and with arms in their hands will prefer liberty or death.

I do not know but that gentlemen will say that I am not patriotic; but if I were a Cuban; if I were one of those emancipated slaves, I would do my best to welcome every invader to a hasty grave.

If I were a native of Cuba, as I am of these States, I would defend it with all the energy that God and nature had bestowed upon me, and would lay my bones in the last ditch, or I would live to breathe the air of freedom. It would not be anything unusual, in the course of that Providence which sets the intelligence and wisdom of men at defiance, if this effort were to result in the promotion of human freedom. I hope and trust that it will. I have no fears of the war.

Now, let me tell gentlemen that I stand here as I did some sixteen months since; and I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the country, that the Executive never will dare to invade Cuba, for the reason that it will hasten the emancipation of her bondmen; and our forces, if sent there, instead of meeting the Creoles or an army of white men, will have to confront an army of emancipated slaves, who will welcome them to combat. These movements do not discourage me. They do not intimidate me. I never despond. On the contrary, I see the destiny of this nation wielded by that "HIGHER LAW" which will laugh the Executive and his influence to scorn; that higher law which he and his friends have so often ridiculed, while it was silently paralyzing his influence, and stealing from him his political breath, until he has already become a breathing political corpse. Sir, it is that higher law—it is that popular sentiment which is now rolling on in the North—which was manifested in New York the night before last—which was manifested in Philadelphia a day or two ago—which is manifested by the three thousand and fifty signatures of New England clergy to the petition presented at the other end of this Capitol—which is manifested in ten thousand public meetings throughout the land of the free—which is manifested in every log cabin in the West, and in the richer residences of the North—which is manifested in the pulpit and on the stump—which is manifested at the prayer meetings and at the political convocations—which must and will shape the destiny of this nation; before that we must bow, for it is the voice of God uttered by his people. Sir, we are a people who pray before we fight; and when we have said our prayers, and put on our armor, then our enemies had better stand aside than to meet us. [Laughter.]

Sir, I would intimidate no one; but I tell you there is a spirit in the North which will set at defiance all the low and unworthy machinations of this Executive, and of the minions of its power. When the contest shall come; when the thunder shall roll, and the lightning flash; when the slaves shall rise in the South; when, in imitation of the Cuban bondmen, the southern slaves of the South shall feel that they are men; when they feel the stirring emotions of immortality, and recognize the stirring truth that they are men, and entitled to the rights which God has bestowed upon them; when the slaves shall feel that, and when masters shall turn pale and tremble when their dwellings shall smoke, and dismay sit on each countenance, then, sir, I do not say "we will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your fear cometh," but I do say, when that time shall come, the lovers of our race will stand forth, and exert the legitimate powers of this Government for freedom. We shall then have constitutional power to act for the good of our country, and do justice to the slave. Then will we strike off the shackles from the limbs of the slaves. That will be a period when this Government will have power to act between slavery and freedom, and when it can make peace by giving freedom to the slaves. And let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that that time hastens. It is rolling forward. The President is exerting a power that will hasten it, though not intended by him. I hail it as I do the approaching dawn of that political and moral millennium which I am well assured will come upon the world.

Sir, no petty shrewdness, no trivial attempts by the Executive or members of this body to outwit or overreach the Almighty, or at outmanaging the order of His Providence; no attempt to avoid the just judgments of God, to evade his wrath, will then be regarded as efficient. Some of us are prepared for the conflict. I would speak a word of caution to the President, and to the friends who sustain him. They should prepare to have their works examined. The places which now know them will, in all human probability, soon know them no more forever. All the signs of the times must fall, or one year from this day there will be a larger majority in this body opposed to the Administration than there now is in its favor. They should therefore set their house in order, for they must soon pass from these Halls to that bourne from whence no traveler returns.

Mr. Speaker, I am told that my hour is near its close. I have already occupied your time longer than I originally intended. I rose solely from a consciousness that this message of the President ought not to go forth to the people of the United States unexposed. I felt that there should a commentary go with it. I believed that the attention of this House, and of the people, should be called to its consideration, so that the whole North, as well as the South, might see and understand the present ruling policy of this Executive and of his Administration. That policy, sir, is the support of slavery in Cuba, and its extension in the Territories of the United States. It stands forth in this message, over the official signature of the President. It is proclaimed to the country, to the world. With that policy I make no conditions. Against it I wage an unmitigated, unceasing warfare. Here and elsewhere, by the wayside and by the fireside, I assail and hold it up to the condemnation of all good men. Sir, the whole North is now presenting an array of moral and political influence which, in my opinion, will, at no distant day, redeem and regenerate the nation from the influences and the policy which would now pervert its powers, to the destruction of the great objects for which it was established. [See Appendix for a revised report of this speech.]

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not mean, this morning, to go into any extended discussion of the questions which the gentleman from Ohio has raised.

The communication which was made to the House yesterday has not yet been printed; and, sir, even the committee to which that communication was referred, has not had the opportunity of satisfying themselves of all the facts connected with the case. Such being the condition of affairs, it is perfectly obvious that this discussion is premature. Still, sir, there are some remarks which have been made by the gentleman from Ohio, which, it occurs to me, I ought to notice at once.

He has attempted to prejudice this case. The gentleman, I undertake to assert here, cannot be entirely informed about the subject upon which he has spoken; for although I know his diligence on most occasions, yet I know also my own on occasions of this sort; and I know I have not, with every facility at command to do it, been able to inform myself thoroughly upon the subject under discussion.

Mr. GIDDINGS, (interrupting.) I did not intend to prejudice the case of the Black Warrior. I only stated the facts so far as I was informed upon them; and stated that we had yet heard no answer from Spain, and knew not what her version of the matter would be. My comments were upon the residue of the message over and above and outside the case of the Black Warrior.

Mr. BAYLY. That is one of those points made by the gentleman, which, it occurs to me, I ought not to delay for a moment to answer. The gentleman says that the President has not, upon this occasion, satisfied himself with merely answering the call which the House made, but has volunteered a message. Well, sir, in this respect, in communicating with the Congress of the United States, there are two classes of cases in which the President is called upon to act. In one where he merely communicates the information, and sees no occasion to make recommendations of his own; and it is a matter of discretion whether he will content himself with that, or go further. The Constitution of the United States expressly requires the President—it goes further than to authorize him—it requires him to communicate to Congress in respect to such public matters as in his opinion may demand their attention. The language of the Constitution is: "He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient." And I beg leave to say, that, in my opinion, that clause of the Constitution refers more particularly to questions relating to our foreign relations than to those appertaining to our domestic affairs; for the simple reason that the Executive, being the Department of the Government more especially placed in charge of our foreign relations, may be supposed to be better informed than any other department of the Government in respect to them; and it is therefore especially in reference to our foreign affairs that the President ought to communicate to us freely his views when he calls upon us for action, and on such occasions to recommend such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient. And so he ought to do when he may anticipate from an inquiry of ours that we contemplate it. When the transaction is ended, he ought to content himself with furnishing the papers asked for. But when it is not he ought either to withhold the papers, or to accompany them with his views in respect to the case.

Mr. GIDDINGS, (interrupting.) The position I took upon that matter was, distinctly, that he did not communicate it to Congress, but to this House alone, and left the Senate in the dark, and therefore he could not have been acting under the constitutional provision.

Mr. BAYLY. The resolution of inquiry was from this House alone. It was in response to that resolution that he not only sent us the information asked for in relation to this case, but he makes, as he ought to have done, his own suggestions in regard to it—there is no intrusion upon his part—he makes, as was his duty in connection with this matter—one affecting our foreign affairs—such suggestions as occurred to him ought to be made by him. And if he has committed any error in this respect, it is not in his having sent us a message, but that his recommendations are not more specific. I hold, in respect to our foreign affairs, that it is the duty of the House rather to follow than to lead the Executive; not to follow them blindly, but to defer to them in respect to questions where the Constitution implies that they should be more fully informed than we are in giving to them the better means of obtaining information.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] made another point. He undertook to compare this case with the ordinary seizure in Boston or New York, or anywhere else, of vessels for the violation of some revenue regulation. The gentleman treated this affair lightly. The whole distinction between this case, and that class of cases to which he referred is this: it is not believed—by me at any rate, and I presume from the character of the message of the President of the United States, that he does not believe—that the conduct of the Spanish Government, in this case was in bona fide execution of their revenue laws in Cuba, and merely in good faith to punish a fraud upon them. Why do I not believe it? Because the records of the committee over which I have the honor to preside show that there are cases of constant occurrence in which the most irritating and harassing violations of their own laws, according to their own admission in some cases, are made by the Spanish authorities in their West India Islands upon our marine. The case now under consideration is not an isolated one. It is a case of constant occurrence. We have now before that committee several cases of similar character. We believe, to use a common expression, that they are disposed to whip this nation, from some feeling of dislike or jealousy, over the backs of our unoffending citizens. There are cases not to be accounted for on any other supposition.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I wish to know of the gentleman from Virginia how he received information of those other cases? How came they before the committee of which he is chairman?

Mr. BAYLY. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] is one of the most attentive members of this House, and I am surprised that he does not know that there have been several cases of this kind referred, by express order of the House, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I shall not undertake, on this occasion, to open the secrets of our prison-house; but I will refer the gentleman to one case, and say to him "ex uno disce omnes." I refer him to the case of Captain Beacher. The communication in that case has already been printed, and is in the gentleman's desk, or in his box, in the document room, I presume. This was a case in which the most unjustifiable outrages were committed upon our citizens—indignity, insult, outrage of every sort, inflicted.

We have been seeking for redress, and Spain, to some extent, has admitted our right to it; but in consequence of this very system that the Spanish Government has adopted, in my opinion in disregard of good neighborhood, with a view, as I believe, to harass and annoy us, this case has been in negotiation for a long time, and we cannot get any satisfaction for it. When we go to the authorities of the West Indies we are referred to Spain; and when we instruct our Minister in Spain to demand redress, they say that we must refer it back to the local authorities for assistance in the way of information, and thus the case is indefinitely delayed. The records show that there is a constant system of irritating annoyances practiced by the Spanish authorities toward us; and they avail themselves of this very circuitous and indefensible mode of proceeding to avoid all responsibility in respect to these cases.

I do not mean, as I said, to go fully into this matter, but as I know that the view which has been presented to the House by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] may strike others that the present case may be regarded as an ordinary seizure of a commercial vessel for the violation of some revenue regulation, I desire to say that I am entirely satisfied, from a careful investigation of the conduct of Spanish officials in their West India islands, that, in most cases, there has not been a bona fide intention of executing their revenue laws in their harassment of our merchants. It has been merely a disposition upon their part to embarrass our commerce. The very fact that such occurrences have so much more frequently taken place in respect to our vessels than in respect to the vessels of England or France, or another nation, shows that there is a disposition upon the part of the authorities of Spain so to embarrass and harass our commerce as to drive us, as far as they can, from all intercourse with the Island of Cuba, without coming out boldly and directly, and thus assuming the responsibility of such a purpose. Sir, it seems to me that if that is the object they are striving to accomplish, if they want to get rid of intercourse with us, they had better exclude us at once, and put an end to the treaty of amity and commerce between the two nations.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question, for the purpose of drawing out a fact, which he might have noticed before the close of his remarks. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] stated that the manifest of the Black Warrior was false—that it made a false representation of facts. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether it is not true that it is customary for vessels touching at Havana when passing from one port of the United States to another, to make out their manifests precisely as the manifest of the Black Warrior was made out, and whether this was not a sudden enforcement of this rule without any notice of any such intention having been given?

Mr. BAYLY. I meant to have referred to that matter in corroboration of the remarks I made to the gentleman from Ohio, that this whole discussion has been utterly premature. Our information upon this point is not full. But, nevertheless, we have pretty good information, information upon which I rely, showing that the manifest of the Black Warrior was made out precisely as those of other vessels similarly employed. I am told—and I do not get my information from newspapers, but from a source upon which I rely with much confidence, though it is not official—I say I have been told that it has been customary to allow to other vessels to pass without objection; and there is no reason in the world why they should not allow it. These vessels merely stop at Havana in passing, and rarely to discharge. They put cotton in the hold as ballast, just exactly as salt is put into the holds of vessels at Liverpool, more for the purpose of ballast than freight; and although we have a duty upon salt, yet what would be thought if we should seize a Spanish vessel ballasted with salt, which might touch at Charleston, with a knowledge on all hands that she did not mean to discharge, upon the pretext that it was not made manifest that her ballast was salt, and not stone?

But, further than this, we have it from authentic information, that other vessels have been allowed to break bulk and transfer their cargoes from one vessel to another in port, in numerous instances, without any complaint upon the part of the authorities; and this was right, for in such a transaction, unless there was a suspicion of smuggling, there was no cause for interference. These are stronger cases than where it is merely left in the hold of the vessel with the hatches sealed. They have allowed the transfer of the cargo from one vessel to another, when their officers, who were swarming about it, saw that the object was simply to facilitate the transmission of that cargo to the port of its destination, without any intention to enter it at Havana for consumption. That ought to be the case. It has been the case in practice. We know that in respect to the execution of revenue laws there is some difference between those Governments whose officers are allowed a discretion, and those where the duties of the public officers are especially defined by law, which no body but the law-making power can relax. Under absolute Governments, the officials have sometimes authority given them to relax their custom-house regulations.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, (interrupting.) Will my colleague allow me to ask a question for information?

Mr. BAYLY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. It has been informed—and I desire to know if it is so—that when an objection is made to the manifest of a vessel, the skipper has a right to correct it within twelve hours after the objection is made. Is that the case? and is it not true that permission to make the correction was asked on the occasion, and refused by the Cuban authorities?

Mr. BAYLY. That is true, as I believe, and worse than that, is true, if I am well informed. They undertook, by an order under the authority I am referring to, which, though purporting to be made before the arrival of the Black Warrior, was not promulgated till afterwards, so as to make a show of a legal excuse for their conduct. It would seem as if it was the purpose to entrap this vessel into the difficulty in which she has been found. The new regulation was made before her arrival, and, as I believe, though I dislike to be uncharitable, in anticipation of it, and the modification was not promulgated until after this occurrence.

But a point I make is this, that a Government has no right, after relaxing for a good while its revenue regulations, even suppose it has been without authority, suddenly to enforce them according to the strict letter of the law, so as to entrap those who have got into the habit of conforming to them in the way their own officers construe them. Sir, it is robbery. It is like enticing a man into the woods to rob him. A captain of a ship cannot be punished to-day for doing in violation of law what he was permitted, with full knowledge of the transaction, to do yesterday without complaint from those charged with its execution, unless he is properly notified that a change of the law itself or its repeal has been made.

Mr. DEAN, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman allow me one word in reference to the point on which he is now speaking?

Mr. BAYLY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DEAN. This debate is out of time, and of course, no one is prepared, or should be at this time, to give any official information except what is contained in the President's message. But upon this precise point which has been suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] and which is a vital point, as to whether the Cuban authorities did not refuse, when an offer was made to correct the manifest of the Black Warrior, to allow it to be corrected. I am authorized, I think, to say, from what I have seen officially published, and a letter from Captain Bullock, which has not yet appeared in print, that seven hours after the vessel arrived—the rule is that the manifest may be corrected within twelve hours—he was notified of the intention to confiscate the cargo; he then offered, in pursuance of the regulation, to correct his manifest, but they refused to allow him to do so. After expostulating with them, and using all the arguments he could, he then told the authorities that he should surrender the ship if they said so, and he took the American flag and went over to the United States ship Fulton. Under these circumstances I regard the act at Havana as a clear case of port piracy.

Mr. CUTTING, (interposing.) I desire to make one suggestion to my colleague. Is it right to endeavor to inflame the public mind of the country upon this question, when we have only ex parte statements? Have we heard one word yet from the other side? And I respectfully submit to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, whether all discussion tending to such inflammatory results ought not to be suspended, and let the country act with dignity, with firmness, and with patience? I respectfully submit that the whole of this proceeding this morning can tend to no good, and is of the most dangerous character.

Mr. BAYLY. I beg leave to say that if I had introduced this debate, if I had sprung it upon the House, if I had taken any other than the most cautious and conservative ground in respect to it, I should have felt myself keenly rebuked by the remarks of my esteemed friend from New York.

Mr. FLORENCE. If the gentleman will permit me to make a single statement, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. BAYLY. My friend from Pennsylvania will allow me one word. Then, if he renews his request, I will yield him the floor.

Mr. FLORENCE. In this connection with the remark made by the gentleman from New York, I can state a circumstance—

Mr. BAYLY. I do not yield the floor. I know quite as much of these circumstances as my friend.

Mr. FLORENCE. I refer to circumstances of aggression on the part of the Cuban authorities.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. PRESTON. As a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I would like to make a suggestion to the chairman. I know his views, and coincide with them fully. I hope that he will conclude this debate by moving that the privileged motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

Mr. BAYLY. I felt it to be my duty to yield to my colleagues on the committee, and through courtesy I have yielded to others; but I beg now to say, that nobody may take offense, that I shall not yield the floor again except to the gentleman to whom I am replying. If he desires that I should yield it, I shall not feel at liberty to decline.

I began my remarks by protesting against this discussion as premature. I began it by stating that, though I had taken all the pains which my official position requires me to take, to be well informed, I was not fully informed. I had a right to presume others were not better informed. I agree with my friend from New York, [Mr. CUTTING,] that no remarks ought to be made here to inflame the public mind of the country in respect to this question. But I insist, at the same time, that the mind of the country shall not be prejudiced in the other direction, and that it shall not go out, by remarks of gentlemen here, and others quite as influential elsewhere, that this is a mere ordinary case of a bona fide seizure under the revenue laws. I meant to show that there was something in this case more than one of those ordinary seizures. I undertook to show that, by showing it was in keeping with a constant series of annoying embarrassments to our commerce, by Spanish officials.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I would make a single word of explanation. I want the gentleman to understand me. I beg leave to inform the House, and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, most explicitly, that I limited my remarks in regard to the Black Warrior to the facts so far as we had them, and expressed the gravamen of objection to this whole proceeding outside of that, because we had not heard from the Spanish Government. The whole of my remarks, so far as they went to have any effect on the Administration, were outside of the Black Warrior case. They were entirely extraneous to that matter, and those which were volunteered upon this House.

Mr. BAYLY. That is one of the points in regard to which I flattered myself I had defended the President. I think I have shown that, under all the circumstances, we had a right to expect, and that the President was in duty bound, he being primarily charged with the conducting of our foreign affairs, to let us know what he had to recommend on this occasion. I repeat, if the President has erred, it has not been in the direction the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] complains of.

This is one of those cases, in my opinion, in which, from the circumstances attending it, we ought not to have shown the quiet patience for information which, in ordinary cases, might be proper; and for the reason that what the Spanish authorities have done in this case is in keeping with what seems to be a settled part of their policy in respect to us. Now, it is one thing for a man, by mistake, to tread upon my toes, and it is quite another thing for him to do so every time I meet him in the street, and to jostle me each time I come near him.

The cases in regard to nations are just as different as the illustration I have been making in regard to individuals. The Spanish Government, in respect to us, has been constantly pursuing a course of annoying irritation, and she has done it under most unjustifiable circumstances. How has this nation acted towards Spain? I shall not go fully into that question now; but I will say it has been one of unrequited friendship on our part. And in this connection I want to refer to a single case only, because it is a very recent one, and one which I happen to know a good deal about.

After the massacre of Crittenden, after the inhuman and uncivilized course of the Cuban authorities with those filibusters—whose conduct I condemn as much as any man—there was a natural feeling of excitement in New Orleans, and a mob—no public authorities abetting it, but a mob—went and pulled down a parcel of tobacco shops, and threw their cigars into the street, and a Spanish consul was maltreated. The Spanish Government came here, by their Minister, to demand reparation. I know personally the views of Spain upon this subject. She said, through her Minister, that if it were a mere case of a mob destroying the property of Spanish subjects—a mere ordinary case of that sort—and if there had been no feeling manifested against the Government of Spain on the subject, the Spanish Government would not so insist on indemnification. But the Spanish Government believed that these outrages were inflicted on innocent individuals to gratify a spite against that Government for things for which those individuals were not responsible; and that that condition of things took the case out of the category of ordinary outrages on the people of other nations; that it was an indignity offered to the Government itself, that those who committed the depredations were undertaking to resent the wrongs which they supposed the Spanish Government had committed by harassing their unoffending citizens resident among us.

Now, sir, I do believe—and I do not care that this remark shall go to the country, though not to excite anybody—I do believe that these annoying regulations and these constant wrongs that have been committed on our commerce, are meant as acts of hostility to this Government as a Government. I do not believe that in this very case of the Black Warrior the act would have been committed if that vessel had belonged to one of the nations to which Spain is more friendly than she is to us. Or that it would have been done in case of one of her own steamers; notwithstanding we have a law by which, even in respect to their own steamers and ours perfect reciprocity is provided for.

Sir, in the case to which I have been just referring, we came forward here and promptly responded to the demand of the Spanish Government. As the chairman of the committee over which I have at this time as then the honor to preside, I moved an amendment to the civil and diplomatic bill, for the purpose of compensating these Spanish subjects for the wrong which a portion of our people had committed upon them.

We put that amendment on high national grounds. The Administration were then inclined to the opinion that this being the act of a mob in one of the States, the General Government had nothing to do with it. From mature reflection on that point, I came to a different conclusion. The two Houses of Congress sustained me in it. They believe that as the act was meant—as we were compelled to admit it was meant—as a harassment of Spanish subjects, not in consequence of anything they had done personally, but simply with a view to show irritation towards the Spanish Government, it belonged to us to right the wrong as far as it was practicable. And the Congress of the United States did so. The ground upon which we acted on that occasion I have not now time to go fully into. I will do it when it is proper that I should.

In the whole of our intercourse with Spain, from the date of our first treaty with her to this hour, our course has been one of forbearance and fidelity to our treaty obligations, and to the obligations of our laws of neutrality. All the return that we have received has been one of unjust suspicion and irritating annoyance, which ought to be, between nations, as it would be between individuals, of that very class of annoyances which would be least likely to be submitted to.

It seems that the gentleman from Ohio knows more about this matter than some of us do; he thinks there is something in the name of that vessel that creates a series of acts of special enmity to her. Well, sir, it so occurs; whether it be the name of that vessel, or the fact that she trades out of a southern port, she does seem to be the object of hatred by the Spanish authorities. This is not the first outrage which has been inflicted upon her. I understand that upon one occasion, without any admonition, and, as far as anybody knows, without any provocation, she was fired into, and the cannon ball passed within a few feet of her main stays. This was done, and other acts of outrage have been committed, as I infer from statements upon which I rely.

To satisfy any business man that it could not prima facie have been the purpose of those concerned in that vessel to provoke a difficulty, they very naturally did not want to get into an affray with the authorities there; for they go there to make money, in the way of trade and carrying passengers especially, and want to get through with their business as smoothly as possible. There has been, and there will be, until this Government shall see that fair play is done, special annoyances to our shipping, to as great an extent as they think they can safely do it. I believe that to-morrow Spain would be very glad never to see another American vessel touch at Havana; and I believe there are others who wish that, by domestic strife, or in some other way, we might be made a cypher. But we will see.

Mr. Speaker, observing that course of propriety of demeanor in this House of which I am ambitious, I shall not go into any discussion with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] upon an occasion of this sort, of the slavery question. But it is a remarkable thing in regard to this gentleman, that the only case now on record, in which our Government admit that they have not done Spain full justice, is precisely the case which the gentleman from Ohio opposes. In that only case—the case of the Amistad—where we have not done prompt justice to Spain, is the very case in which he wants justice withheld altogether. It is only in those cases in which wrongs have been committed to our white people and our commerce that the gentleman takes side with Spain and against this Government; only where negroes are remotely concerned he takes sides both against us and against Spain. And I beg to say, if I choose to run out the case, that in the instance I am referring to, I could show that there was no pretense even that he was acting from love for the negro, and in direct reference to the case of the Amistad; for they are already liberated.

Now, sir, the gentleman from Ohio reminded me of my promise to explain the fallacies of law and fact which he introduced in remarks he made, upon a former occasion upon this floor, in respect to the Amistad case. I did not promise to do it in a speech. I promised to make a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs upon that subject; and the gentleman will see, if he will reflect about it, that there may be reasons of a high public character, notwithstanding my willingness to break a lance with the gentleman from Ohio, which may overrule that anxiety, and he ought not to be too prompt in redressing wrongs we have inflicted, when Spain is so tardy in redressing wrongs of a less doubtful character which she has committed. When the proper occasion arrives, if it shall arrive, I shall redeem my pledge to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS]; but I shall not be beguiled into doing it at the expense of what I regard as my public duty.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I expressly stated when I rose that I merely introduced the motion to give an expression of my sentiments in regard to the President's message. I do not wish to debate this matter, and am willing to withdraw the motion I made.

Mr. BAYLY. In the hasty, and, I think, unfounded attack which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] has made upon the President of the United States, I do not think he has done himself ordinary justice. I do not think that there is a single point in his complaints of the conduct of the President which has any force in them; and he seems now to concede it. I am about to do what is always disagreeable to me, but I do it under a sense of duty, and as I feel under a sense almost of instructions. I am not formally instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but I know their views, and I know the committee would say to me, if I could convene them together, from my familiarity with their views, that we ought not to carry this discussion any further. I know they would say that you have gone as far in this debate as, perhaps, you ought to go in meeting such points made by the gentleman from Ohio, as were calculated to mislead the public mind. I shall, therefore, make the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table. But before I do that, I must make a remark. It is said that such of us as entertain the views I have barely hinted at, not fully developed, are inclined to connive at filibustering. Quite the reverse is the case. Let this Government satisfy the people that they will promptly vindicate their legitimate rights, especially in the class of cases I am referring to, and we will be able to enforce, as we have done, our neutrality laws. But I do believe that if this is not done, there will arise a feeling difficult to be restrained.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his motion for a few minutes.

Mr. BAYLY. I will go as far in an act of courtesy to my friend from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] as to any man in this House—not excepting one of my colleagues; but I really feel as if I was acting under instructions from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and therefore I cannot withdraw my motion.

The question was then taken upon Mr. BAYLY's motion, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Tellers were demanded and ordered on the question; and Messrs. LETCHER and ETHERIDGE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 52.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill of the House No. 271, entitled "A bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1854."

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment had been offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON], providing for the completion of various custom-houses and marine hospitals, to which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] had offered an amendment to strike out the word "complete," wherever it occurs, and to insert the words "to continue the construction of."

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is it in order to speak against the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to oppose the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, and prefer that originally offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] for several reasons. One is that the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky is precisely that of the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report to Congress, giving estimates for the additional appropriations necessary for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1854. Upon looking into that report I find that the Secretary of the Treasury uses this language: "To complete the custom-house at St. Louis, $100,000;" and so of the various custom-houses and marine hospitals for which the amendment makes provision.

Such also, Mr. Chairman, is the language of the original amendment, as I before stated. I have risen chiefly with a view of setting myself right before the committee upon this question.

I wish to say that it seems to me this is one of the most extraordinary proceedings I ever knew in the House of Representatives. The Committee of Ways and Means might have passed this bill six weeks ago if there had been a disposition on the part of the whole of that committee to cooperate with the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, and to vote the estimates which he had submitted under the head of deficiencies for the current fiscal year. I not only voted for all those appropriations asked for by various gentlemen from the West and Southwest, and recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, but I voted for the deficiency bill as finally reported to the House, and which was rejected for reasons best known to gentlemen on the other side of the House, whose motives I will not question. The fact, however, is certain, that the Whig party, as a party, are not responsible for the defeat of that bill. My honorable friend from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] voted for it. The honorable gentleman from Kentucky on the other side of the House, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who reported this bill, voted for it also, and so did the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means. But it is a fact, well known to the House and the country, that eminent gentlemen on the Committee of Ways and Means led the way in the opposition to that bill, one of the great bills of the session, and thereby aided, if they did not encourage, gentlemen on the other side in defeating this passage.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, (interrupting.) How many members of the Committee of Ways and Means voted against that bill?

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot yield to the gentleman from Illinois. I trust that every gentleman who advocated an amendment to the original deficiency bill will adhere to his vote, and let us see whether the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, who ought to be well advised on this subject, shall be disregarded, and whether the labor of five weeks shall be thrown away, and the House put back where it stood three months ago, at the commencement of the session, because there is a discrepancy of opinion among the members of the Committee of Ways and Means. If the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury are attended to, and the wishes of the House of Representatives, heretofore expressed, are carried out, there will be no difficulty, and we shall be able to progress with the public business as we ought to do.

This bill stands No. 271 on our Calendar; we postpone all the other business of the session to pass a deficiency bill which may not be required before the 30th of June next. It is not wise legislation, in my humble judgment; and I, for one, would take up the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I would not appropriate one dollar more to carry on the Government until Congress has been permitted to act on the other great measures of the session. I would not have all our legislation set aside in order that we may vote money to carry on the Government for the next fiscal year commencing in July next. It is time that we legislated upon the great questions before us—on the French spoliation bill, an honest debt, as Congress has frequently decided, which has been demanding payment here for the last fifty years. Why do you not pay that?

The question was then taken on Mr. BAYLY's amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. PRESTON's amendment.

Mr. RIDDLE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "to complete" wherever they occur, the words "in a fire-proof manner."

I offer this amendment in order that I may, in the brief time allowed me under the rules of the House, answer some charges which have been made upon this floor by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY], who addressed the committee yesterday, and his colleague [Mr. CASKIE] from the Richmond district.

Now, sir, I commend the Committee of Ways and Means for their dexterity, for the manner in which they have presented these several bills to this committee. They well knew that after this House had, by a very decided vote, ingrafted these amendments on the deficiency bill which was rejected, if there was one recommendation stronger than another, it was that which came from the Secretary of the Treasury, and was afterwards indorsed by the committee. But they wanted this deficiency bill through. I want it through. I will vote with the committee. In order to get it through without involving these questions of custom-houses and marine hospitals, what do they do? They report a special bill for custom-houses and marine hospitals. Now let me tell the friends of these appropriations upon this floor, that that bill is upon the Calendar in its order, and cannot be brought up as a general appropriation bill. It will sleep there until the month of August, and probably the last night of the session, when the necessity for the appropriations, to a certain extent, will cease to exist.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The committee can take it up at any time. Whenever we go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I know that the Committee of Ways and Means feels itself bound in good faith to move to lay aside other business to take it up.

Mr. RIDDLE. I know that it is an appropriation bill. If the Committee of Ways and Means so regard it, if they are willing that it shall pass, why not put the appropriations in the deficiency bill? Why not pass them at once?

The appropriation bill for custom-houses involves a very small, trifling, and insignificant amount. The Secretary of the Treasury has contracted for the construction of the buildings. He has contracted according to law, and not as the gentleman from the first district of Virginia remarked, beyond his power; but he has reserved to the Department the right to alter the manner of constructing those buildings, if Congress makes the appropriations. He has not violated in the least degree either the law, the spirit of the law, or the principle involved in the last act of Congress, which restricted him to a given amount. The gentleman has frequently alluded to that fact, and I know that he would be the last man upon this floor to misrepresent the Secretary of the Treasury, if he had read the contracts. He has in my case, and I believe in others, provided in the contract that the building shall be constructed for a specified sum, unless Congress provided for an amount to make it fire-proof.

But what will be the consequence if this bill providing for the completion of custom-houses is not passed? The building which is being constructed in my district has now reached its first story. If the contractor be not allowed to go on and build it in the way specified in the contract, in consequence of delay, he will probably come before Congress and claim damages arising from his outlay. If these appropriations are now passed the General Government will be able to carry out the recommendations of the Secretary, and the buildings will be put up, as every practical man will admit they should be, in a fire-proof manner.

And now, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say, that I think my particular friend from the Richmond district [Mr. CASKIE] yesterday unintentionally fell into an error when he changed his position on these several propositions. In the course of his remarks he admitted that he was governed, on a previous occasion, in the vote which he gave, to a certain extent, by the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury; but to use the reported language of the gentleman himself:

"I did not give the votes on the recommendation of the Secretary alone, though I attach much weight to it, but I gave them not only on that recommendation, but upon my knowledge of the wants of the places where they were located, derived from my previous service in this House, and an investigation considered sufficient, by myself, at least, of the whole subject."

Now, sir, I say, that if my friend from Virginia had given this question the examination which he is so well capable of doing, he would see that some of these appropriations would be useless unless obtained immediately, and in the only way they can be, in the deficiency bill. I was glad to hear him admit he was governed, to a certain extent, by the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury; for while I declare that no other man can be as well informed as to the wants and necessities of the commercial interests—I say, from my personal knowledge of that distinguished officer of the Government, that he is incapable of recommending a measure which would not, in his opinion, formed correctly as it is likely to be, from an advantage of the knowledge of facts which we are not always able to collect, conduce to the general interest and economy of the Government.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to ask a question. My object is to get information from my friend on my left, [Mr. RIDDLE.] If this be a real deficiency I will vote for his position. But I now oppose the amendment, to enable me to get the information I desire. I understood, from the gentleman's remarks, that the building which was originally ordered to be constructed has got a certain way up. Now I ask him, was not the whole appropriation necessary for the building made at the time? I mean the amount that it was estimated to cost, and that it was directed by Congress to expend on it. I say, was not the whole appropriation then made?

Mr. RIDDLE. I will answer the gentleman's question briefly. My answer is this: The Secretary of the Treasury being bound up and restricted by act of Congress, contracted for the erection of this building at the amount specified. This amount was not sufficient to make it fire-proof. He put a provision into that contract, that in the event of Congress appropriating an additional sum for it, and requiring to have it made fire-proof, he reserved the right to the Department to make an alteration in the contract.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I understand the point to be this: Congress voted $25,000 to build a custom-house at Wilmington.

Mr. RIDDLE. That is but one part of it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I know. Congress voted $25,000 to make a custom-house, I say, at a point where there is but $800 a year collected.

Mr. RIDDLE. (interrupting.) Oh, that is a very small matter.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is a very small matter, [laughter,] but I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me again. Sir, it is not the amount of money which I object to in this case. What I object to is the vicious practice that has grown up, by which—when Congress votes a specific sum and directs any of its officers to execute the law in relation to it—he goes on and contracts to expend a larger sum. I do not indorse that system. If this were a case of very high necessity, if there were an actual necessity for spending more than $25,000 to collect a very trifling sum, I do not know that I would hesitate in voting for it, on account of the failure of the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the law. But when I find that this is only in keeping with the course pursued of nullifying legislation; when I find that the officers of the Government have undertaken to neutralize and render of no effect that provision of the Constitution which places the money power here, and which authorizes Congress to make appropriations to accomplish the necessary works of commerce; and when I find that done in a case, not only of no necessity, but against all necessity whatever, I will not lend my vote to support such a system, no man will contend, I think, that $25,000 was insufficient to provide a fire-proof building sufficiently large to collect this small amount of revenue. You can make a very good house, a fire-proof one, for $25,000. And yet in this instance the Secretary of the Treasury has gone forward against all necessity, and made contracts for the expenditure of a larger sum. And my friend from Delaware, acting, no doubt, in accordance with the wishes of his constituents, urges you to make another appropriation to complete the building.

Mr. RIDDLE. I must state to the gentleman from North Carolina that though the duties collected at Wilmington are, I know, small, yet that this building is intended for the accommodation of the Government officers there; such as the superintendent of light-houses—in one of the most important districts of our commerce—the post office, and the court-rooms. They are all provided for in this building.

Mr. CLINGMAN. No doubt. And yet I believe that a building large enough to accommodate all these officers might be constructed for $25,000. My object was to ascertain whether we had failed to appropriate the sum originally agreed to be appropriated. I understand we have not, and I am not disposed to enlarge the building.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk, as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.] I do it with the consent of that gentleman.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to apply such sum as in his opinion may be necessary to complete the building for the custom-house, post office, and court-house in the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; and to furnish such building in a manner appropriate to its uses, and to improve the grounds attached to said building; and also to pay to the two commissioners who superintend the construction of said building such compensation as the said Secretary shall deem just, not to exceed three dollars a day each: Provided, That the sum so, as aforesaid, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury shall not exceed the sum now remaining unexpended of appropriations heretofore made for the said building.

Mr. RITCHIE. I will simply state to the committee that this amendment is offered with the consent of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] and also, so far as I have been able to ascertain, with the consent of the Committee of Ways and Means. It asks for no new appropriation of money; but simply empowers the Secretary of the Treasury to appropriate a balance which has been left from the money which was appropriated for the erection of the building; which balance was saved, by the architect who superintended the construction of the building, for the very purpose asked for in this amendment. The Secretary of the Treasury had technical scruples, and refused to apply the appropriation of that balance to the purposes for which it was saved. Therefore it is that my amendment proposes to authorize that disposition of it.

Mr. PHILLIPS. When the deficiency bill was first presented to the House, I voted to amend it by the insertion of the custom-house appropriations. They were recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury; and no argument or fact had been exhibited to demonstrate the impropriety of the recommendation. The amendment was carried by a decided majority. But the bill, as amended, was lost by an overwhelming vote.

Now, sir, the deficiency bill is again presented to the committee, and again the motion is made to incorporate into it the custom-house and marine hospital appropriations. The question is, Shall we again vote in this amendment, and again subject the bill to a defeat?

For myself, sir, though interested in one of these appropriations, and earnestly desiring its adoption by the House, I am disposed to recede from the position I occupied on the former occasion, and to disembarass the majority, who are responsible to the country for the maintenance of the Government. I cannot recognize the propriety of renewing the same course of action with this bill, when we are fully justified in believing that a persistence in this line of conduct must produce the same effect, and lead to the same conclusion.

Though gentlemen may regard my present determination as hazarding the fate of the custom-house appropriations; yet, sir, I will prefer even this, greatly prefer it, to jeopardizing again the success of a bill necessary to the ordinary wants and demands for the regular operation of the Government.

Mr. PRESTON, (interrupting.) I would state to the gentleman from Alabama that I will ask the unanimous consent of the House to strike out from my amendment the appropriation for the custom-house at Mobile. I move, with the indulgence of the House, to strike it out, so as to leave that appropriation in the second bill, which has been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I am speaking against the whole amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky—and the Mobile appropriation is but part and parcel thereof—and I say again, that I am willing to hazard that local interest for the good of the whole country; as between this local measure, however much it may concern me, or my constituents, personally, I repeat, let it go down, rather than incur a defeat of a general measure so necessary to the full operation of the Government.

I have voted the appropriations for the custom-house, and voted in a majority; that majority can vote them through in the separate bill now before us, and I will aid them in every manner to effect an object which I believe comports with the best interest of the Government. But being one of the dominant party in this House justly held responsible by the country for the administration of the legislation of this House, I will not, let the consequence be what it may, pursue any mere local design to the detriment of the general interest.

The question was then put on Mr. RITCHIE's amendment; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 71; noes not counted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. PENNINGTON and BUCKOCK were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 64.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move to amend the provision in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky proposing an appropriation for the benefit of the custom-house at Louisville, by adding five dollars to the appropriation.

I offer this amendment for the purpose of giving me an opportunity of saying that I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, because I conceive that the appropriations there proposed are as legitimately deficiencies as any item contained in the bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means. I can see no reason why these items which, on former occasions, have been considered as legitimate deficiencies in the general appropriation bills for carrying on the service of the Government as any others, should have been omitted from this bill.

Now, sir, these buildings, as I understand it, have all been commenced. If the sentiment be not a universal one in this House—as it ought to be—that when the Government of the United States is undertaking to put up buildings of a permanent character, they should in all instances be made fire-proof. And the simple question presented between the friends and enemies of these appropriations, is whether you will make these custom-houses and marine hospital buildings fire-proof or not.

I do not understand that any gentleman charges these estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury as being extravagant for carrying out the purposes for which they are designed. If, then, they are not extravagant, and it is desirable to make these buildings fire-proof, what objection can there be to ingrafting this amendment upon this bill? I can see none.

As to the circumstances which brought about the defeat of the deficiency bill, I understand them to be simply these: Some of the leading friends of the Administration, gentlemen who sustain the political policy of Mr. Guthrie, rejected his estimates. They are willing to sustain him in his political policy, but not to rely upon the estimates he makes in reference to the building of custom-houses and marine hospitals, where those buildings have already been commenced. Well, these leading friends of the Administration not only voted against all these amendments, but they voted against the bill when the amendments were put in it, and thus defeated its passage.

When our friends on the opposite side of the House, who had voted honestly for every item in the bill, saw that the leading friends of the Administration were not disposed to sustain the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, or to give him an appropriation for deficiencies necessary to carry on the Government to the end of the fiscal year, they said to themselves, as I understand, "We are not responsible for the operations of the present Administration; we are not bound to furnish them the means of carrying on the Government; and since their own friends refuse to furnish them those means, we will do the same."

Now, I do not mean to say that that was right on the part of those gentlemen. On the contrary, I think that it was wrong, because I voted for the amendments, and for the bill when the amendments were put into it, and I think that every gentleman who thought the amendments were right, and who had no objection to any item in the bill, ought to have voted for it under all the circumstances. Nor do I think that the defeat of the bill, under these circumstances, justifies the Committee of Ways and Means in bringing in two bills, separating items which, upon all occasions, have been united, and throwing out items which were admitted on all hands to be veritable deficiencies. I shall, therefore, support the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] and, as I did on a former occasion, vote for the bill if that amendment is adopted.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment to the amendment, because I am opposed to the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] I am opposed to the original amendment, not because I am opposed to these appropriations for custom-houses and marine hospitals, for I am in favor of them. I voted for them all. I voted for them all because, having the recommendation of the Secretary, I thought that they were entitled to my vote.

I voted for these appropriations notwithstanding I am an absolute free trade man. I long for the day when there will not be a custom-house left on the face of the earth, and when this obstruction to the free intercourse of the nations of the earth with each other shall have passed away forever. But so long as the tariff policy is among the policies of our nation, we must have custom-houses; and it is better that Government should build them than rent them. If Government builds them, they will be safe and suitable. If it rents them, they will probably be unsafe and unsuitable.

I am opposed to embodying these appropriations in the deficiency bill, because, where it is practicable, it is well to have every measure left to stand on its own merits. But I am still more opposed to it because I fear that the deficiency bill, if loaded down with these appropriations, will fail.

Now, I cannot consent to an attitude which may look at all like unreasonable or factious opposition to the Administration. In all the views and measures of the Administration which are reasonable, I shall gladly concur. To defeat the deficiency bill would be to embarrass the Administration, and would be to block the wheels of Government. Moreover, it would be to dishonor the Government and the nation, by leaving debts unpaid which should be paid, and paid now—for in many cases there is urgent need of their being paid now.

When, a few weeks ago, the deficiency bill was lost, through the mutual jealousies of the Whigs and Democrats, I rejoiced that I stand alone upon this floor; that I am a party by myself, and in myself; that I am in a greatly and gloriously independent minority of one, and that I was therefore unaffected by those jealousies which defeated the bill.

I hope, sir, that the deficiency bill will be passed; and I hope that when it is passed, we shall pass the appropriation bill also. When we have done justice to the deficiency bill, we shall thereby have conciliated the friends of that bill, who are opposed to the appropriation bill. They will then be better able and better disposed to view with candor the claims of these proposed appropriations, and to appreciate their force.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move the following amendment by way of addition:

And it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury, or any officer under him, charged with the construction of any of the buildings mentioned in this act, in any manner to enlarge or change the original plans of any of said buildings, or to change the character of the work or materials, so as to exceed the original estimates, without first obtaining the consent of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a single word in reference to that amendment. I am satisfied that one great reason why we are called upon every year to make appropriations for the completion of these custom-house and post office buildings, &c., in the nature of deficiencies, is, that discretion is allowed to the Secretary of the Treasury to construct them according to just such plan as he may adopt. No limitation is put upon his discretion in that respect, so that plans and estimates are submitted to us here, and we make appropriations, under the expectation that they will complete the structures.

The Secretary then permits some military officers, or some incompetent superintendents, to take charge of the construction of these buildings; and to please their fancy in reference to the adornment and the enlargement of them, or any other purpose whatever, they recommend to the Secretary of the Treasury a change of the plan and of the character of the material of which the building is to be constructed, and by that means the expense is greatly increased. I think the principle of my amendment is the correct one. It ought to be in every bill which provides for the construction of edifices—that plans and estimates should be submitted to Congress before an appropriation is made, and that the Secretary of the Treasury, or whatever other officer has charge of the building, should not be permitted to change those plans without first asking Congress.

I think, sir, that this is a correct principle, and that it should be applied in every bill which provides for the construction of public buildings. You will spend here upon this Capitol alone $2,700,000 more than it was originally designed to do, as the result simply of allowing certain gentlemen a discretion to change and alter plans and specifications—to change and alter the character of the materials. You last year appropriated $100,000 to bring water into this city, and, in consequence of the discretion left in the hands of the President and his officers, without limitation, you will, on the faith of this $100,000, expend seven or ten millions. Now, in view of this fact, I think that there ought to be put in this bill, and in all other bills providing for the erection of edifices for the Government, such a provision.

Mr. HIBBARD. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment will not be adopted. And while I am up I would refer to the objections of the gentleman from Delaware, [Mr. RIDGLE.] He seems to fancy that if these appropriations for marine hospitals and custom-houses are kept in the one bill it will not be practicable to get that bill before the House for consideration. Now I assure the gentleman that it was neither the object of the Committee of Ways and Means, in reporting these bills separately, to prevent this bill—for the building of custom-houses and marine hospitals—from being considered; nor will it be the effect of their action in that regard if we pass this bill by itself, before we take up the other. The gentleman will see that such cannot be the effect, if he refers to the eightieth rule, which directs that the general appropriation bill shall be in order in preference to any other bills of a public nature, except it is otherwise ordered by a majority of the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, whether there be a general appropriation bill or not, it is competent for the committee, which is governed by rules like those which govern the House, to lay aside, by a majority vote, other bills, and to take up the bill providing for the custom-houses and marine hospitals. The majority can do it whenever they go into committee, if they so please to do.

I understood the gentleman from Delaware, or some other gentleman favorable to his side, to ask if I should so vote. I say in reply, that I deem myself bound, in courtesy and fairness, to vote in committee to take it up and consider it, with a view to action. I do not deem myself bound, however, to vote for the appropriations for marine hospitals and custom-houses. But the Committee of Ways and Means, governed by reasons which were clearly explained yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] deemed it proper as well as expedient, in deference to the expressed will of the House, as they understood it, and in deference to the interests of all concerned, to separate these bills in this form from each other. They proposed by this means to have a fair and deliberate action in Committee of the House on both of them.

I had hoped that my friend from Delaware would have seen this matter in the light in which it has been regarded by the gentleman from Alabama near me, [Mr. PHILLIPS.] How stands he? He stands as a friend of these appropriations, desiring an appropriation for the city of Mobile—one of the most important points involved; one of the largest appropriations; and I might also add, one of the least objectionable. In my opinion, the appropriation asked for the city of Mobile is the least objectionable of the whole of these appropriations. In it he [Mr. PHILLIPS] is directly interested, as representing that locality; and yet, on looking at the subject from this point of view, he comes up here reasonably and patriotically, as it seems to me, and expresses his willingness, nay his preference, to vote on this bill by itself, and then to take up that, and these other appropriations, on their several merits.

Sir, that is a reasonable and patriotic view of this matter, and I hope the Committee of the House will concur in the same view of it. If these appropriations are right, why then gentlemen need not lack confidence in the bill which contains them all. All these appropriations stand or fall, as a matter of right and as a matter of policy, upon their own merits. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] also favors them, and believes that they have sufficient of merit and sufficient of strength to stand on their own bottom. Perhaps, sir, they have; perhaps they are stronger in a separate bill than if they were annexed to this one. I do not know how that fact may be, and I care not; because the question before us—the proper question on voting for or against this amendment—is not whether we are in favor of appropriations for marine hospitals and custom-houses, but whether we are for voting on them here attached to this bill.

That is the question which the committee will decide by their vote upon the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.] Now, that amendment embraces items to a large amount, something upwards of $270,000, I believe, if it contains all the appropriations for custom-houses which were added to the bill when it was before the House the other day. I believe it does contain them all, since the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RITCHIE,] in reference to the custom-house at Pittsburgh, has been adopted.

A MEMBER. It amounts to more than $270,000; it is more than $400,000.

Mr. HIBBARD. The more the better for my argument. The gentlemen says more than $400,000. My estimate was a very hasty one, but the precise amount is not material. They are a class of items peculiar to themselves. They are the class in which is involved almost all of the controversy which has arisen in regard to this bill; and I submit to the friends of these items, as well as to the friends of the whole bill, whether the right, proper, and parliamentary course to be pursued is not the one which the Committee of Ways and Means have recommended? Let us then vote down the amendment, and vote upon the bill.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk, to come in at the end of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

The amendment was read, as follows:

For fitting up and furnishing Federal court-rooms in the cities of Nashville, Jackson, and Knoxville, in the State of Tennessee, to the city of Nashville $50,000, to the cities of Knoxville and Jackson $25,000 each.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not, Mr. Chairman, propose this amendment out of any hostility to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of order upon the amendment. It is that the amendment does not relate to a deficiency, because there has never been any appropriation for those buildings. It is not therefore in order.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the ground of my complaint, and the very reason why I have offered the amendment. There has never been an appropriation made; if there had been I should not have asked for one now.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles:

S. No. 180. An act to authorize the issue of registers to vessels owned by the Accessory Transit Company;

S. No. 238. An act to authorize the issue of patents to lands in any State or Territory in certain cases; and

S. No. 267. An act to establish a post road in the State of California.

In which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.]

Mr. CULLOM. I have offered this amendment—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I submit again my question of order, that the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, is not in relation to a deficiency, as no appropriation has ever been made for the works named in his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the question of order is well taken, for the reason assigned by the gentleman from Kentucky, and admitted by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair; although I think a great deal of injustice is done to my State. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to offer an amendment just here, for the purpose of hanging a remark or two on it, and therefore I have not much care for the form of it. I move to increase the appropriation five dollars.

An unfavorable impression has been made upon the minds of many members upon this floor, in consequence of the fact that in many places these buildings have cost more than the original estimates. But I am very sure that if gentlemen will recur to the fact, which they must know, of the very general increase of prices in relation to everything, they will see that an increased cost of constructing these buildings everywhere must follow; and consequently, though the original appropriations were amply sufficient at the time they were made, yet at this time they are incompetent to effect the object contemplated. So much for the cause of the applications now. So far as I understand them, they have originated most generally with the Secretary of War.

After all the discussions upon the floor in relation to custom-houses, I put the question directly home to every gentleman here whether he has heard the first clear, valid reason given why these appropriations should not be made. There, included in your official documents, are the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the reasons given by him, showing the necessity of making such appropriations. Is there a gentleman upon this floor who, after all this debate, can go home and give his constituents a sensible and definite idea of the reasons operating upon this Congress why appropriations in regard to these custom-houses should not be made? Has he heard any such reason upon this floor? Has any such reason been given by the Committee of Ways and Means? They desire to cut down these appropriations. Why is there any necessity for giving half a million of dollars for appropriation for the city of New York, when $300,000 is denied to the entire valley of the Ohio and Mississippi? Recent developments in this House have shown, upon the part of the older States of this Union, an inveterate hostility towards the new States of the Union, which, for one, I am prepared to encounter, and mete measure for measure.

I pity the gentleman from Delaware, [Mr. RIDGLE,] who, representing one of the older States, is caught in company with the new States on this question, for there are but two of the older States interested in the pending amendment. The estimate of $300,000 provided for here is intended for the new States of this Union. According to the action which the House has recently exhibited they are not to have that measure of justice which the older States claim for themselves.

The gentleman from Delaware will illustrate the fate of poor Tray. If he had found himself in company with the gentleman from Providence, and had kept himself there, he might have found his custom-house alongside of the custom-house which is already carefully provided for in the existing bill coming from the Committee of Ways and Means. Why is this? Why are these distinctions made? Why is the great valley of the Ohio and Mississippi to be charged with loading down the deficiency bill, because they ask $300,000 for necessary purposes? This appropriation is proposed in accordance with the recommendations of your highest financial officer, and yet an appropriation for a larger amount in one of the older States, unwarranted by law, is carefully provided and cared for by your Committee of Ways and Means in the deficiency bill, which they present to this House. In view of these facts, I again put the question directly to every gentleman upon this floor, when he returns home to his constituents, what satisfactory reason he can give them for such an unjust discrimination as is attempted by appropriating for the Providence custom-house, and excluding appropriations for those in the West?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have to express my regret at the course of remark the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] has chosen to indulge in upon this occasion. I had hoped that no gentleman would have undertaken to stimulate still further the sectional feelings which have been manifested during the last two days in the discussion of a general appropriation which belongs to the whole country, and in which the whole country is interested, because it is for the purpose of carrying on a common Government.

I will not follow my friend from Ohio in debating the merits of these custom-house appropriations. Gentlemen of the committee know what my own opinions are, and what my votes have been upon this measure. But, sir, the point is not whether this amendment should receive our sanction as an independent proposition, it is whether we should ingraft it upon this bill, admonished, as we are, by the fate of the former deficiency bill, which was defeated in the House with this amendment ingrafted upon it.

But the gentleman from Ohio draws a distinction between the appropriations made for the benefit of the East and West, and he speaks of the Committee of Ways and Means as having provided for the wants of the East, while those of the West have been neglected. He speaks of the custom-house in Providence, Rhode Island, having been provided for in this bill, while we have left out those in the Mississippi valley. Sir, that appropriation was inserted on the bill upon entirely different grounds from those on which these custom-house appropriations in the amendment of my colleague are placed, as I will show the gentleman, if I have time in my five minutes. At the last Congress $50,000 were appropriated for the purchase of a site, and the erection of a custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island. It is a part of considerable importance. Some $60,000 or $70,000 revenue are yearly collected there, and some eighty or ninety vessels are entered there every year.

Upon examination, it was found that a suitable site could not be purchased for less than $40,000, and therefore nothing has been done in reference to the purchase. But the whole matter is set forth in the seventh page of the printed report from the Treasury Department, which I hold in my hand, and from which I will read.

“On a full examination of the city of Providence, no suitable site could be obtained for a new custom-house for a less sum than $40,000; and if a new custom-house is to be erected, it would be bad economy to build on an improper site.”

“The Department being satisfied that a proper site will cost that amount, has asked for $24,000 in addition to the $16,000 already appropriated, in order to bring the subject to the attention of Congress, and recommending the appropriation for that purpose and for that amount.”

Nothing has been done with the appropriation made during the last Congress, and nothing can be done unless an additional appropriation be made; and it is, therefore, a clear deficiency. The amount we have inserted in the bill is intended to purchase the site, and has nothing to do with the erection of the buildings.

Mr. DISNEY. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky as enforcing before this House the necessity or propriety of making provision for the purchase of sites for custom-houses where the erection of the buildings have not commenced, and as objecting to the completion of those which have already been commenced?

Mr. RIDGLE. To their completion in a fire-proof manner.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman from Delaware very well remarks that it is to complete them in a fire-proof manner. I think my friend from Ohio had better not draw me into a discussion upon the point he presents, for I am a friend to custom-houses, and in favor of the bill which we have reported, making appropriations for them. I would prefer not to answer the question the gentleman asks at this time; but if he presses me to the wall, I will answer him.

Mr. DISNEY. I hope the gentleman will answer it now.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will answer the gentleman in this way, and it is also an answer to my friend from Virginia: the custom-houses for which these appropriations are asked in the independent bill which we have reported can be built without one dollar of additional appropriation; and if Congress does not choose to grant these appropriations, the plans on which they are estimated will simply have to be cut down. The buildings can be completed for the amounts already appropriated, although it is true that they cannot be so well and thoroughly completed as if this appropriation is made.

I repeat, that I am in favor of the appropriations, because I think they are necessary to complete the buildings in the most perfect manner; but if Congress refuses to grant them, it will not stop the work.

The question was then taken on Mr. DISNEY's amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I intend to vote against all these appropriations for custom-houses.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana propose an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; I move to decrease the appropriation for the custom-house at Cincinnati five dollars.

I intend to vote against all these appropriations for custom-houses, and in favor of all those for marine hospitals; and as I have much more to say than I can express in five minutes, I will speak rapidly, giving only a few figures, and embodying the rest in the report of my remarks.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, (interrupting.) Before the gentleman from Louisiana proceeds with his remarks, I should like to hear his amendment read.

Mr. PERKINS. I will withdraw the amendment I have offered, and move to amend the amendment by striking out all in relation to custom-houses, so as to leave only the appropriations for marine hospitals. I do this because I intend to vote against all the appropriations for custom-houses, and in favor of all those for marine hospitals which have not been built, on conditions attached to former appropriations, that no more money should be appropriated to them.

I dislike the very idea of a deficiency bill. The name itself suggests a wrong—a want of forecast—an error somewhere. There are instances, and they occur every year, when deficiencies are necessary and should be supplied before the period of the regular annual appropriation. But, as was remarked by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] and as is verified by the legislation of the country, this accidental and casual provision, originally the result of a temporary necessity, has grown into a principle, and from it has resulted that, instead of having one annual general appropriation bill passed at the end of each session, we have in fact two; and amendments offered to one and rejected, after discussion, are frequently tacked on to the other.

I dislike the bill for another reason: The estimates in it are too large. We have now a large surplus in the Treasury. Under ordinary circumstances, there is a care imposed upon us by our necessities. At this time the reverse is the case; and while everything stimulates to extravagance, it is prudent—it is becoming—that the Democratic party, now that we have a Democratic Administration, after having preached economy throughout the country, and assailed the extravagance of the Whigs, should take care that the expenditures of the present do not exceed those of the last Administration. I am in favor of a wise, not a niggardly economy; and I never did indulge in abuse of Mr. Fillmore's administration in this respect. On the contrary, I think its estimates compare favorably with the appropriations proposed in this bill. His last deficiency bill, as passed, was less than the first proposed under this Democratic Administration.

But I have a greater, and, with me, a more influential reason for opposing the provisions of this amendment. It is, that in connection with every one of these works, there are conditions precedent which preclude their supporters from asking any further appropriations.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] asks, how could any gentleman living on the banks of the Mississippi, or in the West, go home and give a reason that would bear examination for voting against the amendment. Sir, I find that in 1851 an appropriation of $75,000 was made for the purchase of the site and construction of the gentleman's custom-house at Cincinnati, with the express condition that the whole cost should not exceed that appropriation. This amendment proposes to exceed that sum $15,000.

In the case of the custom-house at St. Louis, there are actually, in two different years, conditions precedent to the use of the money then appropriated, that they should not receive another dollar. In 1851, $50,000 was appropriated, with a proviso that the whole cost should not exceed that sum. In 1852, a further appropriation was made, with the same condition; and yet, in spite of those two conditions precedent to the use of the appropriation, in 1853 there was appropriated $115,000 for continuing that very work, and the present amendment proposes to add $100,000 to that!

In the appropriation for the custom-house, treasury, and other offices in Louisville, the case will be found to be exactly similar. We provided for the site and construction of a custom-house, post office, court-room, and other offices, provided the whole should not exceed the amount appropriated. That was in 1852, and yet they now come here in the deficiency bill, alleging that the Government will suffer a loss if a further appropriation for the building is postponed even to the close of the session. In this way, Mr. Chairman, I might proceed through the whole bill.

Where is this thing to stop? The former chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. BAYLY] said that within his experience it had been going on and on until it had become an evil which ought to be checked. We have a Democratic House of Representatives, with more new members in it than have been in any House within the last ten years. We have a new Administration; one that came in pledging economy. Now is the time to practice it. The figures that I give to the House are drawn from a careful examination of the acts of Congress, and are, I believe, strictly correct.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to say a word or two by way of reply. The arguments the gentleman has adduced against the particular case which he mentions of the custom-house at Cincinnati, apply with their whole force to every item of the deficiency bill. How came the deficiency bill here at all? Were not all the other appropriations specially limited and provided for in the preceding acts of Congress? Did not these officers specially state in regard to all these cases, that the amounts then estimated for would be sufficient? Did not Congress act upon them, and do they not come here again? Does not the Committee of Ways and Means ask this body to make additional appropriations to the amount of millions? That is your deficiency bill itself. Every fact, every argument, every reason which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PERKINS] has adduced against the practice pursued in reference to these custom-houses, applies with all their force and power to the deficiency bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I will suggest to the gentleman a difference. If I understand this bill, it contains an appropriation for the Navy, which is founded on the rise in the price of coal.

Mr. DISNEY. I have only five minutes, and I cannot yield further to the gentleman. I remarked that the cost of all building material has been on the rise for the last two or three years. The price has increased immensely. The increase has defeated all estimates in regard to the subject.

There is another view which I wish to impress upon my friend from Louisiana. These appropriations are not asked for by the immediate representatives of the particular districts. They come, as I understand them, and as I know them to be in the case of my own district, unasked for. The first personal knowledge that I had of them, was in reading the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that was after this discussion arose. It was the uninfluenced action of the Secretary of the Treasury, in view of the necessities of the public interest.

He announced in the particular case of Cincinnati, that $45,000 more ought to be appropriated to make a fire-proof building. I did not ask him for it, nor do I know that anybody within my district knew that he would recommend it. The Secretary of the Treasury knew the condition of the building, and the importance of having it fire-proof. All these matters are exceedingly simple. There are some $350,000 recommended for matters of necessity, and by a man who, I think, of all others in this Republic, is best calculated to judge of them.

The gentleman talks about an economical Administration. Why this is the recommendation of the Administration itself, and we are sustaining the Administration when we are claiming that its estimates should be regarded, and not set at naught; and set at naught, as I remarked before, without any solid and cogent reason except the general idea of reduction.

Now, my friend from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] argued in this matter, and undertook to show to the House the propriety of defeating the appropriation for the custom-house at Providence, where no money had been expended, and where there was no necessity to expend any just now, in order to secure the construction of one at another point. That is all he did. In the case of the buildings provided for in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] it is asked to make these appropriations in such a manner as to secure the construction of those which are authorized at the original estimated cost. Here is a recommendation which applies not only to custom-houses and marine hospitals, but to all public buildings authorized by Congress to be constructed. From the showing of my friend from Kentucky, it would appear that—

The question was put on the amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the whole of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] except that portion of it which has reference to the marine hospital at San Francisco.

I suppose, sir, there is no necessity to report the amendment. It is understood by the House; and I make it for the purpose of raising a test in this committee. If my motion succeeds, the whole of the present difficulties will be removed from the consideration of this committee.

The question now presented to us is distinct. It is, Does this committee mean to permit this bill for appropriations for custom-houses and light-houses to be embraced in the deficiency appropriation bill or not? That is the question. Will this committee, after the experience they have had on this very subject, allow themselves to be bamboozled and bothered by the movements that are now being made? What is the history of this subject? This same bill, or a bill the same in substance, was up before the committee several weeks ago. It was amended in various forms by the propositions of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] and others; and after these amendments were adopted, the bill itself was rejected by a vote of nearly two to one. The question now is whether we are to play the same game over again, and whether we shall go on in the same manner. The Committee of Ways and Means have reported two bills so as to separate these questions, knowing well that one part of them rests upon different principles from the other portion embraced in the original deficiency bill. And the question now is: Will the gentlemen of this House embarrass the Government, and frustrate claims on the Treasury by the adoption of the amendments which are proposed to the bill? I think it is one of those propositions which commends itself to their responsibility as legislators. For it is well known, that on a former occasion a portion of the gentlemen of this House declared that the Democratic party here should be responsible for these bills. And the question now is, whether they will take that responsibility or not. I hope that the Democratic party in this House will not allow themselves to be embarrassed by the proceedings now on hand; but that they will set their faces against it, vote for the proper legitimate appropriations, and leave these other questions presented for their deliberation to the settlement of the committee.

Mr. BENTON. I wish to recall the House to a recollection of the question. I think we have got wide of it. It seems to be taken up as a question of exceeded appropriations—of contracts for more than was allowed—of deficiencies created by disregarding the laws already passed. Not so the fact. All that I believe to be a mistake; and that it is only a question of changing material, and of making durable and indestructible edifices, instead of those which are to burn down or rot down. The former appropriations were for destructible buildings. We think it economy to change that plan, and to have them proof against fire and speedy decay. That is the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, who has fairly proposed the change of plan and material, and given his reason for it, and left it to Congress to act upon these reasons. If the change is not sanctioned by Congress, the buildings go on as at first proposed, costing less money, and lasting less time; if sanctioned, then the more valuable buildings will be constructed. Nothing is to be done without the consent of Congress; and its consent to the change of plan and material is now asked, and respectfully asked, and upon reasons rendered; and the only question is, will Congress agree to the change, and give the further sum which the improved plan requires? I think it should, and for the reasons heretofore given, and not necessary to be repeated. There has been no violation of law, no making contracts beyond appropriations. The member from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] gives, as a reason for the providence which is given to the Providence, Rhode Island, custom-house, in putting it into the bill from which the western custom-houses are dropped, that the port there yields revenue—$60,000 to $70,000 of annual revenue. Why, sir, the port of St. Louis nearly yields that much monthly—I am informed $50,000 a month—and is constantly and rapidly increasing. And now, Mr. Chairman, seeing that this is a question of changing a worse to a better plan, and that there is no censure for exceeding appropriations, it is hoped that the same will be given as on the former day, and these western custom-houses and marine hospitals placed again in the bill from which they have been dropped by the Committee of Ways and Means, after having been placed there by the vote of this House.

The question recurring upon the adoption of the amendment to the amendment—

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, called for tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. WASHBURN, of Maine, and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

Mr. SMITH. The committee will see that the object of the amendment is to have a test.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 64.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I move to strike out of the appropriation for St. Louis the words "five dollars."

I do so, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of replying to the remarks of the representative from St. Louis, [Mr. BENTON.] I listen with respect to anything that is the result of that gentleman's experience, but I must confess that I cannot understand the question of ethics which he presents to this House.

He tells us that there is no violation of any obligation in further appropriations for particular custom-houses that have recently received appropriations on the express condition of not asking more, and that they would be completed with the amount appropriated, and yet come here urging their very incompleteness as the reason for another additional appropriation.

We were told, the other day, Mr. Chairman, that this evil, great as it now is, was but small in its inception; and the former chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, turning to this House, composed of younger members, asked, I thought with much force, how and when the evil was to be stopped? Will there ever be a better time? When I look into the terms of former appropriations for the custom-house at St. Louis, I am astonished to find any gentleman maintaining that there is no moral obligation upon the Government connected with the matter. I had supposed that the same obligation rested upon the Government to fulfill its own declarations as upon the part of individuals, and that it but imperfectly acquitted itself of its duty towards its citizens, if it did not equally insist upon the discharge of obligations assumed towards itself. Especially, sir, is this the case in financial matters.

Now, in the matter of the St. Louis custom-house, I find that in 1851 $50,000 were appropriated for its construction, on the express condition that the whole cost should not exceed $75,000, and that, in 1852, as if to make the obligation unusually impressive, Congress gave the remaining $25,000, to complete the original sum of $75,000, and repeated the condition, "No part to be expended unless the sum appropriated will complete the work." Could language be clearer, and does it mean nothing?"

Although it was thus explicitly stated that no part of the appropriation should be expended unless it were ascertained that the whole sum appropriated would be sufficient to complete the building, but one year passed before this condition was forgotten; and we find another appropriation, made last summer, of $115,000, for continuing the construction of this same building.

And now, at the commencement of a new Congress, without even waiting for the regular general appropriation bill, and under the plea of a deficiency, we are asked to make another appropriation of $100,000 for the completion of this same building. Sir, I regret that I am compelled to see, I wish I did not see, a moral principle involved in this question.

I remarked, when I was up before, that I would vote for the construction of marine hospitals, but that I would not, under the circumstances, for custom-houses. The difference is this: These marine hospitals are for the benefit of the sailor, whom you tax twenty cents each per month out of his wages. No matter where he is, whether on the western waters or on the northern lakes, or in the regions of the north or south pole, you still compel him to pay $2 40 per annum for the purpose of erecting and maintaining these hospitals; and it is but justice to give him the advantage of them.

Mr. PRESTON. We might just as well make a test question of this amendment now pending as of that which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] submitted some minutes since, which was voted down by the committee. If my amendment be put in the bill, it will place it precisely where the Administration majority were most anxious it should be placed; that is, where it may be passed through the House without difficulty.

If it be necessary that guards shall be thrown around the Treasury, I am prepared to bring forward the guard which has been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means itself, as an additional section to the bill. I seek no unfair advantage here. I am a friend of these custom-house appropriations, and I desire to see them provided for in this bill. I was surprised to find that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] should approve of the course taken by the Committee of Ways and Means, in reference to this matter, in reporting these items in a separate bill. For my own part, I should have no special objection to that course, if we could be sure of securing them there. But we have received no pledge from the Committee of Ways and Means that they will pass the custom-house bill, or that they will give it their support after they have received our assistance to pass this deficiency bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I hope my colleague

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 42.

will allow me to say a word in reference to that point.

Mr. PRESTON yielded the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Chairman, can make no pledge to pass the custom-house or any other bill, but—

Mr. PRESTON. I understand the point my colleague would make, and I cannot give way further. I desire in this matter nothing more than that the original motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] shall be carried into effect. It will be recollected that my colleague endeavored to have these two bills sent to the committee as a joint report, but that they were separated by the objection of a member of this House; and it seems to me no more than fair that the Committee of Ways and Means should now remedy, as far as they can, the failure made by them when the bills were reported.

Why, then, did not the Committee of Ways and Means move to bring up the custom-house bill first, and pass it, and then proceed with the deficiency bill? Since they made a blunder in the first instance, in not making a joint report of the bills, as they intended, why did they not remedy it in that way? Gentlemen tell us that the other bill will be taken up when this is disposed of. I do not doubt that my colleague [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will be for taking it up, for I know that he is true to his word when he gives it. But why are we to wait till that time? Simply to gratify a caprice of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Why, sir, if any instruction was given by the House to that committee, it was to report back these appropriations for custom-houses, which, after being fully discussed seriatim in Committee of the Whole, were severally engrafted on the bill, and afterwards confirmed by the House by the yeas and nays when the bill was reported back to the House. Now, we can report this bill before the adjournment this afternoon. The gentleman has the power to pass the bills this afternoon, in my belief, exactly in the shape in which the Democratic majority of this House endeavored to obtain it by reconsiderations, and every other legislative means, after the former bill fell.

There is no substantial reason that has yet been urged upon this floor against the utility of the construction of these custom-houses, or against the appropriation of the sums asked for by the Secretary of the Treasury, and there is no parliamentary impropriety in uniting the two bills, and letting them pass as former deficiency bills have passed.

The question was then taken on Mr. PERKINS's amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not intend to consume the time of the committee. I think that the views of the committee which I have the honor to represent, as well as my own views, have been sufficiently explained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky propose an amendment?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to reduce the appropriation for the custom-house at St. Louis ten dollars.

My colleague [Mr. PRESTON] says that it is in my power, or in the power of the Committee of Ways and Means, to pass this bill before the House adjourns. I suppose he means, by accepting his proposition to put the custom-houses into the deficiency bill as we have reported it. Sir, we take different views of this subject. He is a friend of these appropriations, and so am I; but I take a different view of the subject. I am obliged to do it, because I am admonished by the fate of the former bill, which was matured in the exact form in which he proposes now to mature this one, and which was defeated, not by a tie vote, but by a vote of nearly two to one—

Mr. PRESTON. I would ask the gentleman if there are not guards thrown around the expenditure of the appropriations by this amendment which were not in the former bill, and the absence of which, I think, contributed to its defeat?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. There are certainly some additional guards which I hope will be put upon the custom-house bill when it comes up, if it is to be passed; but I do not think those guards would have changed any vote in the House on the former deficiency bill.

If the Committee of Ways and Means were instructed in anything, it was not to bring right back to this House the bill which had been rejected by an overwhelming vote; and they would have justly subjected themselves to the censure of the House if they had thrown back in its face that bill which had just been defeated by a vote so decisive and overwhelming.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. With the gentleman's permission, I will make a suggestion to him. If he will move to lay aside the present bill for a few moments, and to take up the other bill which has been reported, I think that all difficulty will be avoided.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Does anybody suppose that I would have the face to get up before this body and ask it to lay aside the general deficiency appropriation bill to take up an independent bill, containing appropriations for a few places? I say, with great respect for the gentleman, that the committee would laugh at the proposition. They would not think of accepting it.

Mr. STANTON. I think that the committee would accept it without hesitation.

[Cries of "Make the motion!" "Try it!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will not make the motion. The time is past when I could make any change in the line of policy which the Committee of Ways and Means have thought it their duty to adopt. I must adhere to it.

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri. I will, with the gentleman's permission, ask him a question. I understood him, on yesterday, to remark that he had no doubt that there was a majority of the body in favor of the passage of a bill making appropriations for custom-houses.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do believe there is a majority in favor of it.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, if the gentleman so believes, let me ask him why he objects to connecting them with the ordinary appropriations?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will answer the gentleman by referring him to my remarks made to the committee yesterday.

Mr. OLIVER. If there are a majority in favor of the custom-house appropriations, then, by putting them in the deficiency bill, there will still be a majority in their favor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I understand the gentleman's question. I will briefly answer him, that a majority was indicated in favor of the custom-house appropriations before on a separate vote; but a majority was indicated against the bill which contained those appropriations with others; and I am admonished by the action of the House that a majority will be found against such a bill again, though I believe a majority is in favor of the custom-houses in a separate bill. The gentleman can easily understand how it may be, by the peculiar combinations and coalitions which, unhappily, often take place here, that a majority may be found for a variety of propositions, independent one of another, though they may all fail when in a lump; and this was signally illustrated in the fate of the former deficiency bill. I can make no change, sir.

Mr. CRAIG. I rise, Mr. Chairman, to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. My friends from Tennessee and Missouri [Mr. STANTON and Mr. BENTON] desire to narrow this question down to a single point; and that is, whether these buildings are to be built fire-proof or not, and therefore they desire to put those who voted against the custom-house appropriations in the predicament of wanting the Government to have buildings for those important purposes which were not fire-proof. Now I think that I can satisfy these gentlemen themselves that they have done injustice to those who voted against the appropriations for custom-houses; and in order to do it, I need only refer to the speech which was made by a member of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] when this question was up before. What was that speech? Why, sir, that there had been appropriations made for the construction of the custom-house at Louisville to the amount of $174,892; that $16,000 of it had been laid out for the purchase of a site, and that $6,000 was used for the purpose of excavation, thus leaving $155,892 to be employed in finishing a custom-house—for who? Why, for one surveyor, and, according to the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] thirty-two clerks of the post office department.

Now, so far from this being a question whether the buildings shall be fire-proof or not, it is, I apprehend, whether you shall have substantial buildings for the use of the public officers, such as will meet with the wishes of the people of the country, or whether you shall have those merely for the purposes of ornament to the cities in which they are situated. Now, Mr. Chairman, can it be possible that any man in the world, who has the slightest acquaintance with architecture, can believe for a moment, that a house cannot be built perfectly fire-proof for $155,000, after the site was purchased, and after the excavations were made? I apprehend that no architect would venture on such an opinion as that. But it is said here, that the building was commenced by the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that, therefore, Congress must carry it out. Why, sir, the gentleman who presented the bill from the Committee of Ways and Means made a very different statement. The excavations were made, but the erection of the building was not commenced, and therefore they have a right to go on and erect it with the $155,000, the amount of the original appropriation, and the building to be constructed at that cost will answer all the purposes for which it was intended.

Sir, I humbly apprehend that such a building can be constructed with the original appropriation, and for that reason I voted against this additional appropriation. And I also apprehend that the same reason will apply to every other appropriation of the same sort. I was a little astonished that my friend from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] should have indulged in the course of remarks which he pursued. Why is it that upon all occasions we should have these appeals made to the North, or to the South, or to the East, or to the West? Why does any gentleman—particularly one so national in his views as I know the gentleman from Ohio to be—charge other gentlemen on this floor, who may have voted differently from him, with doing so because they entertained hostility to western interests? I assure the gentleman [Mr. DISNEY] that I am actuated by no such feeling. I entertain no such hostility to the western, or any other section of the country. I would have voted against this appropriation had it been for the East, as I did while it was for the West. In matters of that sort—I will not use the words of a most distinguished gentleman who knew no differences in country—I say, I know no difference in the different sections of this Union upon a question of this sort.

Sir, I was struck by two other remarks—one made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] and the other made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY.] Both these gentlemen seemed to think differently, and both ascribed different reasons for increasing the expenditures in the building of these custom-houses and marine hospitals. One of these gentlemen, the gentleman from Ohio, said that the increased expenditure was in consequence of the increased price of provisions; the other, the gentleman from Kentucky, who seems to be laboring under a kind of mania—if he will allow me to say so—on the subject of public buildings, especially those which are under the charge of military officers, charges that the increased expenditure is owing to the change of site and change of materials that was made from the original contract; and for the purpose of illustrating his position more clearly, he reasserted to-day what he has asserted here time and again, and which I had not before the opportunity of contradicting: he asserted that the changes in respect to the Capitol extension had cost the Government $2,700,000.

Mr. STANTON, (interrupting.) No; I merely said that it would ultimately cost that additional sum. I desire to correct a statement—

Mr. CRAIGE. The gentleman from Kentucky will have time to do so on another occasion, for he introduced a resolution referring that matter to one of the standing committees at the commencement of the session. The gentleman even raised a select committee on the subject, and when they report he can make a full explanation. I think the gentleman should have waited till then. I think it was but fair he should have waited to see the reports of these committees of investigation before he made this gratuitous assertion. He should have waited either for the report on the subject from the regular Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or from the committee which he himself raised. Let them report on the subject, so that the House may have the facts and figures upon which to form their opinions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HESTER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was put; and was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment to the amendment; which was not agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to reduce the appropriations to Louisville and St. Louis five dollars; and I do so simply for the purpose of having an opportunity to make a remark or two on this subject.

I voted for these custom-houses when the deficiency bill was before the House on a former occasion. I believe they are necessary for the public good; but, nevertheless, I am not disposed to sustain this class of improvements, which are calculated to promote the commercial interests of this nation, unless we can have some guarantee that the attention of the legislators of the country will be turned to some other great national interest.

Now, sir, I am a Whig, [laughter,] and I believe in sustaining, by legislative acts, all the great and varied national interests of this country, of which I admit commerce to be an important one. I believe in promoting that other great interest, agriculture. I am in favor of legislating a little for the country as well as for the town. It was once said by some author, I do not recollect who—

[A Voice. Cowper.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. That "God made the country, and man made the town."

[A Voice. That was not Cowper. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. And the school-boy, when he was reciting it, made a slight mistake, and said: "God made the country, and the devil made the town."

Now, sir, I do not know but there was some force in that mistake of the school-boy. At all events, I come here representing a rural district—a constituency which has no direct interest in any of these custom-house appropriations—in any of these projects to improve the country. Their interest is all indirect. They have never asked for them at the hands of Congress, and probably never will. Well, I find every year, when I come here, that in this deficiency bill large appropriations are proposed for these city improvements. I do not see that they in any way directly interest the inland States. Not at all; and, in fact, I doubt whether this whole matter of having a deficiency bill is not all wrong. Congress makes an appropriation for a particular purpose, and the Departments go on and make the expenditure of the amount voted, and then come in and ask for more, under a deficiency bill. It is time, I think, that the whole system should be changed, and that the Departments should be given to understand that they have no power to do in these matters only what Congress has authorized them to do.

Now, sir, it has been suggested that this bill might be laid aside for the purpose of taking up the separate bill reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, making appropriations for the completion of these buildings. I should like, before either of the bills are acted upon, to have an expression of the sentiment of this House in relation to the improvement of our rivers and harbors, and in reference to that great system by which it is proposed to facilitate and promote the agricultural interests of this country. I want to see some test vote taken, by which it will be made to appear that the interests of the farmer are legislated for as well as the interests of the merchant.

It is a very convenient thing, I know, to have an elegant court-room in Cincinnati, and at Mobile. It may be very proper to have elegant and finely-carpeted rooms, where members of the bar can sit at their ease, and try their causes; but, sir, it would also be a very comfortable thing for the farmers of the great Northwest to have railroads upon which they may transport their products to market. It is a very inconvenient thing, very inconvenient indeed, for the farmers out there to be stuck in the mud with their load of potatoes, and when they come here and ask for an appropriation for the purpose of taking the snags out of their rivers; and removing obstructions in their thoroughfares—

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I am willing to refrain from speaking, and to stay here and dispose of this bill to-night; but I think I ought to say, nevertheless, that I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL.] The great trouble with us, that we have too much distrust for each other. One side is afraid that the other will not play fair in the end. I believe that the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will move, when this bill is disposed of, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and endeavor to take up and pass the custom-house and marine hospital bill in good faith. But what guarantee have I, when that bill comes before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that it will not be loaded down with amendments, as the Minnesota bill was the other day. Suppose some good Whig, who believes it his duty to carry out his creed whenever he can, should move to amend the bill by adding some article of the Whig platform upon it; what guarantee have I that some of my Democratic friends, who are anxious to defeat the bill, and thinking that the means will justify the end, will not, for the time being, vote to incorporate into the bill a National bank, or the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands; and then, when the bill comes into the House, our Whig friends will stand true, of course, and our Democratic friends upon this side of the House will desert their new allies, as they did upon the Minnesota bill? But where will be our custom-houses and our hospitals? I think the fairest thing we can do in this matter is to stand side by side in favor of all the estimates, as the Secretary of the Treasury wants us to do. Let there be no division in the Democratic ranks on this amendment! [Laughter.] Let the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Committee of Ways and Means, all stand together; and then let the Democratic members of the House of Representatives back up the Committee of Ways and Means, when they back up the President and his Secretary of the Treasury. [Laughter.] I hope there will be no division in the party to-day.

I do not want it said that this Administration is a pica-yune concern, and that it dare not complete the custom-houses that Whigs began; that it dare not complete the hospitals to protect our sick sailors, that the Whigs began. Are marine hospitals incomplete, and custom-houses also incomplete, to stand as monuments of the meanness of the Democratic party? No, sir. I do not belong to any such party. I am for aiding them more than the Whigs ever did. I am far from withholding money for appropriations of this kind. I am in favor of voting it out liberally. The people will never ask how much money you have expended, but what have you done with it? If you have used it to a good purpose, they will sustain you; but if you have used it wrongfully, they will condemn you, however small the sum. If our friends will stand by the bill, we will put the appropriations for marine hospitals and custom-houses together, and pass them all; and, before the sun goes down, we will pass the bill if the House will only consent to remain in session.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to increase the appropriation for the custom-house at Cincinnati, Ohio, $5,000.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened very attentively to the explanation made by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky who represents the Committee of Ways and Means upon this measure; and, for the life of me, I was not able to hear a single reason given why, if there is a single deficiency which should be supplied by the provisions of this bill, those for custom-houses and marine hospitals should not also be provided for by the same bill.

Now, sir, the Committee of Ways and Means come here and ask us to support the bill under consideration. Well, sir, I expect to vote for the bill, even if the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] should not prevail. I am for making the proper provisions for carrying on the machinery of Government, whether directed by a Whig or Democratic Administration. But we are asked to place in this bill an appropriation of $530,000, which, in my humble judgment, is not a deficiency at all, for the purchase of a site for an assay office in New York.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order—

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot give way. It must certainly be in order to reply to the arguments of a member of the Committee of Ways and Means; to which no objection was made.

Mr. HIBBARD. I insist upon my point of order. It is that the gentleman from Ohio is not confining his remarks to the explanation of his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot tell what application the gentleman will make of his remarks until he has been heard further.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the gentleman had waited a little he would have seen that my remarks were applicable to the amendment I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio must confine himself strictly to the explanation of his amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. So I intend to do. If the Democratic members of this House believed their Secretary of the Treasury, as I believe him, when he says that these are deficiencies—

Mr. HIBBARD. Has the Chair decided my question of order? I submit that the gentleman's remarks are irrelevant to the amendment he has submitted. He proposes to increase the appropriation contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky for the custom-house at Cincinnati $5,000. I ask that the Chair shall decide the question of order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am endeavoring to show that the appropriation for which I ask is a deficiency, according to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot tell what application the gentleman from Ohio will make of his remarks to the amendment he has offered, and therefore cannot decide him to be out of order. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. What I am endeavoring to show is, that these appropriations for the completion of custom-houses and marine hospitals are deficiencies, that they are as such recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and as such properly belong to a deficiency bill. And now for the proof.

I have before me a communication sent to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, by the Secretary of the Treasury, dated January 3, 1854, in which the custom-houses at Cincinnati, Mobile, St. Louis, and the others provided for in this amendment, are particularly noted; and the report shows conclusively, not only the fact that deficiencies do exist, but also shows the importance of making these appropriations upon the part of Congress. I will read to the committee what the Secretary of the Treasury says in reference to the custom-house at Mobile:

"The Department considered that true economy required that a further appropriation of $65,000, to carry out the original design, should be made; and consequently made the estimates therefor, feeling assured that when the facts were brought to the attention of Congress its necessity would be seen, and the appropriation made."

Can words show more palpably the existence of a deficiency in this case, than does this report of the Secretary of the Treasury? No, sir; in my humble judgment, the whole question resolves itself into this: Will you believe the Secretary of the Treasury, when he says that the appropriations for which he asks to complete the custom-houses and marine hospitals are deficiencies, or will you believe the majority of the Committee of Ways and Means, who with the same light you yourselves possess come here and tell you they are not? The Secretary of the Treasury says they are; and the majority of this House, as regards every item contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, have expressed the deliberate opinion that they are; and yet we are asked to reverse the former position of the House, expressed by repeated votes, and to reject this amendment, because the Committee of Ways and Means think the appropriations are not deficiencies. Now, I say to the members of this committee, that I believe they will never get a dollar for one of these custom-houses and marine hospitals if this bill passes, and does not contain these appropriations. I differ with the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.] It is not the design ever to give a dollar for any such purpose, if the bill now under consideration passes.

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri. I think, sir, that I am as sincere a friend to river and harbor improvements as my honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL.] I nevertheless favor appropriations for custom-houses.

It does appear to me remarkably strange, that after the Secretary of the Treasury—of a Democratic Administration too; and if the Democrats are distinguished for any one thing above another, it is for an economical administration of the Government—that after a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, in pursuance of law, and in obedience to his duty, has recommended to this House these appropriations for the completion of custom-houses, gentlemen should rise here and denounce him and charge him with the wildest extravagance. I say to the Democracy in this Hall: if you choose to do so, do it—denounce your Democratic Administration as extravagant. But they have been invested by law with the duty of recommending these estimates and these appropriations, and why should we not adopt them?

Sir, the gentlemen who oppose these appropriations have not furnished the House with one solitary reason, one argument, one fact, one particle of proof, to show that they are extravagant and unnecessary.

What is the history of this matter? Why, sir, a few weeks ago this deficiency bill was under consideration in the House, and amendments making appropriations for every one of these custom-houses were adopted. After those amendments were adopted it was proposed to scuttle the whole bill, and forsake it. It was done. The bill was then referred to the Committee of Ways and Means; and that committee reported back two bills instead of one. The honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] opposes the union of the two bills, because he says he thinks that, while they may pass separately, they cannot pass unitedly. I would ask the honorable gentleman what he means by such a statement as that? If these appropriations for custom-houses have friends enough upon this floor to pass them separately, the ordinary appropriations surely have friends enough. If, then, they are united, does it necessarily follow that they will be defeated? I would like the gentleman to answer that question. It cannot be answered in the affirmative consistently with reason and with sound logic. If these appropriations have friends enough to carry them separately, and the ordinary appropriations to carry on the Government have friends enough, surely if they are united they will all pass. Ah, sir, there is a trick in it. I do not say that it is a trick of the gentleman from Kentucky, but it signifies something. Let this bill containing the ordinary appropriations pass, and then, in my opinion, these custom-houses may whistle. [A laugh.] I appeal to the friends of the custom-houses—I appeal to you who represent States which are interested in these custom-houses—not to be caught by any such trick, or in any such trap. For my part, if gentlemen will not allow them to be united, I will vote against the whole of them.

The Secretary of the Treasury has reported these appropriations as deficiencies. It is upon the same responsibility that he has recommended to this body appropriations for other purposes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 98, noes 41.

The committee thereupon rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. CHANDLER] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under their consideration the Union generally, and especially House bill (No. 271) entitled "A bill to supply the deficiencies in the appropriation for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the House (at forty-five minutes past three o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER. After which the reverend gentleman said:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: At the suggestion of members of your own body, and by leave of the honorable Speaker, I have the pleasure to announce that Rev. Dr. Duff, of the Free Church of Scotland, long a missionary at Calcutta, will occupy this desk Sabbath morning next, at eleven o'clock. In the present condition of my health, it is very gratifying to me to be able to have so talented and excellent a substitute as the Reverend Doctor. We shall be happy to see the members of this House present on that occasion.

The Journal of yesterday was then read and approved.

ARRIVALS IN THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the State Department, transmitting, agreeably to the act of Congress of March, 1819, regulating the passenger ships and vessels, the annual statement of the number and designation of passengers arriving in the United States by sea from foreign countries during the year ending December 31, 1853, compiled from returns made to the Department by the collectors of customs.

On motion by Mr. HAVEN, it was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

MOBILE HARBOR.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask leave to present to the House the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Alabama, relating to the improvement of the harbor of Mobile. As they are lengthy, I shall not ask for their reading. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bill No. 151, entitled "An act for the relief of George G. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased."

Mr. CLINGMAN. How does that bill come before us for consideration? Does it come under the order in relation to private bills?

The SPEAKER. This is private bill day.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I think that we had better finish the deficiency bill to-day. I intended to have made the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It is in order on Fridays and Saturdays to lay before the House the private bills on the table from the Senate.

Mr. EDGERTON. All the private bills on the table from the Senate had better be laid before us, and referred to the standing committees this morning.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My friend from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] feels it to be his duty to submit a motion that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar; but I do not think that he is unwilling that we should go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to finish the deficiency bill we took up yesterday. If it be in order, as we are half through with it, I will move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] be kind enough to withdraw his motion for a moment?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Certainly, sir.

Mr. JONES. Then I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation, Mr. EDGERTON. I object.

Mr. JONES. I regret exceedingly that anything should have occurred in this House—

The SPEAKER, (interposing.) Objection has been made. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] withdraw his objection?

Mr. EDGERTON. If it is a privileged question that the gentleman desires to make I am willing to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation. The Chair cannot determine whether that explanation contains privileged matter or not.

Mr. EDGERTON. Well, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection being withdrawn, the gentleman from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. JONES. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Speaker, that anything should have occurred in this House to compel me, a new member, and, as the whole House knows, one who has not occupied the attention of the House heretofore, to make a personal explanation. However, certain remarks fell from the lips of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] yesterday, which I felt it my duty to correct at the time, as they contained an attack on the intelligence of the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

I understood the gentleman from Ohio to state yesterday, and I presume it was the understanding of every member of this House, that he had been informed, through all the public prints, that a resolution had been introduced in the Legislature of Louisiana, reflecting on the Executive of the United States, for not interposing to arrest the progress of civilization in Cuba. Mark the words: "to arrest the progress of civilization in Cuba." I got up promptly in my seat, and stated that no such resolutions had been offered in the Legislature of Louisiana.

Now I see, sir, in the morning prints, that it is stated that the gentleman from Ohio made the remark that the Legislature of Louisiana had censured the President of the United States for not interposing to arrest the progress of emancipation. I will read his words, as they appear in the report:

"Resolutions are pending, or have been pending, censuring the Executive of the United States for non-interference to prevent emancipation in Cuba."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the gentleman to make any such remark. He certainly said "civilization," not "emancipation." I at least so understood him, and it was on this remark that I based my denial of it. Now, in justice to my honorable colleague, [Mr. PERKINS,] who is not present here, I will say that I have no doubt he understood the gentleman from Ohio, in the hurry of his remarks, to make allusion to a resolution which had been introduced into the Legislature of Louisiana. That was a resolution calling attention to the fact of the treaties which were being made to africanize Cuba, not to prevent the progress of civilization there. And hence it was, I have no doubt, that my honorable colleague stated that such a resolution had been introduced into the Legislature of Louisiana.

Sir, while I am up, I feel it due to myself and to the House to say that the expression which I used yesterday was one which should not have been used even to the gentleman from Ohio. I stated that I believed he had seen no such statement in any paper. I do not yet think that he has seen any statement in the papers to the effect that the Legislature of Louisiana has had before them resolutions censuring the President of the United States for not interposing and arresting the progress of civilization in the Island of Cuba. But I am willing to say, that in all probability the gentleman believes he has seen such a statement, for in all matters connected with the subject of slavery I know he is very much disposed to look at the harshest side of the picture in reference thereto. It may be an honest fanaticism which he cherishes, and therefore I am willing to say that I do not mean that he stated a falsehood upon this floor, but that he was mistaken in supposing that he had seen any such statement in reference to the matter.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I too ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is it the will of the House that the gentleman from Ohio shall have the privilege of making a personal explanation?

No objection was made.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Towards the gentleman from Louisiana, who has just addressed the House, nor towards any other gentleman upon this floor, do I entertain any disrespect. Neither did I intend any disrespect to any State in this Union, in the remarks which I made yesterday, and it is impossible for me to apprehend how any gentleman could have misunderstood those remarks.

I know not how I am reported in the morning papers, for I have not seen one of them. I distinctly set forth, that in reference to Cuba there was a system of emancipation; it results from what is called a system of "freeing the emancipados;" that of limiting the price of slaves; and, thirdly, the colonization scheme, having for its object the bringing to Cuba other persons for labor. These are all regarded as tending to emancipation in that island.

So far as regards the language or words I used upon that occasion I can only say that "emancipation" and "civilization" were used as synonymous, and I believe the whole English language will bear me out in that position.

In regard to the action of the Legislature of Louisiana, I distinctly stated that I had been informed by the public prints that resolutions had been pending in that Legislature censuring or blaming the President of the United States for his inattention to these efforts at emancipation in Cuba. I intended no imputation upon that State, and I say to the gentleman now that I intended to speak nothing more than the truth just exactly as it was impressed upon my mind; and when the gentleman from Louisiana rose in his place, and said he did not believe that I had seen the statement to which I referred, I thought it discourteous. I treated it so at the time. I have now no concessions to make to that gentleman for saying that he believes I am honest, but mistaken. I am not called upon to extend to him that kind of charity. I ask no such charity, and I receive no such charity from any hands. God has given me power to express my own thoughts, and I ask no other than a fair interpretation of my language. I believe the gentleman did not give that construction to the remarks I made yesterday.

Here I take occasion to say to that gentleman, and to all other gentlemen upon this floor, that in all my intercourse with them they must expect me to demand from them the same courtesy which I extend to them. When I speak of the slaveholder, I shall place the same respectful construction on my language which they give to theirs when they speak of the Abolitionists; and I will regard the Abolitionists as standing upon the same level with slaveholders, and a little higher.

Mr. HAVEN. If there is any interruption in the business, I desire to say to the Chair that I now insist upon the regular order of business.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I believe that it is now in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with a view of finishing the bill which we had under discussion yesterday. I therefore make that motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist upon the regular order of business.

Mr. McMULLIN. I hope that the House will not resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

The question was then taken on Mr. BRECKINRIDGE's motion; and, a division being had, there were—ayes 91, noes 31.

Mr. BENTON. By the permission of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] before the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole, I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Are we not in the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The House having voted to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the Chair having announced the fact, it would not be in order to proceed to any other business.

Mr. BENTON. But if unanimous consent is given, would it not be in order?

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resolution will be read for information.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If it is the unanimous consent of the House, and the resolution does not give rise to debate, I certainly shall not object to its introduction.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to the House of Representatives all the proceedings, if any, which have been had to carry into effect the act of the last session of Congress, whereby he was "authorized, immediately after the passage of the act, to enter into negotiations with the Indian tribes west of the States of Missouri and Iowa, for the purpose of securing the assent of the said tribes to the settlement of the citizens of the United States upon the lands claimed by said Indians, and for the purpose of extinguishing the title of said Indian tribes in whole or in part to said lands;" and also that he inform the House whether any part of the sum of $50,000 appropriated for the purposes of said act has been expended, and if so, to cause a detailed statement of such expenditure to be communicated to the House, item by item.

The SPEAKER. Is it the unanimous wish of the House that the resolution be adopted? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The House then resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 271, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1854.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday the debate upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio had been exhausted. The question now is upon the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] which is to increase the appropriation for the custom-house at Cincinnati, $5,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask leave of the committee to withdraw the amendment I offered.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move the following as an amendment to the amendment of my colleague:

Provided, That no officer employed in the United States Army shall be employed to superintend the construction of any building for which appropriation is made in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not be able to say in a five minutes' speech more than one tenth of what I would like to say in support of that amendment. The honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CRAIG,] yesterday, took occasion to charge me with indulging a kind of mania upon the subject of employing military officers to superintend the construction of civil works, and to perform various other kinds of civil service. Well, sir, he may call it what he pleases. If it be a mania, it is one which looks to the correction of a great wrong, and one which I trust I shall cherish so long as the wrong continues to exist.

Sir, if the honorable gentleman from North Carolina had had the same experience which I have had in connection with the public and other buildings in the country; if he knew the extent to which the evil I complain of has gone, he would not charge me with having a mania upon the subject; he would not charge that my assertions on the subject were "gratuitous."

Sir, does the honorable gentleman know that there are three scientific corps belonging to the Army—the Topographical, the Ordnance, and the Engineer Corps? Does he know that these three corps consist of one hundred and twenty-five officers; and does he know that out of these one hundred and twenty-five officers seventy are quartered upon the civil service of the Government? Yes, sir, seventy out of the one hundred and twenty-five. I have here a list of their names, which I shall incorporate into my speech, that the country may see to what extent the military power is superseding the civil in the operations of this republican Government:

LIST OF OFFICERS OF THE ARMY EMPLOYED ON CIVIL WORKS.
Ordnance Corps. Maj. James W. Ripley,
Capt. Benjamin Huger,
Lieut. J. L. Reno—3.

Corps of Top. Engineers.

Lieut. Col. James Kearney,
Capt. E. L. F. Hardcastle,
Maj. H. Bache,
Capt. L. Sitgreaves,
Capt. J. C. Woodruff,
Capt. J. D. Webster,
Lieut. G. G. Meade,
Lieut. W. B. Franklin,
Capt. J. E. Johnston,
Lieut. J. W. Abert,
Capt. J. McClelland,
Major. W. Turnbull,
Capt. A. Canfield,
Lieut. Geo. H. Derby,
Maj. S. H. Long,
Capt. J. H. Simpson,
Lieut. M. S. Smith,
Lieut. F. T. Bryan,
Capt. T. J. Lee,
Capt. Geo. Thom,
Capt. T. J. Cram,
Capt. W. R. Palmer,
Capt. J. N. Macomb,
Capt. E. P. Scammon,
Lieut. W. F. Reynolds,
Lieut. Geo. W. Rose,
Capt. W. H. Emory,
Lieut. N. Michler,
Lieut. A. W. Whipple,
Lieut. R. S. Williamson,
Lieut. John G. Parker,
Lieut. J. C. Ives,
Lieut. G. R. Warren,
Lieut. W. R. Boggs—35.

Corps of Engineers.

Lieut. Col. S. Thayer,
Lieut. Col. R. E. DeKusey,
Maj. J. L. Smith,
Maj. W. H. Chase,
Maj. C. A. Ogden,
Capt. H. Brewerton,
Capt. Geo. Dutton,
Capt. A. H. Bowman,
Capt. J. G. Barnard,
Capt. Geo. W. Cullum,
Capt. W. D. Fraser,
Capt. John Sanders,
Capt. H. W. Benham,
Capt. D. Leadbetter,
Capt. M. C. Meigs,
Capt. P. G. T. Beauregard,
Capt. J. F. Gilmer,
Lieut. John Newton,
Lieut. B. S. Alexander,
Lieut. E. B. Hunt,
Lieut. Geo. B. McClellan,
Lieut. G. E. Blunt,
Lieut. J. G. Foster,
Lieut. W. P. Trowbridge,
Lieut. A. J. Donelson,
Lieut. W. H. Stevens,
Lieut. W. H. C. Whitney,
Lieut. Geo. L. Andrews,
Lieut. Jas. L. C. Morton,
Lieut. Thos. L. Casey,
Lieut. N. F. Alexander,
Lieut. W. P. Craighill—32.
Infantry.
Capt. Seth Eastman.

I repeat, that more than one half of all the officers composing these three corps are employed in various ways in the civil service of the Government, where none but civilians should be engaged. Some of these very men, whose regular Army pay, as will be seen by the Blue Book, does not exceed $600 per year, out of these and other appropriations which we make from year to year, receive enough to swell their yearly allowances to $3,000. No wonder civil service is desirable to them, in preference to that for which they are educated.

So far has this system been carried of taking men from the Army for civil employment, that you cannot whitewash the rooms of the White House, tack down the carpets, paper the walls, or hang the tapestry, but an engineer officer must be called from his Army duties to superintend these dignified operations. In England, where titles are more common—and who love titles more than military men?—I suppose a person performing these important duties for her Majesty would have been honored with the title of Upholsterer to her Majesty. How would it have looked, when the papers of this city were complimenting Captain Lee, of the Engineer Corps, for his taste and skill displayed in refitting the presidential mansion, to have styled him Upholsterer to his Excellency the President of the United States?

Sir, the hook of this Administration is not so firmly fixed in my nose that I am compelled to sanction and justify any wrongs which may be tolerated and sustained by it. I am not bound by any principle of Democracy to stand by and approve a usurpation of power, and a perversion of the very principles of civil liberty itself, because they happen to be committed by a Democratic Secretary of War, and are approved and sustained by all the power of the War Department. I charge, and it cannot be denied, that the War Department has gradually and insidiously engrossed and monopolized as many of the civil places of the Government as it could, and by this means has been able to give snug and comfortable positions to its favorites, until the evil has become wide spread and dangerous. The most inconsiderable structure, post offices, custom-houses, &c., are built now under the charge of Army officers, while in all parts of the Union works, large and small, are under their care, with but little regard to their capacity and fitness for the positions. Such a state of things is not even allowed in Great Britain, under the monarchy of Queen Victoria. In the dominions of that sovereign, I understand, there are no such encroachments of the military upon the civil departments of the Government, so jealous are her subjects of the rights of civil liberty. Military men, with their arbitrary power and habits, are not allowed to superintend there the operations of mechanics and artisans, and English operatives would not submit to it. Why should they be required to submit to it here, where every man is a freeman, and every man has equal rights, and none his superior?

But the gentleman charges that my remarks in relation to the military superintendence of the Capitol extension were "gratuitous." Now, sir, I tell that gentleman that when he has given the subject the attention I have—when he gets other authority than those interested in keeping up the military system—when he learns from those who are outside of the influence of the War Department, and are able to testify to the folly, waste, and extravagance displayed in the management of the work and the procurement of materials, he will find my assertions not altogether "gratuitous," but amply sustained by the facts. I have here the original report of the architect, communicated to Congress by the President, and upon which all subsequent appropriations for the building have been predicated. It appears from this report, that the whole cost of the work, to complete it thoroughly, was set down at $2,675,000. Up to the time when military rule was spread over the work, but $600,000 had been expended, and the expenditures were kept scrupulously within the estimates. If it had gone on in the same manner, under the charge of competent and faithful civilians, the ultimate cost need not have exceeded the original estimates. But we have already appropriated $1,600,000 for the work, and not one third is yet done. The basement and part of the first story is built, but the work remaining to do is twice as much more. Remember, that the second story will contain as much work as the basement and first story together; and in addition to that, you have to build six large porticos, besides colonades, to connect the wings to the main building, and terraces to finish off the grounds. These porticos will cost not less than $300,000 each, as each will be not only large and spacious, but highly ornamental.

The statement I made yesterday, and which the honorable gentleman so positively contradicted, I do affirm is true, and time will prove it. The building will cost twice the sum originally estimated; and, what is worse, I verily believe it will be ruined. Yes, sir, completely ruined. The alterations of the plan made necessary new foundations; and these have necessarily cut up and destroyed, for all useful purpose, all the rooms in the basement, which might otherwise have been finished and used for committees, as those in the basement of this House are used. My time will not allow me to point out other serious injuries which the alterations which have been made in the plan will occasion to the House—

Mr. CRAIG. If I had any doubt yesterday that the gentleman from Kentucky labored under a slight mania on this subject, the remarks that he has made this morning have satisfied me beyond all sort of doubt. Why did I make that remark yesterday? Congress was scarcely in session before the gentleman, from some cause or other—I do not say what, for I am not disposed to look into the motives of members; I am charitable enough to believe that every man discharges his public duty according to the dictates of his own conscience, and according to what he thinks right, and for the interest of the country, I might possibly assign a motive, if I were so disposed; but I will not do it upon this occasion, or on any other, unless I am driven to it by the course of remark pursued by the gentleman—I said that Congress had hardly met before the gentleman introduced a resolution into this House, inquiring why the change was made in the superintendence of the work on the Capitol extension. He had that resolution referred to one of the regular standing committees of this House.

Now, after what has taken place between that gentleman and myself, I think it a little extraordinary that he should, upon this occasion, have charged me with getting all the information that I possess upon this subject from the Secretary of War and the engineer who has control over the work. As the gentleman had introduced the resolution, and as he had been for a long time chairman of the committee to which it was referred, and as the $1,600,000 spoken of by him had probably been expended under his management, I called upon him to give me all the information he possessed upon the subject. He very kindly did so. I called upon the engineer in charge of the work, and obtained all the information I could from him. I called also upon the architect of the building, and from all these sources of information, I made the assertion, and I repeat it to-day, that the statement that the additional cost in consequence of the change in the direction of the work will be $2,700,000, is entirely gratuitous. I venture to say that it will not cost one dollar more in the end than it would have done under the former superintendence.

But let me return to the point about which the gentleman seems to complain, and that is the remark that he is laboring under a mania on this subject. Why, sir, the gentleman has let no opportunity pass to have a fling at Captain Meigs, the distinguished officer who has this work in charge, and than whom, I do not believe, a better or more competent man is to be found in this or any other country.

Why, after that resolution had been referred to the committee; after they had gone on with their investigation, aided by the gentleman himself, with all his extraordinary learning and information on this subject, he was not content; but after pledging himself that he would not introduce a resolution disagreeable to the committee, he came into this House on another occasion, without consultation with them, and thereby indirectly casting an imputation upon them, and moved to raise a special committee on the public works of the country, professedly in relation to the armories; in reality, Mr. Chairman, I think it was raised to reach those who had charge of this Capitol extension.

Now, I do not know what the gentleman means by having a ring in one's nose. I do not know whether that is the way they manage people in his part of the country who are under the control of others. If he means to impute by such a remark that I am any more under the control of those in power than he is, if he knew me a little better he would do me more justice. I intend to discharge the duties devolving on me as a member of this body fearlessly, and in such manner as I think will redound to the interest and honor of our common country.

The question was then put on the amendment to the amendment; and, on a division, there were—ayes 72, noes 57.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I demand tellers on the question.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is it in order to call for tellers after the vote has been announced?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to demand tellers before the result is announced. The Chair had only announced the vote.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and WHEELER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 53.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] as amended,

Mr. ORR demanded tellers.

Mr. McMULLIN. Is it in order to offer now an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON?]

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to amend by adding to the amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I dislike to raise a question of order upon my friend from Virginia, but I must remind the Chair that a vote was being taken, and the House in the act of dividing; and I make the point, that it is not in order to offer an amendment at such a time.

The CHAIRMAN. The House was being counted, but the result had not been announced when tellers were called for, and consequently there has as yet been no vote.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Both sides of the House were counted, and I believe the result was announced when tellers were demanded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he is right in accepting the amendment.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to strike out from the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky $1,000 of the appropriation for the custom-house at Louisville.

I remember, when this bill was under consideration at a former period, that we were then informed that the sum of $75,000 was amply sufficient to complete that work. I remember, too, the course pursued by the gentleman who now represents Louisville [Mr. PRESTON] during the last Congress. But my purpose now is more particularly to notice some remarks which fell, some time since, from the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL;] and I call the attention of this committee to the fact that that gentleman notified the House and the country that your former Whig Secretary had recommended that that custom-house be built for the sum of $75,000, while the present Democratic Secretary must have $175,000. I ask if gentlemen are prepared to allow the Democratic party thus to be charged by gentlemen upon the other side of the House without proper resentment?

I desire to call the attention of the committee to another fact. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH,] who is a very liberal gentleman, called upon the committee yesterday afternoon to know whether this Democratic Congress would not sustain the recommendations of the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury? In the judgment of that gentleman, if they failed to do it, this Administration would be characterized at the North as a picayune Administration. That member should be disposed to legislate with the people's money as he would with his own—that is, with just economy. He would not then be disposed to characterize the Democratic Administration as a picayune concern. It is my policy, and every member here should feel it to be his duty, to manage the financial affairs of this Government as he would manage with his own. Does the member from Illinois do it? It is for him to answer the question.

But I desire to call the attention of the committee to another fact. In regard to the bargain proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, and the intimation made by him, that by uniting those two bills together you could pass them, I tell gentlemen upon the other side of the House that they can do no such thing, in my opinion. There were enough of us the other day to defeat the deficiency bill, and those same gentlemen are here now. If those gentlemen, so liberal with the people's money choose to load down this bill with these unnecessary and improper appropriations, we will defeat the bill again. I desire to see this deficiency bill pass; but if gentlemen upon the other side of the House choose to clog it with improper amendments, they will defeat it; and the responsibility will fall upon them for its defeat, and not upon me. I should like to see the time arrive when the estimates submitted by your Executive officers to this House for the administration of this Government, shall come up nearly to the point.

It is time that we stop these deficiency bills. I am willing, for one, to meet the responsibility of stopping the wheels of this Government, if thereby you can stop them by the rejection of this bill. If you clog this bill as you did before, and my vote will aid in defeating it, I will meet the responsibility as I did before; and I will do it, too, with great pleasure. I hope that gentlemen here of the Democratic party will not be alarmed by the threats which have been held out over us. I tell gentlemen that I am not to be deterred by any such threats. If those gentlemen who favor the appropriations for your custom-houses, &c., can carry their measures when their bill comes up, why, be it so.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am opposed to the amendment of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN.] He has thrown down gloves enough to engage us in a struggle of a week, if they should all be taken up; but I hope we shall not enter into the war. For my friend from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] I will take the liberty to answer that he does not want a fight now. I have no objection, when a proper occasion arrives, that both these gentlemen should discuss any question of politics which they may think proper to bring forward; but I trust that the invitation which has been extended by the gentleman from Virginia will not now be accepted. I know his gallantry, and the gallantry of the gentlemen to whom he referred, and their willingness to enter into a general discussion; but I call their attention, and the attention of the committee, to the fact, that now for two days we have, in five minute speeches, been discussing, not the merits of the bill itself, but everything else on earth which could enter into the heads of gentlemen. The committee will bear me out in saying, and I think I can say so without any impropriety, as I have been one of the speakers, that, for two days past, no new fact has been elicited, and no new line of argument has been struck out in regard to this bill.

Therefore I appeal to the committee—I know it is not in my power to call the previous question here—but I appeal to them to desist from the discussion of matters entirely irrelevant to the bill. Surely two days are enough of the public time to waste in the discussion of irrelevant matters, when the pressure of the public business is so great. Let us come to a vote. This is the last appeal I shall make to the committee. I do not intend to discuss the question further. I oppose the amendment, and ask for a vote upon it.

The question was taken, and Mr. McMULLIN's amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move to increase the appropriation $1,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am anxious to pass this bill. I will do as much, according to my ability, as any other gentleman to pass such a bill as I believe the wants of the country demand, at as early a day as possible.

Now, sir, I am of the opinion that our national affairs should be conducted upon the same principle as our private affairs. I ask, what would be the course of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN,] and every other man, in a case like that now presented to us? If that gentleman had commenced the construction of a building, would he not complete it? Why, sir, if a man has a building incomplete, the safe conduct of private affairs would require its completion. I find this state of things to exist in regard to our public buildings. I find that there are certain custom-houses and certain marine hospitals incomplete. I am not responsible for the commencement of these buildings by any means; but I say, that if they were my private property—if I had commenced the construction of any building whatever, I would complete it.

So in this case, were it a question whether these buildings should be commenced or not, I do not say that I would be in favor of them; probably a large majority of the House would not be in favor of them. But it is not a matter as to the propriety of erecting these custom-houses and marine hospitals as an original measure. The question is, whether you will complete the buildings which have been commenced long ago, and which are incomplete? That is the question, and the only one, upon which the committee are called upon to act.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I acknowledge the force of the remarks of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRACKINRIDGE] in reference to irrelevant discussion upon this bill, and I would postpone any response to the remarks of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN,] but I prefer to settle these little accounts as we go along.

The only remarks which I submitted in reference to this matter, when the subject of custom-houses was before under discussion in this committee, was simply this: That the Secretary of the Treasury had recommended a particular amount as necessary to complete the custom-house at Louisville. I did say that I presumed that officer knew better than any other person what was necessary to complete that building. Now, sir, I take it for granted that the Secretary of the Treasury is an economical officer. The Democratic party have placed him in power. He is the sworn guardian of the public Treasury. I am not responsible for his being placed there. I am not responsible for any errors that may exist—if there be any existing—in his estimates. It is the gentleman from Virginia, and the party to which the honorable gentleman belongs, who are responsible. That party are responsible—they are accountable; and if there be error, let the gentleman show it. If the amounts recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury are not required for the purposes of promoting the public interest, let the gentleman show it, and let him denounce the head of the Treasury Department therefor; but let him not charge us, a feeble minority in this House, with throwing obstacles in the way of the Government.

Sir, I do not wish to prolong this debate. As I said yesterday, I am not much in favor of hurrying legislation for the construction of these custom-houses, for the reason that there are other great interests that are suffering quite as much as the commercial interests of the country.

I adverted to the fact yesterday, and I now call attention to it again, that nothing has been done for the agricultural interest. To be sure, this bill now contains a miserable pittance of a few thousand dollars to buy garden seeds. You legislate away hundreds and thousands of dollars to erect magnificent edifices in your cities, but when the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. TRACY] came here and asked for a few thousand dollars for an interchange of seeds and the collection of agricultural statistics, it was very grudgingly given by the House.

Sir, our constituents will ask us, when we return to them, what we have done for the great national interests—agriculture, commerce, and the mechanic arts. We can respond that we have built elegant custom-houses in the large cities of the Union, for the benefit of the commercial interest. But when they ask us what we have done for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country, we shall be compelled to tell them that we have done nothing; for there is no man here, I venture to say, who would undertake to assert that any river and harbor bill will pass this Congress. We have tried to make artificial thoroughfares by railroads, but they are to be stricken down; ay, and that too by the very men who are now claiming these appropriations. All that I can say to the farming interest of my district when I return there, is, that we have voted money enough to give a paper of cabbage seed to every township! That is all that has been done, and all that will be done for the great interest of agriculture; and though I am willing, for the purpose of promoting the commercial interest, to vote for these custom-houses at a proper time, believing them to be necessary and proper, according to the estimates of the Department, yet I am not disposed to be in hot haste about it.

The question was then taken on Mr. WENTWORTH's amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. PRESTON's amendment.

Mr. WADE. Is it in order now to offer an amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. WADE. Then I propose to amend the amendment by adding five dollars to the appropriation for the marine hospital at Cleveland, and I do it merely as the foundation of some remarks in favor of these appropriations, and of introducing them into this bill.

Now, with regard to this particular building which I have in charge—the marine hospital at Cleveland—I speak from my own knowledge of its condition, and I know that this appropriation is needed, and will be granted, unless the Government is not disposed to do with its own property and interests that which, if done by a private individual, would justly subject him to a commission of lunacy. Here is a building designed for seamen who are disabled by sickness and disease, incident to the hardships of their most indispensable and yet much neglected and thankless calling. Your laws compel them to pay you twenty cents per month out of their own hard earnings to the hospital fund. In the city of Cleveland you have levied in this way on these seamen an annual sum of $1,200 and upwards, and have raised their expectations that, when sick and disabled, they are to have this retreat, where they will be cared for and protected from pauperism and destitution; and yet, under a spasm of economy, you are now to blast these hopes, and leave them to wonder at a fickleness in the Government worse to meet and buffet than the elements which they daily encounter. In my humble judgment, these poor fellows, shipwrecked in the frosts of winter, some with limbs frozen, others with ship fever, or disabled by one or another of the diseases and accidents to which the nature of their calling so peculiarly exposes them, have as much claim on the beneficence of this Government, nay, on its justice, as have the Capitol grounds for appropriation for the mere purpose of ornament, or as the grounds surrounding the President's mansion have for a few ornamental trees and tree-boxes, or as Pennsylvania avenue, in the neighborhood of Seventh street—I believe it is—for gas lights? We need light here; there is no manner of doubt of this; but gas light about Pennsylvania avenue is not all the light we need. And yet the Committee of Ways and Means have reported all these things in this deficiency bill as matters of pressing necessity, which will brook no delay.

Here, too, you have in this deficiency bill an appropriation for each of the heads of Departments of the sum of $1,853, for arrearages of salary; and these gentlemen are in great straits for these arrearages; and yet I am of the opinion that these sick mariners at Cleveland, and the various other points where these hospitals are located, are just as necessitous, to say the least, as these high official dignitaries. I think they are as deserving of the care and protection of the Government, for which they have paid, and which is to them a necessity, as are any of those persons for whose benefit the committee have drafted and are now advocating this bill. But, sir, those who are here where the public crib is have many ways of making their wants known, and their cries of distress heard, which the poor sailor has not, and hence the danger that the poor will be neglected, while the great will be heard and heeded.

Mr. MAXWELL. I am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WADE.] It is not my purpose, however, to discuss that amendment. I shall confine the few remarks I have to submit to the general amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to opposition to the amendment as closely as possible.

Mr. MAXWELL. I shall confine them as closely to it as gentlemen who discuss these amendments usually do; and I think that I may talk about anything under that privilege.

I was one of those, Mr. Chairman, who, when the deficiency bill was before this body some weeks since, acted with the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] and other gentlemen, who inserted into that bill the various items now proposed in this amendment. I did it in good faith. I believed, under the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, and on the merits of the propositions, independently considered, that they were entitled to my vote, and I so gave it. I voted to insert most of these different propositions into that bill, and I voted for the final passage of the bill as a whole. But where did I find myself standing in this House? I observed the fact that many gentlemen who voted as I did on that occasion, who voted to insert these separate items, one by one, from the beginning to the end of the catalogue, when the bill came up to be finally acted upon voted against it. I was brought to consider in what position I had placed myself. I was brought to inquire when I found the friends—the peculiar friends of these measures—themselves withdrawing from the position in which they desired to place, what they called, the majority of this body, whether the expression of distrust of their own measures, was not enough to press me, who had no peculiar interest in them, to change the position which I then occupied.

Sir, as to the bill which was defeated, if the House did wrong in defeating it, the responsibility of that wrong rests on those who acted in the manner which I have indicated, namely, attempting to force upon the Committee of Ways and Means, and upon the House, and upon the majority, if you please, these different items, believing that the majority would not fail to pass the bill with all its objectionable features, even though many of them voted against separate amendments. They believed that the bill would go down, and that though they had placed it there they would not be held responsible before this committee and before the country. Well, sir, this is a sort of legislation which I do not appreciate. But what I purpose to say further on the subject is simply this: that whatever may be my action on these separate items, when they come to be considered and voted on, I think that this bill should be taken separately. Why not? Carry it on as you did before, and insert all these items, and will not the same causes and influences which defeated the first defeat also the second? There is no reason to suppose that they will not. And because I anticipate that result; because I believe that as to this bill separately there is an urgency demanding immediate action, I will vote for it, and against the amendments.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. No further debate is in order.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio; which was not agreed to.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the amendment as amended that no salary shall be paid to any Superintendent that shall exceed one thousand dollars per annum.

Mr. HOUSTON. I make a point of order on my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.] I believe that it has been universally ruled that a gentleman is not permitted to amend or propose to amend his own amendment. I do that for the purpose of getting along with the business before us.

Mr. PRESTON. I would simply state that I conceive I understand the rule, and that I do not propose to violate it. This amendment has been twice amended, and in no sense can it be called mine, any more than it can be called that of any other gentleman in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the usual decision of the Chair on this point, that no person is allowed to amend his own amendment.

Mr. ORR. Will it be in order, Mr. Chairman, now to move to reduce the appropriation for the Louisville custom-house to one dollar?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that amendment will be in order.

Mr. ORR. Well, then, I propose to amend the amendment by reducing the appropriation for the Louisville custom-house to one dollar, and I do so to allow the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON.] to be also heard in reply to the question propounded to him. When this debate occurred first, a month ago, on the deficiency bill, I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to state on the floor that contracts had been made by the former Secretary of the Treasury to complete the custom-house at Louisville for the sum of money which was originally appropriated for that purpose; and that when the present Secretary of the Treasury was installed into office, this contract was canceled, thereby conveying the impression that, for some cause or other, under the administration of the present Secretary of the Treasury, a sum of forty or fifty thousand dollars was needed to complete the building. Did I understand the gentleman from Kentucky correctly in that respect?

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman did not understand me correctly; and if he will permit me, I will recapitulate what I stated in my former remarks. I stated last year in this House that the sum of $75,000 appropriated for the construction of the custom-house at Louisville was not sufficient; and that the Secretary of the Treasury had informed me that he had received a bid amounting to $162,742, for which the custom-house could be completed. I moved for that amount, and it was granted last year; but the present Secretary did not accept those bids. The subsequent rise in the price of labor and materials, in the interim, had increased the subsequent bids. The amount between the present lettings and the old constitutes the difference which the Secretary now asks.

Mr. ORR, (interrupting.) No contracts were then made?

Mr. PRESTON. None at all. Bids were made, but no contracts by the former Secretary.

Mr. ORR. I misunderstood the gentleman, for I understood him to say that contracts had been made; and sir, if I had understood the gentleman correctly, at least that appropriation for Louisville should not be voted.

I voted against all these custom-house and marine hospital appropriations on a former occasion, when the first bill was under consideration. I was one of those who voted against the passage of that deficiency bill; and if those appropriations are put upon this bill, I shall vote against it a second time, and assist to defeat it. I do not think the deficiency bill should be encumbered with them. I believe they are unnecessarily large and extravagant, in many instances; and I am of opinion furthermore that our Executive officers should begin to learn that the will of Congress should be consulted when they are expending the public money, rather than their own caprices. When Congress makes appropriations, and in making them declares that the sums so appropriated shall complete the buildings, the officers who have charge of the disbursement should make the contracts accordingly.

On that account I shall vote now against all these sums on actual and projected contracts for additional work on the buildings, believing that the will of Congress, as expressed through the two Houses, should be respected by the Executive officers. I think the gentlemen who usually sit upon this side of the House, ought to vote against putting these appropriations in the deficiency bill. I think they ought to pass the deficiency bill proper, and relieve such persons as are now suffering at the hands of the Shylocks for the want of the money justly due them by the Government, and also to relieve the different branches of the public service from the straightened circumstances in which they find themselves; and then, if the custom-house appropriations have strength enough to go through, let them be put through independently, and apart from this bill.

Eighty gentlemen voted before to put these custom-house appropriations upon the deficiency bill. After loading it down by their votes, did they stand by their bantling and sustain it? No, sir; when they had encumbered it by their votes, they left it to the fate which its enemies visited on it—less than fifty of the eighty who voted for the passage of custom-house appropriations, voted for the bill on its final passage; and hence its defeat. I suggest to the gentlemen upon this side of the House, that if they expect to pass this bill they should keep it unencumbered with custom-house and all other appropriations not belonging legitimately to a deficiency bill. If the friends of such appropriations have strength enough afterwards to pass that bill, let them unite and do it.

I believe, if unfortunately they shall succeed in putting the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON.] in this bill, we will not succeed in passing the deficiency bill before the first of July. I trust, therefore, that the amendment will be rejected, if the Democrats here expect to pass the deficiency bill.

Mr. PRESTON. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

I have not been willing to pursue the course indicated by the gentleman from the Committee of Ways and Means, my colleague from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] who has the peculiar management of this bill. Now, sir, I do not know that there is any reason why members on this side of the House should unite with the Administration and the Secretary, nor do I know why members upon the other side of this House should attack the measures recommended by the Administration or the Secretary. Carolina and Virginia seem to join in opposition; and there may be dissensions in the Democratic party of which I know nothing; but I trust that this cannot constitute a good reason for the attempts of gentlemen to muster the whole Democratic party to crush this bill.

How did the committee report these bills? The first they reported as a deficiency bill, and the second as a custom-house bill, and the gentlemen say all the provisions of each are right. Their Secretary has reported these as deficiencies in the custom-house appropriations. How did we get these appropriations last year? In the deficiency bill. What is there wrong in putting them in it now? And what object is there in putting them into a separate bill this year, unless it be in order to defeat the custom-house appropriations. I want gentlemen upon the other side to promise positively and definitively that they will pass the custom-house bill, yet we can extract none; are they, then, in that situation that they desire to "keep the word of promise to the ear, and break it to the hope?" We claim the right to put in this amendment for these custom-houses, as was done last year, and as has been the custom in former years, and there is no legislative or parliamentary impropriety in doing so, and the Chair cannot declare that it is improper to put it in here as an addition to the deficiency bill.

But, sir, I do not desire to protract debate. If there is not force enough to carry the measure, let it perish. I am ready to come to the test. I am ready to rest the matter with the Democracy of the House. I am as ready as any Democrat to let this House decide between the Administration and the committee; and if they want to stamp as unjust expenditures and unwise recommendations the estimates for deficiencies made by their own President and their own Secretary, it is not for my expunging hand to remove the stain the committee seeks to imprint upon them. Let them make the reckoning with the country. Let them say that an extravagant President has transmitted extravagant estimates from an extravagant Secretary, in order to erect extravagant and unnecessary works; or let them come up like the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH,] who represents Chicago, with more dexterity and more good sense than most have exhibited, and say that they will not raise any such issue, and that they will vote what the Government asks.

But my colleague tells us that the appropriation of $530,000 was carried by three or four votes more than the custom-houses. I always thought that a majority was a majority; and I conceive that the vote on the custom-houses should have been regarded by the committee to be as expressive of the wishes of the House as the vote on the assay office—

The question was then taken on Mr. ORR's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move to amend the amendment by adding ten dollars to the appropriation at Cincinnati.

I have listened in vain, Mr. Chairman, for any argument or sufficient reason against adopting the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.] This is a deficiency bill. I would inquire whether the appropriations now asked for are not deficiencies, and are they not in order? Are they not proper to be placed in this bill, if they are to be passed anywhere? This bill, as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, contained an appropriation for an assay office or building in the city of New York, an appropriation of the same general character as those now asked for. An appropriation for a custom-house in the city of Providence is also provided for in the bill. Inasmuch as there are three appropriations for buildings of this character, why were not other appropriations of a like character, I desire to ask, included in the deficiency bill? Was there any reason why they were not so included?

It has been said that the former deficiency bill was lost because of these appropriations for custom-houses. What authority has any gentleman to say this? After every one of these amendments was discussed and considered in the House seriatim, every one of them adopted in Committee of the Whole, and most of them adopted in the House upon the yeas and nays, and after having passed the ordeal twice, I ask by what authority and right gentlemen say that the deficiency bill was defeated because of these amendments?

Sir, the evidence is against it. The evidence goes more strongly to show that there were other matters in that deficiency bill which were objectionable; that there were matters which were reported by the Committee of Ways and Means which were read at the Clerk's desk without attracting the attention of any one, but which, when they came to be maturely considered, were obnoxious to objection; and, on account of these matters, the bill was defeated on its final passage. That is the evidence which stands upon the record. The record shows conclusively that the majority have twice said that each of these ought to be retained in the bill. If this position be correct; if a majority of this House have decided that these custom-house appropriations ought to be made, then why not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, and insert these appropriations in this bill? Why place them in another bill? Why go over with all these discussions again? Do we not understand it now as well as we shall then? Shall we not accomplish a great saving of the public time by providing for these custom-houses and marine hospitals now? What then is the objection? The Secretary of the Treasury has reported in favor of these measures.

And let me say, further, that the deficiency bill which was defeated the other day was the cleanest deficiency bill which was ever passed by the House of Representatives. I venture to say that no bill of that character ever passed the House, or ever passed the Congress of the United States, without containing more than $10,000 not recommended by any Department of the Government. But what was the fact in reference to the bill which was lost the other day? Not a single item did it contain which had not received the sanction and recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the head of some other Department of the Government. And I venture to say that there is not a gentleman in this House who, if he were placed in the position of the Secretary of the Treasury, and were called upon to act upon this subject, without looking at any of the dodges which may be supposed to influence the votes of gentlemen upon this floor, but in consideration of his duty simply as a statesman, would not say that these appropriations contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, ought to be made; that the interests of the country require it.

Now I call upon the gentlemen of this committee to allow this measure to stand upon its own merits. Let us act upon it as honest, faithful public servants. No one has attempted to show that the interests of the country do not require these appropriations. And as they are clearly deficiencies, and as every item has been fully discussed, let us adopt the amendment without wasting any more time upon it.

Mr. ORR. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] that I will make no promises as to aiding him in getting up the bill for the completion of certain custom-houses and marine hospitals. I am not in favor of that measure, and I shall use every legitimate legislative expedient in my power, to defeat the passage of that bill, either as a separate measure, or conjoined with the deficiency bill. Now, I hope the gentleman understands my position on that point.

But I desire that my position may be understood a little further by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] with reference to the action of this House, which he says will reflect upon certain persons at the other end of the avenue. Sir, I speak for myself, not for any other person. I profess to be a very humble member of the Democratic party; but I assume for myself the privilege and the right to scan and scrutinize every estimate that comes to me from any Department of this Government; and if I find that a subordinate official of the President has exceeded what I believe to be the true, just, and economical amounts for which he should estimate—if I find that he is departing from the tenets of Democracy—he need not rely upon me to support his recommendations in this House simply because he is an official of the President. It would be a subserviency unworthy the representative of American freemen. The President, who is himself wedded to economy and correct principle, makes no such demand of his political friends. He does not ask that the Democracy shall yield a blind and indiscriminate support to the estimates or opinions of his subaltern officers. The interests of the party require us to oppose everything which, by its extravagance, or from other causes, alienates the confidence of the people from its principles and support.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky urges his amendment because it is recommended by a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, and he has reminded us of that fact oftentimes since this debate opened. He evidently contemplates success, because he is indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury—that is reason sufficient why the Democrats should vote for his amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not a great deal of confidence myself in the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury; especially since I have heard his position upon the Pacific railroad project, and since he has submitted the details of his very remarkable plan for modifying the tariff—a tariff which every Whig will sustain, and very few Democrats. Sir, I think his Democracy is about as orthodox as was John Tyler's Whiggery. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRESTON. Do I understand the gentleman, in the allusion he makes to the Pacific railroad, to speak of the opinions of the President upon that subject?

Mr. ORR. I referred to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. PRESTON. Was not the President present on that occasion?

Mr. ORR. I do not know. I believe, however, the President was there, but he had the good sense not to express any opinions coinciding with the opinions expressed by the Secretary of the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Now, with reference to the New York assay office, I concur with the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] that the proposition making an appropriation of $530,000 for the assay office in New York ought to have been stricken out, and I shall move to strike it out at the proper time, if I can obtain the floor for that purpose.

I voted when the former deficiency bill was under consideration for that proposition, under the supposition that the contract was made and could not be revoked. I am not sure now whether it can be revoked or not; if it can, I am for utterly repudiating it, and I will state my reasons more particularly when I occupy the floor upon that subject.

It is the duty of the Democratic party, in my judgment—if they mean to preserve their ascendancy, if they do not mean to suffer a wreck such as that which the gentleman from Kentucky is now, and has been since the 4th of March, 1853, lamenting—to cut off excrescences, if we chance to meet with them; and we must do it firmly and independently, although it may, perchance, give offense to government officials. I have said all I desire to say upon the subject.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. PRESTON's amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to amend the amendment by increasing the appropriation for the custom-house at Louisville $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that he has allowed a greater latitude of debate than the rules warrant. He did not, however, feel at liberty to arrest it while any gentleman was upon the floor, deeming that he ought, at least, to give notice of his intention to restrict the debate. He now calls the attention of gentlemen to the fact that he will deem it his duty to confine them, as much as possible, to the amendments they may offer, or in opposition to which they may speak.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will endeavor so to confine myself.

The CHAIRMAN. What amendment does the gentleman propose?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to increase the appropriation for the Louisville custom-house $1,000.

I stated yesterday, what was known to the House, that I had voted, on a former occasion, to incorporate into the deficiency bill the appropriations recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury for custom-houses and marine hospitals. I was, and I am still in favor of those appropriations. Finding, however, that the bill which contained them was defeated, and that the sense of the House was ascertained to be against them in their conjoint character, I had determined to change my course, and vote for both propositions separately.

Now, sir, I desire to make a few remarks in reply to my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] in reference to these appropriations. I must say that I heard with as much surprise as regret the sentiments which fell from that gentleman. He has denounced these appropriations as having come to this House without authority, and, if I understood him, almost against the authority of law and the sense of this body. What are the statements made here in regard to the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury? That he has entered into any contract binding on this Government for appropriations which had heretofore been allowed? Has he done anything which implicates the good faith of this Government, and binds it to fulfill any contract which he has made or proposes to make? Not at all. Where is it that he has exceeded his duty in recommending these appropriations.

Mr. ORR. In not finishing the buildings with the appropriations already made.

Mr. PHILLIPS. He comes into office; he finds buildings partially completed; he employs his proper agents to superintend them. They report to him that a proper completion of them will require certain sums of money, which sums exceed the amounts appropriated by Congress. He advertises for contracts; proposals are made. Does he accept them? No, sir; but he makes a report to this Congress, and says thus: Gentlemen, these buildings ought to be completed in such and such a manner. The safety of the Government and its property require that they should be constructed in a certain manner, which will demand additional appropriations at your hands. And I respectfully submit to you whether it is not better for you to increase the amounts, and have these buildings completed in a proper manner, rather than build them with the present appropriations in an unsafe and improper manner.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I had thought that I would not say a word in reference to these estimates and appropriations; for I had concluded that it was a fruitless business for me to attempt to resist successfully, the recommendations of the Administration, supported as they are by all the local influences which can be brought to bear on the subject, as well as by the united vote of my Whig friends upon this floor. I had intended to content myself with doing what I conceive to be sound Democratic voting on all these questions.

But my friend from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] has not heard a solitary good reason why the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky should not be adopted. I will say to him and this committee, that I find cogent and conclusive arguments, satisfactory to my mind, against these appropriations, in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of January 3d, 1854, to be found in Miscellaneous Document No. 5. The Secretary shows that at that time he had an amount of available appropriations for the construction of a custom-house at St. Louis, of $126,707 98. I ask the gentlemen from Maine, I ask the friends to the appropriations upon this and the other side of the committee, whether there should not be a custom-house adequate to the wants of all the business of the Government, constructed for that sum of money at that city? He has also reported in the same document that he has an available appropriation for the custom-house at Mobile, of $184,336. Is not that, in all conscience, a full amount, a sufficient sum, for the construction of the building there? For the one at Louisville he tells us that he has an available appropriation of $155,892. For the one at Cincinnati he has an available appropriation, he says, of $138,470 86, and so on. For the one at Bath he has an available appropriation of $32,628. For that at Wilmington, Delaware, he has an appropriation of $25,227 98; being in each and every case the full amount as heretofore estimated and asked for for the construction and completion of these edifices. Why is it, that the money appropriated in these cases has not been touched? In my opinion, it is not because they have not money enough to construct buildings of adequate dimensions fire-proof; but it is because they want to change the character of the material of which these buildings are to be constructed. It is that they wish to procure, perhaps, marble, to be transported from one extreme of this Union to the other, for the construction of these buildings; to make them not only useful and fire-proof, but to make them in the highest degree ornamental, magnificent, and splendid. Believing, sir, as I do, that regard to economy requires that we should be careful in voting away the public money; and believing, also, that the Secretary of the Treasury has money enough available and at his command for all practical purposes, to construct these buildings, I shall vote against these appropriations.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama; which was not agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, is an amendment in order now to the appropriation for the marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; to any of them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I send up the following amendment:

The Clerk reported the amendment as follows:

That the appropriation of $25,000 for the marine hospital at Cleveland, Ohio, shall not take effect, or any part thereof be expended, unless a majority of the people of the collection district in which Cleveland is situated shall determine by a vote in favor of said appropriation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I like to apply the rules to gentlemen which they lay down for the governance of the conduct of others. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WADE,] in a discussion the other day, thought that, except there were petitions presented in favor of a measure, Congress ought not to act upon it nor pass it. I have sought to ascertain whether there were any petitions here in favor of the completion of the marine hospital at Cleveland. I believe there are none. The case stands precisely in the same situation, and no other, as the case did to which the gentleman applied his amendment the other day, although it had been recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. This case here stands in precisely the same situation; and I trust that in the adoption of the principle which is so great a favorite with the gentleman from Ohio, the House will apply it to him, and give him the full benefit of it.

Mr. WADE. I desire to say a word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.] When the gentleman will show me that railroads, to which the Government has made appropriations of its funds so liberally are all completed, with the exception of a little iron to be laid, or some other trifling labor or material without which it would be nearly or quite useless, and an appropriation to finish it were recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, I should probably vote for it, though I might by no means be willing to do so as an original proposition. But the gentleman from Illinois asks me if I would leave this matter to a vote of the people of the collection district in which the hospital is located? He puts this question in view of the proposition I submitted the other day in reference to the Minnesota railroad bill. To this I reply, that I would have no objection to that at all, and would not care if, in this proposition, he included the women also—indeed, I would, to this extent, be a woman's rights man, and leave it to the women of that district if the gentleman would desire so extensive an expression of the popular policy on the subject. But I would say to the gentleman over the way, who feels sore upon some matters which took place the other day in reference to certain western railroads, that I voted against those roads because I believed, and still believe, that they would be injurious to the best interests of the western country; and whoever lives fifteen years from this time, I am fully persuaded, will then see that I am right.

I would say one thing further to gentlemen over the way, that when, sometime hence, they know me a little better than they now do, (though I mean to be a very modest man,) they will understand that I give no vote for any measure which my judgment and my conscience condemn, for the sake of getting another vote for a measure which my judgment and conscience approve.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not want to trade with the gentleman.

Mr. WADE. No; and if he did he could not do it. There is no analogy between these measures at all. Here is a hospital left unfinished, needed for the seamen upon the northern lakes. The Secretary of the Treasury has recommended an appropriation to complete it. Now, does the gentleman want to punish me for not voting in favor of his railroad appropriations?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all.

Mr. WADE. He will not punish me, but the seamen upon the lakes, in whose welfare his constituents are as much interested as are mine. The gentleman from Illinois, I trust, will pardon me when I say that I desire that he may understand me better than he now seems to; and when he does, he will be satisfied that he has only to convince me that the West needs my vote on any matter, within the range of constitutional power, involving western interests, and it will be at his or any other gentleman's command. Let the gentleman satisfy me that these railroad grants are not odious corporation monopolies, sheer land speculations for the benefit of individuals, and I am with him. I am in the West, of the West, and for the West; but no more, I trust, than I am for the whole country, when I understand what its interests are.

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. RICHARDSON; and it was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I call for tellers upon that amendment.

Mr. DISNEY. Before the question is taken I desire to offer an amendment, and I move to strike out ten dollars from one of the appropriations.

I move the amendment, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of replying to what I understood to be a statement of fact, made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] I understood that gentleman to state, without qualification and without limit, that these custom-house appropriations were asked for, not for the purpose of making these buildings fire-proof, but to render them ornamental.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I said I believed that would be the true issue.

Mr. DISNEY. I will never undertake to meddle with the belief of the gentleman. I only propose to meddle with what I supposed to be a statement of facts, volunteered by the gentleman. But to illustrate I will speak of the custom-house at Cincinnati. In that instance, the appropriations heretofore made are sufficient to finish the building according to the plan originally adopted; and I state upon this floor, that whether this additional appropriation be granted or not, the building will be finished upon that particular original plan, and of the materials with which it was commenced to be built. He cannot be misunderstood in this statement; but in justice to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the statements which have been made in regard to other cases, I should state that when by the addition and aggregation of the various bids for the completion of that building, it was found that the amount exceeded the amount appropriated for, the Secretary refused to enter into the contracts. Let me refer back to the bids. What was required of the architect was to rearrange the plans of the building as well as to bring the aggregate amount of the bids within the limits of the appropriation made. It was done, and so they stand. The building is now in progress of completion, and will be completed according to that particular plan. In the judgment of the Secretary, the public interests require that that building should be made fire-proof, and to do it an additional sum of $40,000 will be required. So much by way of vindication of the Secretary of the Treasury, whose whole course with regard to these buildings seems to have been misunderstood by most of the gentleman who have heretofore spoken in relation to this matter.

Let me allude to one other matter, and I will take my seat. Gentlemen have adverted to the fact that appropriations for these custom-houses were incorporated into the bill, but that the bill containing them finally failed. And why? There is no secrecy in the fact. Many gentlemen in this House voted for the bill when it was so amended, but because they saw the whole of the Committee of Ways and Means, with a single exception, that of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] voting against the bill itself, the House then very properly turned tail, and went with that committee against their own bantling. When the Committee of Ways and Means refused to sustain the Administration, the House, seeing it, very properly united to defeat the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Ohio certainly has not looked at the record. It is very well known that I voted for the bill upon its final passage, although I did it very reluctantly.

Mr. DISNEY. What other members of the committee voted for the bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that a majority of the Committee of Ways and Means voted for the bill upon its final passage.

Mr. DISNEY. The records will speak for themselves. The impression was very general throughout the House, and so far as my own ears gave me evidence, on my right and left, I heard it said that the committee voted in the negative.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to hear the statements of the Secretary read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. They have been read again and again. I am opposed to the amendment, and I ask for a vote upon it.

The question was then taken upon Mr. DISNEY's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BISSELL. I move to reduce the appropriation for the custom-house at Louisville $1,000.

I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. If the amendment offered by him is adopted, the bill becomes substantially the same as the one which met such an overwhelming defeat in this House a few days ago. I desire to see this bill passed. It is a deficiency bill which the country calls upon us to pass.

These other appropriations, which gentlemen are desiring to incorporate in the bill, are of a very different class, and there is no necessity for haste in regard to them. They stand upon a different footing from most of the appropriations provided for in this bill. These are intended to enable the Government to pay its employees, who are now subject to constant pecuniary sacrifices, because we have not enabled the Government to pay them for their daily labor. Now I do not wish to see this bill imperiled nor delayed by being loaded down by that class of appropriations which are so well provided for in the bill which is immediately to follow the one now under consideration. This bill has unquestioned merits, as the committee will see. My word for it, if a direct vote could be taken, it would pass as soon as that vote could be counted. Attach the appropriations which you propose to do to this bill, and you endanger the passage of the bill, and leave the employees of the Government waiting, with out-stretched arms, at your doors, for that money which is to pay for their daily bread. Keep the two classes of appropriations separate and distinct, as the committee have very wisely done. Pass this bill, and then bring up the other bill, which is of an entirely different character, and let us do as we think proper in respect to that.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee, and I will not, but for a minute. I have taken no part in this debate, nor do I so intend, as to the merits of the bill. Inasmuch, however, as the gentleman from Ohio has made allusion to those on the Committee of Ways and Means, who voted against the other deficiency bill, I desire to say that the record shows that there were but two members of that committee who voted against that bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who are they?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will tell the gentleman. The gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD,] and the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] are the only members of the Committee of Ways and Means who voted against the bill on its final passage. Four of the members of that committee voted for the passage of the bill, and three were not present. So much for the facts to which the gentleman from Ohio alluded.

I am opposed to the amendment, but I will not detain the committee by any remarks in reference to it. I call for the vote upon its adoption.

The amendment to the amendment was then, by unanimous consent, withdrawn.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I believe the amendment which has just been withdrawn proposed to reduce the amount of the appropriation $1,000. I move to increase it $1,500.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that in my humble judgment, this deficiency bill, the bill for the completion of custom-houses and marine hospitals which has been reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, and, in fact, many of the bills reported by that committee, do great injustice to the people of the country. In my opinion all these general appropriation bills ought to be placed at the foot of the Calendar, and I am not sure but I will vote to put them there if any gentleman will make the motion. I believe we might dispose of every bill upon the Calendar—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. I dislike exceedingly to interfere with my friend from Ohio, but I do not think this species of discussion is at all proper. The gentleman is not speaking to his amendment, and I make a question of order upon him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot tell at what point the gentleman from Ohio would arrive at, or what application of his remarks he would make to his amendment, but his remarks are certainly not germane to the amendment. The gentleman must confine himself to the explanation of his amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am sorry my friend from North Carolina should have thought it his duty to make a question of order upon me. I have no wish to transgress the rules of the House, or of the committee. I will endeavor to confine myself in the remarks which I shall make to what is strictly in order, and I hope my friend from North Carolina will not again interrupt me; and I will say, that I hope also that the gentleman from New Hampshire, who is a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, and who I know is a little tender in respect to attacks made upon the recommendations of that committee, will not call me to order. I am in favor of the amendment I have offered, because I am for increasing the appropriations for the benefit of the western country. It is not my wish ever to give a sectional vote in this House. But when I discover, even among western gentlemen, a disposition to set aside the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury, himself a western man—as passing upon the country as deficiencies, appropriations which are not deficiencies, I trust that the courtesy of the committee will permit me to express my opinions upon such a proposition freely—even beyond the bounds which a strict construction of the rules would limit me. And it is to that point that I desire to address my remarks.

Now, sir, the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] in addressing the committee just now—who was listened to with so much attention, as he always is, by every member of the House, and by none with more pleasure than myself—referred to a document now before us, reported by the Secretary of the Treasury during the present session—Executive Document No. 5, under the head of miscellaneous. It is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means; and the statements of the gentleman from Tennessee, unless the members of the committee refer to that document, are calculated, in my judgment, to mislead them. I have that document now before me. I have examined it thoroughly; and the Secretary of the Treasury says that the amounts of available appropriations are as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee; but he also states, in reference to these custom-houses and marine hospitals—and he states more particularly in reference to these deficiencies than to any deficiencies reported in the bill now under consideration—that every appropriation asked for by the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] is a deficiency to carry on the business of the Government.

Now, the Secretary of the Treasury, if he is a judge of deficiencies anywhere, ought to be a judge of the deficiencies in the city of Louisville. He is a citizen of that city, and well acquainted with it. He knows the condition of this building personally as well as officially, and he recommends this appropriation as a deficiency.

Judging from the spirit manifested by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] to defeat the bill for custom-houses and marine hospitals, it is my opinion that appropriations for the completion of those buildings will never be made, if this bill is allowed to pass without the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. It is the duty of the committee to stand by that amendment; and I hope it may be discussed here till the first of July, rather than to have it defeated. The opinion of the whole people of this country, as indicated by the votes of their Representatives upon this floor, in reference to these appropriations for western custom-houses and marine hospitals, should be attended to and upheld, rather than the opinion of a majority of the Committee of Ways and Means, in opposition to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in opposition to the repeated decisions of the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am opposed to the amendment, and ask for a vote upon it.

The question was taken on Mr. TAYLOR's amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to amend that portion of the amendment relative to the appropriation for the Louisville custom-house, by inserting after the word "complete" the words "for the fourth time," so as to make it read "to complete for the fourth time," and so forth.

I have been very much struck with the fact that every gentleman on the Whig side of the House, who has a dollar embarked in this scheme, thinks that the Secretary of the Treasury is decidedly the finest officer that has ever held that position under this Government. They seem to have come to the conclusion that all his estimates are exactly right; that we ought to have full faith in everything that he has said or proposed; and that all his estimates ought to be taken upon trust.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What about the Bronson platform?

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, I do not know exactly how far our Whig friends would go upon the Bronson platform, if that question was presented to them. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. I object to this discussion. The gentleman from Virginia must confine his remarks to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The remarks of the gentleman from Virginia are clearly out of order.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it not in order to refer to the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order for the gentleman to speak upon his amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. That is exactly what I am going to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is to insert the words "for the fourth time."

Mr. LETCHER. Exactly; to insert the words "for the fourth time;" and now I propose to show that that custom-house at Louisville has been completed (at least legislatively) four times.

I recollect when I came here that $75,000 were appropriated; when they came forward for $16,000 for a lot, they told us that $75,000 would build the house. I recollect then, again, that when they asked for $87,745, they told us that it would complete it, and, as an evidence of the fact, mentioned that bids were received by which it would be completed for that amount. Now they come in and ask for $40,000 to complete it again. I take it, that if there is not a dollar of $40,000 now asked for appropriated, that that custom-house will be completed, and be a fire-proof building besides.

But I imagine that there is more in this thing than merely the amount of money to finish the house. There is something in regard to the precise character of the building itself; whether it shall be a brick, a marble, or a granite building; whether it shall be made of one material costly, or of another more costly, the object being to make it as handsome as possible in the shape of a structure to adorn the city of Louisville. Will it be pretended here that $155,000 will not build a fire-proof house? Can it be pretended that it will not? One hundred and ten thousand dollars has done it elsewhere. Why cannot it do it in Kentucky? Why not in St. Louis? Why cannot it do it in Cincinnati? Why cannot it do it at the other points? I am clearly of the opinion that if we do not appropriate another dollar to this work, it will be found that the sums heretofore appropriated will accomplish it. We shall thereby save $40,000.

Mr. LILLY. I oppose the amendment, and ask for a vote on it.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. GOODRICH. I move, Mr. Chairman, to increase the Louisville appropriation $2,000. I am one of the Whigs on this side of the Hall not interested in this matter; yet I am in favor of the amendment. Now, what are the facts? As I understand, the Secretary of the Treasury recommends these appropriations as deficiencies. I further understand that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is in favor of these appropriations. He thinks that a majority of the committee are in favor of them, too; but he proposes to put them in a separate bill, and for what reason? Not, as I understand, because they are not deficiencies, but because they are not proper or in order in this bill. We are, then, according to his view, to have not one deficiency bill, but more than one, and how many? As many as we have items. We ordinarily talk about the deficiency bill as containing all the items of deficiency; but if we pass this bill as proposed, we shall not get through all our deficiencies.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order. Is the debate indulged in by the gentleman in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish the Chair to consider the point raised on every other gentleman who may be out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must limit his remarks to the character of his amendment.

Mr. GOODRICH. I shall endeavor to do so.

Mr. HIBBARD. I must, without disrespect to the gentleman, insist on the enforcement of the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will enforce them.

Mr. GOODRICH. I will say to the gentleman from New Hampshire—

Mr. HIBBARD. The gentleman cannot go on after he has been ruled out of order. He must take his seat.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I think that the gentleman from Massachusetts is as much in order in his remarks as any of the gentlemen who have engaged in the discussion.

Mr. HIBBARD. They were all out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman is no more out of order than the gentleman from New Hampshire was on yesterday.

Mr. HIBBARD. Not a bit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire calls the gentleman from Massachusetts to order. The Chair decides that the gentleman is not in order. From that decision the gentleman from Ohio appeals. The question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

The question was taken by division; the Chair announcing that 90 voted in the affirmative.

Mr. TAYLOR demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered; but 21 members seconding the demand—

Mr. TAYLOR. Count the other side.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The Chair has no right to count the other side, one fifth of a quorum not voting.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to count the other side, inasmuch as one fifth of a quorum, has not seconded the demand for tellers.

Mr. TAYLOR. What I meant to ask the Chair was, to count the other side on the question of the appeal.

After a count, the Chair announced that but thirty-five voted against the decision of the Chair being received as the judgment of the committee.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. GOODRICH. I will endeavor, Mr. Chairman, to keep somewhat within the rules of order. What I wanted simply to say—and in this I was not very much out of order—was in reply to something that was said by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.] He has made a strong appeal to his political friends here to vote down these amendments.

Mr. HIBBARD, (interrupting.) Mr. Chairman, I must insist upon a decision whether the gentleman is in order or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is in order. He is now proceeding to argue in favor of his own amendment, and is clearly in order.

Mr. GOODRICH, (resuming.) I think, Mr. Chairman, that the Secretary of the Treasury has not recommended enough. I think the appropriation should be increased two thousand dollars. Now, then, it seems to me, that it is in order, in reference to this amendment of mine, to show that the arguments on the other side against the whole thing are invalid. I say, then, if I may be allowed to proceed, that the gentleman from Kentucky has appealed to his political friends to vote down these amendments. What are the facts in the face of which the gentleman makes that appeal? They are, first, that the Secretary of the Treasury recommends the appropriation. They are, next, his admission that a majority of the House, which represents the people of the country, are also in favor of them.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, the suggestion which I want to make to him is this—and I do so with every kindness—that when the gentleman is appealing to this side of the House to go against these amendments, for these reasons he should also appeal to his political friends to go in favor of that expressed opinion of the majority representing the will of the people, as he admits it does.

He admitted over and over again on this floor, that the majority in this House are in favor of these appropriations, and yet calls upon his political friends, and upon the principles of Democracy, too, to vote down the express will of the people, as expressed through their representatives here. Now, I ask, why is this? I fear that when we come to the other bill—the one for custom-houses and marine hospitals—that an appeal will be then made to his political friends to vote that down too.

But what I desire to say most distinctly was, to present the fact to this House clearly, that here is an admission from the Committee of Ways and Means that a majority of the House is in favor of this amendment, and yet they are striving to bring up their political friends to break it down.

Mr. DEAN. I am opposed to the amendment, as well as to all other amendments, and desire a vote upon it.

The question was taken upon the amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the original amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON,] upon which tellers have been ordered.

Messrs. CAMPBELL and CHURCHWELL were appointed tellers.

Mr. PRESTON. I would ask the Chair to state to the House—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. PRESTON. I know pretty well when I am in order—

[Renewed cries of "Order!"]

Mr. PRESTON. And if the House desire it, I can make a speech, and delay the action of the committee; but that is not my wish. I ask either that the amendment be reported, or that the Chair state to the committee the substance of it, that the committee may know what the question is upon which they are about to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment will be reported again.

[Cries of "I object!" "I object!"]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object, as it has already been read a number of times.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I object to its reading again, because it has already been read twice, and because we all understand that we are to vote upon the custom-house and marine hospital amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 101.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The following clause was then read:

To purchase a site for custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island, $24,000: Provided, That the entire cost of such site and building thereon shall in no event exceed the sum of $74,000.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to offer the following amendment to come in at the end of the clause just read:

Nor shall the site be purchased and the building be commenced until a contract shall be made with some competent and responsible person for the construction and completion of said building within the sum hereby appropriated.

The question was then taken upon the amendment and it was agreed to.

Mr. DISNEY. I move to strike out so much of the bill as provides an appropriation for the custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio. I hope that the appropriation for the custom-house at Providence will be left to stand upon its own merits, and that it will not be connected with other matters which are entirely extraneous. There have been $10,000,000 of revenue received at Providence since the year 1800, and there have been not over $10,000 expended there by way of appropriation from the Government. There is now a large and increasing commerce in that city, which employs something like twenty or twenty-five revenue officers, of all kinds. Providence is now the second city in New England; and the building for which this appropriation is asked is intended to accommodate the post office, the court rooms, and the custom-house together.

I do not claim anything at the hands of the House for Providence which we are not entitled to. We have contributed this great amount to the revenue of the country; and when gentlemen from other places, who are seeking appropriations for custom-houses at the points from which they come, can show that an equal amount of revenue has been raised at those ports, they will be entitled to have their objects considered in the same light. It was in this light, I presume, that the Committee of Ways and Means considered the case of Providence when they inserted this provision in the bill.

The custom house at Providence is totally inadequate to the wants of the business required to be done there. It is a little square, brick building, so limited in its dimensions that they have been obliged to go up into the third story to accommodate the officers employed in it. I hope most sincerely that whatever action is taken upon other matters, this appropriation will be allowed to stand upon its own merits. The wants of the commerce of that city, which is the second in New England, I repeat, imperatively demand that this custom-house should be constructed; and I hope the committee will not strike out this paragraph in the bill.

I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY,] who seems to have antipathy to this appropriation because those for his own section of country have not received the favorable action of the committee, that I have not, as an individual, opposed any of these appropriations for custom-houses, nor do I mean to do it. I believe they are designed for a beneficial purpose, and are necessary to carry on the business of the country.

It has been adduced in support of propositions which have been brought as amendments to this bill, that the buildings being erected were for the purpose of furnishing accommodations for court rooms and for post offices. I can say the same with reference to the building it is proposed to erect in Providence, that it is also designed for court rooms and for the accommodation of the post office in that city. I have only to add, that such are the wants of the custom-house business at Providence, that it will be doing great injustice to strike out this provision of the bill; and I trust it will not be done.

Mr. DAVIS. I demand tellers upon the question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ROBBINS and CHAMBERLAIN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 52.

So that clause of the bill was stricken out.

Mr. PRESTON. I move to strike out from the one hundred and twentieth to the one hundred and thirty-fifth lines of the bill.

The Clerk read the clauses proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

To complete public buildings in New Mexico, $50,000. For the purchase of the lots or parcels of land, with the appurtenances and the buildings thereon, belonging the one thereof to the Bank of Commerce, and the other thereof to the Bank of the State of New York, and particularly referred to and described in two contracts, one with each of said banks, for the leasing and right to purchase, the same bearing date the 19th of August, 1853: Provided, That before the said purchase is made, the State of New York shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over said land and property, and shall by law exonerate the same, and the property of the United States thereon, from all taxes, levies and assessments thereon, whilst the same remains the property of the United States, $530,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Does my colleague insist on his motion to strike that out?

Mr. PRESTON. I do.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Well, we must have a division of the question. The portion of the bill which my colleague proposes to strike out embraces two separate and distinct propositions.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky will be divided. The question now is on striking out the first clause which has been read.

Mr. ORR. I hope the question will not be taken until the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] explains why that provision was put into the bill.

Mr. PRESTON. I have moved to strike it out, in order that we may hear the reasons for putting it in.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw his motion, as there is nobody here to represent New Mexico. It is a Territory—

Mr. PRESTON. What do I understand the gentleman to ask?

Mr. SMITH. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw his motion to strike out this provision, for the reason that there is no one here to represent the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. PRESTON. I insist on my motion.

Mr. SMITH. Very well, sir.

Mr. PRESTON. It has plenty of representatives on the other side of the House and in the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Very well, I will satisfy the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Before the question is put on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, I move to amend that portion of the bill which is proposed to be stricken out, by striking out "$50,000," and inserting "$40,000" in lieu thereof; and I will say in reference to this matter, that there is no conceivable reason—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is in error. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is to strike out two lines.

Mr. STANTON. And I have a right to amend the portion proposed to be stricken out. I say there is no conceivable principle upon which gentlemen can claim any consistency in putting an appropriation in this bill for public buildings anywhere that would not justify them in doing the same with regard to those appropriations for public buildings already rejected by the committee.

Mr. PRESTON. That is it.

Mr. STANTON. And I say to the friends of public buildings in the West, that in order to get justice, in order to force—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I make the point of order on my friend that he must speak to the amendment, and not go into general discussion.

Mr. STANTON. I am speaking to my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to his amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. He must show why $40,000 should be inserted instead of $50,000 as the amount to be voted.

Mr. STANTON. Very well. It is true that I am arguing the policy. I am for reducing the appropriation. But I will withdraw my amendment and offer another.

Mr. HOUSTON. I object to its withdrawal.

Mr. STANTON. Well, I think that the tenor of my remarks is in perfect accordance with the proposition I have made.

I say that this appropriation ought not to be in this bill on the principle on which the others were rejected; that we ought to maintain that principle with regard to all appropriations of this class, and let them stand or fall together. There is as much necessity for one as there is for the other. That is all I have to say upon the subject.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am opposed to the amendment. I hope that we shall be able to get along smoothly with this bill; and that if from any quarter a disposition is manifested, because of the failure of certain provisions, to war upon all others, the House will not sustain any effort of that sort.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I am in favor of all these provisions, and will vote for them all, either in this bill or out of it; and that I will vote for the bill whether they are in it or not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will explain to the committee the reason why the Committee of Ways and Means inserted this provision in the bill. The following is taken from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury:

"New Mexico.—The estimate for the completion of the public buildings in the Territory is $50,000. The former appropriation has been sufficient to complete the foundations of the State-house, and the purchase of some materials for the superstructure. The estimate is in accordance with the recommendation of the commissioners of construction."

"The cost of these works has been much increased beyond the original estimates by the great advance in the prices of labor and material."

That is the report of the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to the Territory of New Mexico, which, as has been remarked, has no representative upon this floor who is entitled to vote; and I hope that if war be made on any item, it will not be on this one.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, withdrew his amendment by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, who has just taken his seat, whether the Secretary of the Treasury, or any other person connected with the Executive Department of the Government, has recommended this appropriation?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The Secretary of the Treasury does recommend it by the very report which I read to the committee. In Miscellaneous Document No. 5 the gentleman will find the views of the Department on the subject.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Tennessee submitted his amendment, I moved to strike the section out. It was far from my intention to do so in any spirit of hostility to New Mexico; but it seems to me that the committee who, a few moments since, were so careful that they should put all public buildings in a separate bill, have certainly shifted their ground; for here we find appropriations for certain public buildings inserted in this bill. The grounds assumed for the exclusion of the custom-houses is suddenly reversed, and they assert that it is exceedingly inappropriate to postpone this $50,000 appropriation until the next bill comes up, and that this is the only place in which it can be safely inserted. I do not see by what process of reasoning they arrive at this conclusion; and I want to put all these appropriations for public buildings exactly on the same footing, and to let them either stand or fall together. I do it in no spirit of hostility to any particular appropriation. One might imagine that there was some reason for inserting this, as well as the next provision in reference to the New York assay office, and that it was possibly for the purpose of securing the thirty-six votes of that State to support the committee so, as, by partial legislation, to pass those two provisions, and thrust the residue of the House amendments aside. It is for that reason that I move to put them all upon the same footing.

I cannot see any reason why an exemption should be claimed for these two items in the general deficiency bill, and why they are not as much the subjects for a separate original bill as any of the custom-houses and marine hospitals now acted on. The $12,500 in the Louisville appropriation was for warming apparatus and affording proper comforts to the hospitals. Why are the seamen to be excluded from the benefits of this bill? The hospital is as necessary for the mariners of the Ohio river as any court-house can be for New Mexico. I do not see any necessity whatever applicable to one which is not with the same force applicable to the other; and I ask that this committee, in justice, shall put all together in the last bill, and then see whether the Committee of Ways and Means will fulfill the hopes held out to us by advising and securing its passage.

I think that some of our friends have already been misled, and that they will find, when this last bill comes up, there is no chance for it—that "there is no balm in Gilead" [laughter] which will save it from destruction, but that it will sink where the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Orr] had the frankness to say he intended to send it, and to that oblivion where the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Letcher] has intimated, by his approving smile, he intends giving his assistance to consign it.

I fear, if we trust the committee, that the bill will sink forever—that it will be defeated forever—and these buildings will be left an enduring monument of what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Wentworth] calls the picayune spirit of the Democracy of the country—

Mr. WENTWORTH, (interrupting.) Picayunian. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRESTON. I am reminded that the term used by the gentleman from Illinois is picayunian. [Laughter.] I did not know there was any such adjective in the language as picayunian. However, I presume it is an originality permissible here—

Mr. WENTWORTH, (interrupting.) I want to set the gentleman from Kentucky right. I desired to save the Whigs from bringing that charge against the Administration. I am with the Administration. [Laughter.]

Mr. LETCHER. I would like to inquire from my friend over the way [Mr. Preston] whether he is with the Administration? [Laughter.]

Mr. PRESTON. My time is not very long, and I cannot spend it in answering such questions. So far, then, as this measure is concerned, I want to acquit myself of any charge of inimicality to the interests of this Territory, in favor of which the gentleman who is conducting this bill for the Committee of Ways and Means invokes the sympathy of the committee. I sympathize as much with the wants of the Territory of New Mexico as he can; and all I ask is that he may sympathize in the same manner with our merchants and mariners on the Ohio. I have said, Mr. Chairman, all that I intended to say.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I ask the gentleman from New York to give way to me for a moment. Mr. WALBRIDGE yielded the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I have only a remark or two to make. I have already explained to the committee the grounds on which the Committee of Ways and Means recommended these appropriations. I do not now propose to go again over the subject. I merely wish, on behalf of the Committee of Ways and Means, and on behalf of the House, to make a very brief response to the remarks of my colleague, [Mr. Preston], in regard to the motives which he has supposed must have actuated the committee in putting some of these provisions into the bill.

I am perfectly aware, Mr. Chairman, of the responsibility which I have personally incurred in attempting to conduct this bill through this committee, and I am also aware that it would be improper for me, having the bill in charge, to engage in irrelevant and heated discussions; and if I were to enter into such discussion with any man, it certainly would not be with my friend and colleague. But I wish to call the attention of the committee to the desperate straits to which my colleague is now reduced since the failure of his attempt to weld the custom-house bill on the deficiency bill. In his extremity he has gone so far, and has so far forgotten himself—for he is not in the habit of doing such things—as to impute to the Committee of Ways and Means the unworthy motive of attempting to conciliate the strong vote of New York, by reporting in favor of the appropriation for the purchase of the assay office in that city. I am sure that it is not necessary for me to repel such insinuation on my own part, as well as on the part of the committee.

Mr. PRESTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him to explain the reason why the committee did report that appropriation? Let him go on and give us the reason.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I addressed this committee the day before yesterday for nearly half an hour, in explanation of the reasons which governed the committee in putting in that provision. I have no additional reasons to give. Perhaps my colleague may suppose that the reasons then given are not sufficient. If he does so suppose, ought he not at least to do so much justice to the motives of a committee of this House as to presume that they were governed by proper purposes? Sir, I tell my colleague that coalitions have been formed here lately, but not by the Committee of Ways and Means. I regret the remarks of my colleague, for I consider them unbecoming to himself and indecorous to the committee. Sir, I have nothing more to say.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Preston]; and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the remaining sections of the bill. The section providing for the purchase of the site of the assay office in New York having been read—

Mr. PRESTON. I move Mr. Chairman, to strike out the section that has just been read. I desire to make a few remarks for the purpose of stating the reason why I make this motion. The custom-houses which have been rejected as unfit for receiving appropriations in these bills were asked for by preceding acts of Congress, were ordered by preceding Congresses, and appropriations for them were voted in a deficiency bill here last year—

Mr. ORR, [interrupting.] In the deficiency bill?

Mr. PRESTON. In the deficiency bill; I repeat sir, the custom-houses were, after the original appropriations, continued by appropriations in the deficiency bill, to supply the deficiencies in their construction. My colleague, in reply to my question as to the motive of the committee for their course, says he has not an opportunity of replying, and refers me to his speech. Why, sir, all that I have heard in the speech of my colleague was more unsatisfactory, and a stronger reason against separating the measures than anything of the kind I would be able to utter myself.

We all remember the dispute between New York and Philadelphia, whether a Mint should be established in New York. During the last year the Secretary of the Treasury entered into a lease for a building in the city of New York, for which he is to pay $53,000 a year rent, for the assay office. And then the Committee of Ways and Means come here and ask an appropriation for $530,000, under the guise of a deficiency.

The vote is, Mr. Chairman, to appropriate $530,000 in order to buy out the Bank of Commerce in Wall street, in order that the Mint may be ultimately established there; or in order, at least, that the assay office may be established there. I have voted for that Mint and assay office, and I will do it again, as an independent proposition. I tell the gentlemen from New York, and the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, in this House, that, as an independent proposition, I voted for it before, and will vote for it again.

But the Committee of Ways and Means put into the deficiency bill this original appropriation —for it is nothing else but an original appropriation—and they exclude the deficiencies for unfinished custom-houses, which, by all the legislation of the past in reference to them, are entitled to be considered fair and just items in such a bill. Now, sir, I want to have this appropriation put on no better footing than our custom-houses. I do not admire that new system of economy by which the Committee of Ways and Means are to rebuke the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, or fit them to the Procrustean bed of their own notions. I do not want the custom-houses to be laid down on such a bed of public economy, and chopped off to suit the caprice of the committee; while, on the other hand, it tacks on the appropriation for this New York assay office. Are the dozen custom-houses for which appropriations are asked, calculated to decentralize trade from the great cities, and extend benefits to the people? Are we who advocate these appropriations attempting to establish custom-houses from mere extravagance? If the importers of Cincinnati, Pittsburg, or Louisville seek to save themselves from the cost of commissions and factorages which they are now subject to in the importing cities, by establishing direct trade, it is but a natural and proper desire on their part. It has been seen that the port of St. Louis and other ports have a large direct trade now, when a few years since they had none; and is this to be thrown away by refusing an appropriation for affording proper commercial facilities?

Now, sir, I submit to the committee if the custom-houses out of the bill, and the assay office in the bill, are not on the same footing? The gentleman from South Carolina admitted that they are. I see, by the sanguinary smile of my friend from Virginia, that he thirsts after the blood of both; but I trust, although I desire that neither may have any preference that both may pass, but that both may stand or fall together. I think that no preference should be shown by the committee without some adequate reason, and I have heard none assigned.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I regret the motion of the accomplished gentleman from Kentucky to strike out the appropriation of the city of New York for an assay office. I have no other knowledge of this measure than as it comes to us from the Committee of Ways and Means. Sir, what are the facts in this connection? By the authority of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to procure the necessary building for an assay office in the city of New York. In the exercise of his discretion he has made a contract running fifteen years, with an annual rent of $53,000, making an aggregate, within a small fraction, of $800,000. One hundred thousand dollars has already been expended in constructing the proper machinery to enable this office to do the work required of it; certainly another hundred thousand dollars will be expended before the fifteen years have terminated. By the terms of the lease, these improvements and fixtures will revert to the lessors at the expiration of this period. Here, then, by continuing as lessees we have an expenditure of a million of dollars for the rent of the building and the loss of our fixtures. By the terms of the contract, the United States are at liberty to terminate the same for an amount a fraction over half a million of dollars, by which the General Government comes in possession of the property in fee, and it can at any time, whenever deemed advisable for the public interest, be sold to reimburse the original payment, and also give to the Government the benefit of its appreciation in value. Certainly, if we may judge from the experience of the last fifteen years, this advance could not be less than one hundred per cent. in the next fifteen years to come. I take this question just where it already exists. The contract is made; the Government faith is pledged; you can have the whole property in fee for $530,000, or you can have a lease of it, and the loss of your fixtures at the end of fifteen years, for $1,000,000. Viewed simply as a commercial transaction, I believe it sound economy to terminate the lease and take the property, and so I believe it would be regarded by all good, practical, business men.

Sir, I deeply regret that, during the discussion of this question, any suggestion should be made that the city or State of New York is hostile to the legislation required by the wants of any section of the country. I shall the more regret it if this opinion shall gain credence on this floor. Identified with every village or hamlet in the country, by ligaments of trade and interest, the city of New York is interested in whatever develops the growth or industry of any section of the country. Considering our population and growth, the record will demonstrate we have never obtruded our claims on Congress to the injustice of any of the other sections of the Union. The aggregate population of this country is not yet twenty-five millions, one seventh of whom reside in our geographical State limits. The aggregate of personal and real property in the whole United States is eight thousand millions of dollars. The value of the property in the State of New York is estimated at twelve hundred millions of dollars, showing our wealth as well as our population to be more than one seventh of the whole property of the United States. We have a capital invested for educational purposes of six million seven hundred thousand dollars, the best commentary of the estimate we place on the importance of diffusing intelligence and educating our people. The annual revenue from our taxes alone, in the city of New York, may be estimated at eleven millions of dollars—more than one half of the whole revenues of the General Government—a sum exceeding thirty-seven millions of dollars was received at the custom-house during the last year in the city of New York. Fifty millions of dollars of foreign coin will be brought there this year by the four hundred thousand emigrants that will make this country the home of their adoption. A hundred millions of dollars from California and Australia will also be brought there during the next year, the greater portion of which will pass through the assay office, for which you have begun to provide. Through this, and other channels, we hope to regulate the commercial exchanges of the world. Our National Treasury has now in its vaults thirty millions of dollars, more than half of it collected at the city of New York. I therefore respectfully press upon the favorable action of the committee, the sound economy of terminating the lease, taking the property, which hereafter may be sold, without loss, if the public interest should be promoted by such a course.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I would inquire whether it will be in order to amend the section before the question is taken upon the motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to amend by reducing the appropriation to one dollar.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say at the outset, to my friend from New York, that it is in no spirit of hostility to that measure that I oppose this appropriation in this bill. I shall vote for that appropriation in its proper place, but, at the same time I say it is due to those of us who have stood by the Committee of Ways and Means upon principle, that the gentleman from Kentucky, who represents the Committee of Ways and Means upon this bill, should join us in voting to strike out this provision of the bill. Sir, I was willing to go, and did go with him, in opposing this custom-house amendment to the hazard of losing the appropriation for an important work in my own section of country. And upon what ground? Upon the ground that we ought not to hazard the passage of a bill which was necessary to carry on the ordinary purposes of Government. Now, sir, I adhere to that principle. If I mistake not, my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] made a special appeal to the House not to hazard the passage of the bill by voting for appropriations which are not necessary to carry on the ordinary purposes of the Government.

Now, I appeal to that gentleman to stand with me in opposition to this measure, and to advocate with me the striking from the bill this appropriation—which certainly is not necessary for any such purpose—and let us confine this deficiency bill to those appropriations which are necessary for that purpose. I think a proper regard for consistency requires him to do it. I know I am consistent when I take this course. I assure gentlemen that if they would reduce this bill to its proper sphere, they should at once strike out this measure, and place the matter beyond a doubt. Let us pass the bill containing only appropriations for legitimate and proper objects, and then let us consider and pass those other measures in a proper manner in a separate bill.

But, sir, gentlemen can no more stand here and insist upon retaining this provision of the bill than they could that for the custom-house in Providence, Rhode Island. The committee have stricken out that; they have refused to make provision for any of the custom-houses in the country; and now, in good faith, to be consistent with themselves, they are bound to strike out this appropriation for the benefit of the assay office in the city of New York. That will be consistent with the vote already given rejecting the amendment of my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.] Reduce this bill down to what it ought to be, and make it a bill to provide for the necessities of the Government, and then we can give it an almost united support—both Whigs and Democrats. We can then take up all these outside matters and vote upon them.

Mr. COBB. I am opposed to the amendment offered by my colleague. He complains of the House for having stricken out an appropriation for the custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island.

Mr. PHILLIPS. By no means. I said it was right. I voted in favor of striking out that appropriation.

Mr. COBB. Well, my colleague holds that because that was stricken out it is the duty of the House to strike out this provision also.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I said; that to be consistent, the House must do it.

Mr. COBB. Well, I am never governed in my votes here by what the House may do. I never allow my course to be governed by the action of the House.

I voted against striking out that appropriation for the custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island. I found it in the bill as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means. I intend to sustain that committee in my action upon this bill, and to vote to keep it in the shape in which they have reported it.

As to this appropriation for the assay office in New York, I am opposed to striking it out upon principles of economy. I believe it is right; and I shall vote for it because I find it here, without regard to the question whether it would be more appropriate to have it in another bill. I am always ready to vote upon what is presented to me here for my consideration; and although I may believe that propositions presented here are improperly presented, still, when I am called to act upon them, I will do it according to my best judgment.

I find this appropriation here; I believe it to be right, and I shall support it. I voted for the establishment of the assay office in New York. I fought for it for six years before we succeeded in getting it. I do not say this for the purpose of exciting my Pennsylvania friends, who are particularly interested in opposing that measure. I have supported the Mint in Philadelphia, but, at the same time, I have been in favor of the establishment of the assay office in the city of New York. I believe that it is economy to appropriate this money for the purchase of these buildings, and I hope the committee will sustain the provision.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire to amend the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order. There is an amendment to the amendment already pending.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. CUTTING. I move to amend the provision proposed to be stricken out by striking out the word "thirty," and inserting "forty" in lieu thereof, so as to make the appropriation $540,000 instead of $530,000.

It has been objected, Mr. Chairman, by many gentlemen upon this floor, that this appropriation does not partake of the character of a deficiency; and in regard to that I have to observe, that at the last session of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to procure, by lease or otherwise, grounds or buildings for the purpose of this assay office. Under that general authority he entered into a contract which, for the present, was a lease, and which also contained in it a stipulation for the benefit of the Government, of a purchase, and he recommends that that purchase shall be made. In order to procure those buildings if he desired, Congress placed at his disposal $100,000, and no more. In order to carry out the purchase that he has contracted to make, and to make it, would take $530,000; and consequently the appropriation made for that purpose is altogether deficient, and to make up the deficiency between the sum before appropriated and the one needed to carry out this contract, the committee recommend this item in the deficiency bill.

One word more. This question is treated, it seems to me, in a point of view different altogether from what it ought to be. The question is, shall we legislate now for the benefit of two banks in the city of New York, or shall we legislate for the benefit of this Government? We get the benefit of a provision in the contract by which we secure to this Government an advantageous purchase, and the result will be just this: If we do not buy from mistaken economy, or other motive not so creditable, we shall have paid out at the end of fifteen years in rent $795,000, and we shall have lost the whole cost of the building, which amounts to at least $100,000, making an expenditure in fifteen years of $895,000, and not a grain of sand left afterwards belonging to the Government to show the avails. On the other hand, take our stipulation, and what is the result? We pay $530,000 out of any money unappropriated; and at the end of the term, by that single expenditure of little more than half a million, we have building, land, and all, for less cost than the rent. Add interest upon the purchase money for fifteen years, at the rate of five per cent., and the Government does not pay interest on funds not in use, and the whole aggregate is $925,500—being a difference of $32,500 only; and for that $32,500 we own, as I observed before, in fee-simple the whole property; whereas by paying rent, you have not got a brick, or a grain of sand belonging to you. Who will own it? Who but the banks? And it is a bonus to these two institutions, at the end of fifteen years, over and above their rent of the whole land, or of the building. That is just the state of this question.

One word as to Pennsylvania. Philadelphia has grown, Mr. Chairman, to be a magnificent city. The last census, if I remember correctly, gave her some four hundred and fifty thousand or four hundred and sixty thousand people. In my judgment she has grown to be too large, and ought to be far above the small considerations which seem to operate here.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the merits of this appropriation. My purpose simply is to show the real position occupied here by the Committee of Ways and Means in relation to it, and to relieve that committee from the position in which my friend [Mr. PRESTON] has so ingeniously placed it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is, that I do not understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] as speaking in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING.]

Mr. CUTTING. I withdraw my amendment, so that the gentleman from Kentucky can make another amendment and speak to it.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks leave to withdraw his amendment. Has he the unanimous consent of the committee for that purpose?

Objection was made; and the amendment was therefore not withdrawn.

Several MEMBERS. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The amendment is to strike out the word "thirty," in the one hundred and thirty-fifth line, and to insert "forty," which would make it read "five hundred and forty thousand dollars," instead of "five hundred and thirty thousand."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Well, I am opposed to that.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. To be strictly in order, the gentleman should confine himself to the discussion of the reasons why $540,000 should not be appropriated instead of $530,000.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it would be very hard, after the latitude that has been allowed to members in this debate, and after the remarks that have been made, not to be allowed to make a brief explanation. I have not troubled the committee much, and I merely wish to explain in behalf of the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no objection to the gentleman from Kentucky being permitted some latitude on the subject of these custom-houses.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair is only temporarily fulfilling that duty; and if the question is made at any time I will endeavor to enforce the rule, and to keep gentlemen strictly to the explanation of, or reply to, the amendment before the committee. With the unanimous consent of the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky may now proceed to make the explanation he desires.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not care now, Mr. Chairman, to make the remarks I intended. I shall seek some other time in the discussion of the bill to make the explanation I desired.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will proceed with his explanation. I have no objection to his deviating from the strict rule. Other gentlemen have been allowed to do so, and of course the same latitude should be extended to him.

The question was then put on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING;] which was not agreed to.

Mr. BISSELL. I move to amend by striking out the words "five hundred and." The position which I have occupied in reference to this matter may be known by the fact that when the former deficiency bill was pending I voted for that provision. In committee, while attached to the bill, I voted for the bill in the House. But, sir, so I also voted for the other provisions while the same bill comprising them was pending. I voted for the bill with these provisions in. Some of these provisions I have now voted against, as I shall vote against this one, for the reason that it is, in my judgment, in the wrong place now.

The only point upon which I differ with the committee in the action which they have taken upon this subject, is the one of inserting this provision in this bill; and if there is anything in the bill which will endanger it, it is this. Has this committee considered that of the $5,400,000, the aggregate amount of appropriations made in this bill, considerably more than one fifth of the whole is for the purchase of these two banking houses; and yet we are told that it is a deficiency bill, and that there is a great necessity for its passage. A deficiency bill! And how does the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] make it such? He tells us that the Secretary of the Treasury has made a bargain; that he has rented one or both of these buildings; and now, finding that he can make a better bargain, he proposes to Congress that the bargain be rescinded, and the Secretary be permitted to make another bargain. And that makes this appropriation a deficiency, does it? The deficiency, in my estimation, if it exists anywhere, exists with the Secretary of the Treasury.

Sir, let this deficiency be placed in the other bill, where it properly belongs. There is no haste, and no occasion for haste, in regard to this matter. We have, if I remember aright, one and a half years in which to close with this contingent bargain, which has been entered into by the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to these two banking houses.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, it leaves in the bill a part of this appropriation. I am opposed to that amendment for that reason, because I consider that the whole of the appropriation is wrong, according to the decision of the House heretofore made, in refusing to put the custom-house appropriations into the bill.

I desire, further, simply to say that I shall vote for this assay office appropriation, whenever it shall come up in the other bill. I would have voted for it here, because I consider it right, if the other propositions in reference to custom-houses, equally right, as I believe, had been put into the bill. But, as gentlemen have excluded them upon a point of principle, and as no man can show what principle of right requires that the one proposition should be included in this bill and the other excluded—if they be equally reasonable in themselves—I am obliged, to be consistent, to vote to exclude the proposition under discussion, in order that it may be introduced into the other bill, and form an additional inducement to bring it forward for successful action.

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. BISSELL, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE was recognized by the Chair. Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I believe I have the floor. My opinion is, that in respect to the lease—

A Voice. Make an amendment.

Mr. BAYLY. I am going to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is only in order by offering an amendment.

Mr. BAYLY. I suppose I can tell what my amendment is. I desire to say that the amendment which I intend to offer is one for which we have a precedent, in a case similar to this. I do not desire to reduce my amendment to a precise technical form, until I can see how to frame it, that it may read correctly in connection with the bill; but the substance of it is to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to get clear of this lease upon such terms as will not be detrimental to the public service.

I beg leave to say here that we have a precedent for such action in a similar case. The Atlantic warehouses were rented injudiciously and improperly, and the Committee of Ways and Means at the time recommended that we should get clear of those leases; and they used upon that occasion the same arguments precisely as are made now. They wished to get rid of the leases, and obtain private warehouses instead of public ones.

In the present matter I think the point is just this: that it is perfectly true, if this lease is to continue, and if Congress does not mean to get rid of it, we had better buy the property. In that respect I perfectly agree with the Committee of Ways and Means, and I fully agree with my friend from New York [Mr. CUTTING] also in that respect. It is wisdom to purchase this property, or make some amendment here with a view to get clear of this injudicious lease. The proposition to my mind, as a practical man, is clearly a proper one. If we mean to maintain the lease, we had better take advantage of the alternative given to us in the contract to purchase the property, for it is demonstrable that such a course will be a saving to the Government in the end. But it occurs to me that the first action of this committee in respect to this matter should be to first ascertain whether we can get rid of the lease. If we can, we had better not buy the property, in my opinion, but wash our hands of the whole transaction.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know if we can get clear of that lease in any way?

Mr. BAYLY. We can negotiate and get clear of it just exactly as we negotiated and got clear of the lease that Walker made for the Atlantic warehouses. But we do not desire to discard this contract. We do not desire to turn our backs upon it, as improper as we thought it was; but we ought to do one of two things, either to take some steps to get clear of the lease, or to buy the property. Prudence and economy dictate that, unless we get rid of it, we should buy the property. I think we may, by negotiation, obtain relief from the contract. At any rate, I do not think that the appropriation is in its proper place here in the deficiency bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia. I will state that the warehouse which was rented by Mr. Walker was not the property of the Government. I think, therefore, that my friend from Virginia is mistaken in relation to the power which has been exercised at any time in regard to that matter.

The question was then taken upon Mr. BAYLY's amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. What is the proposition now before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a proposition to strike out the clause of the bill providing for the purchase of the lease of the buildings for the assay office in New York city.

Mr. ORR. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will yield the floor to me, I will offer an amendment so as to make the gentleman in order in replying to it. I move to reduce the appropriation two dollars. I occupy, with reference to this bill, the same position very nearly—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I thought the gentleman from South Carolina offered the amendment for my benefit. [Laughter.]

Mr. ORR. I certainly did, and I thought that the gentleman wanted something to oppose, and that the amendment would afford him that opportunity in reply to me. I occupy the same position with my friend from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] for when this proposition came before the House I voted for it upon the yeas and nays. I believe it was the weight of that appropriation that aided materially in breaking down the bill; and I believe that this appropriation now, if it is not stricken from the bill, will do more to sink it than any one single item in it. I have not examined this matter very minutely or particularly since; but I doubt now whether the vote which I then cast was a correct one, and it is for that reason that I desire to get some information from the gentleman from Kentucky, so as to relieve the doubts which I have in regard to this matter. At all events, whether the information is satisfactory or not, I am in favor of striking out this appropriation from the deficiency bill, which can just as well be inserted in the civil and diplomatic bill. This appropriation, as a deficiency, ought not to be in this bill. I do not think that the Secretary has exercised a judicious discretion in making the contract. I am in favor of repudiating the contract, if the Government is not bound by the bond; and I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] if the papers have been executed in such a manner between the Secretary of the Treasury and these parties owning the property, as will preclude the Government from repudiating the contract? If we are in that position, then I have no doubt that it is expedient that you should purchase the site at $530,000, rather than that we should pay $53,000 per annum for fifteen years. I think the Secretary exceeded the discretion which Congress intended to vest in him at its last session; for it was never imagined that he, in renting or leasing, would, upon his own responsibility, attempt to bind the Government absolutely for fifteen years, or force us to purchase the property. He has placed the Government in a position that we are compelled to pay $530,000 for the purchase of the site, or to pay $53,000 per annum for fifteen years. Will the gentleman from Kentucky give me the information which I have indicated?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If the gentleman will look at the law of the last session, he will observe that it confers upon the Secretary the authority to lease property for an assay office.

Mr. ORR. But not for fifteen years.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The law does not limit the time, and the authority is clear. Then, if the gentleman will examine the contract made for the lease of this ground, he will observe that the Government are bound to pay this rent for fifteen years, unless they purchase the site. The papers are at my desk, and any gentleman who desires can examine them.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. What authority had the Secretary to make any such contract?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The lease was made in pursuance of the law of the last session.

Mr. SMITH. But does that law confer upon him the authority to make such a contract for fifteen years?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The law confers the authority because it makes no limit. Now, sir, I desire to make a single remark, and it is the last I shall make in connection with this provision. I do not intend to say one word as to the propriety or impropriety of adopting it, but only to relieve myself and the Committee of Ways and Means from the position which my colleague, [Mr. PRES-TON,] and some other gentlemen who have spoken to the same point, have placed us.

I was somewhat amused at the course of my colleague after the defeat of his custom-house amendment. He fairly took the wind out of the sails of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FLORENCE,] who had intended to father the opposition to the assay office. Whether it was for the purpose of making a graceful retreat, or whether it was a maneuver to secure good company for his custom-houses, I will not undertake to say. If the latter was the intention, I am not sure but it was a judicious move. He knows very well that if the House vote this provision out of the bill, that gentlemen from New York will endeavor to get it put in somewhere else. It might very well come into the custom-house bill; and if the gentleman can get an appropriation for an assay office in New York attached to the bill for the benefit of custom-houses and marine hospitals, the maneuver would not by any means be a bad one. We have had some experience in this House of the success of these coalitions; and if this is the intention of my colleague, the move has been well made. But, sir, I will not advise these gentlemen to take this course; I merely throw out the suggestion.

But, sir, my colleague in the course of his remarks attacked with great vigor this measure, as a favorite one of the Committee of Ways and Means. Not at all. I have explained before to the committee the origin of this amendment, and the connection the Committee of Ways and Means have had with it. It was not in the bill as originally introduced by them. It was introduced upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] though the committee, for reasons which have been given, supported the amendment after it had been offered. The committee did put it in this bill; but do not gentlemen know that in framing this bill the committee have not been governed by their own views as to the propriety or impropriety of provisions contained in the old bill, but by the expression of the wishes of the House as given by their votes upon the different items? The House, by a very large majority, voted in favor of this measure, and the Committee of Ways and Means, therefore, put it in the bill, not as instructing the House, but as being instructed by it. The provision is now before you, and it is entirely immaterial to me whether you put it in the bill or reject it. I only say to the gentleman from New York, that he need have no fear as to the fate of this appropriation. It must pass. If it does not pass now, it will at some other time. It is only a question of time and place. If it is stricken out of this bill, it will be inserted in the custom-house bill; or failing there, it will certainly go into the general appropriation bill. The Government is pledged either to pay the rent for fifteen years or to make the purchase; and it is clearly a matter of economy for us to make the purchase.

Now, in reference to the appeal made to me by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] to withdraw the provision from the bill, I have to say, that I have no authority to do any such thing. I have no authority to change the line of policy marked out by the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will you vote for striking it out of the bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No, sir, I will not vote to strike it out. I shall vote for the appropriation in good faith; but, as I said in the outset, I do not intend to discuss the proposition. It is before the committee, and it is immaterial to me whether they put it in or strike it out.

The question was taken, and Mr. ORR's amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. As I think all legislation ought to express the true facts of the case, I move to amend by adding, at the end of the paragraph proposed to be stricken out, the following words:

"The said appropriation having been made necessary in consequence of two unwise contracts made by the Secretary of the Treasury." [Laughter.]

It seems to be pretty generally conceded on all sides of the House, by the Democrats as well as the Whigs, that these contracts were very unwise and injudicious; and if this appropriation shall be voted, it will be voted under that settled conviction. Now, it seems to me that there is a propriety in putting upon the face of every act the true state of the facts, as near as they can be ascertained, which led to its passage. It strikes me, therefore, that this amendment would come in very properly here, and will explain this whole affair.

Mr. DEAN. I do not propose to debate this bill or any of the amendments. It seems to me that we are all prepared to vote upon this question, and I therefore ask for a vote upon it.

The question was then taken on Mr. LETCHER's amendment to the amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move to reduce the appropriation to one dollar.

Mr. Chairman, if I could but divest myself of the position that I occupy, as a Representative from Philadelphia, and assume the position that I desire to occupy upon this floor, simply as a member wishing to promote an economical expenditure of the public money, I presume the remarks which I am about to make would have a better effect upon the House. Still I solicit the attention of the committee, desiring members to give me credit for sincerity, being satisfied that I can present facts which cannot be controverted.

I desire, in the first place, to protest against this appropriation being considered a deficiency. I cannot, for the life of me, understand how the Committee of Ways and Means can torture this proposition to appropriate $530,000 into a deficiency, when the amount first appropriated for this purpose was simply $100,000. In order that we may go along properly and smoothly, I will at this point read the section of the bill making an appropriation for the establishment of this assay office at New York which was passed at midnight, or at two or three o'clock in the morning of the 4th of March, 1853; for be it known—I desire the country and the new members of this House to know it—that that proposition—

Mr. DEAN. Will the gentleman allow me one word?

Mr. FLORENCE. No, sir.

Mr. DEAN. Did not the gentleman vote for it? Mr. FLORENCE. That amendment came into the House some time in the morning of the 4th of March. I do not now recollect the precise hour, but it was after the five-minute debate had been closed on the civil and diplomatic bill; and the amendment was not even read when the committee of conference between the two Houses made their report upon that bill.

Now, I say that that appropriation was intended to be final, and I will prove it by the record that I have before me, and by the declarations made upon this floor by members from the city of New York. Out of their own mouths I intend that they shall be condemned. The section for the establishment of the assay office at New York reads thus:

"For carrying into effect the provision in this act establishing an assay office in the city of New York, in addition to the charges authorized to be received, $100,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Now, sir, the gentleman of the Committee of Ways and Means having charge of this bill, gave me the paternity of this opposition; but I do not think that I am entitled to it, nor do I deserve or desire especial commendation or notice because of the course I have, from a sense of duty, pursued in relation to this appropriation. I regard it extravagant and unnecessary, for reasons that I shall proceed as briefly to state as my very limited time will permit.

When we considered this whole subject, a day or two ago, I attempted to show that the cost of the support of the assay office was greater than any one had the most distant possible idea of. I gave figures to prove that the cost of conducting it was more than $100,000 per annum, and urged that no public necessity required or justified such an expenditure. No one, in the most extended view he dared take of this subject, when it passed the House a little more than a year ago, conceived that more than $100,000, the amount appropriated, or even that amount, would be required to consummate the object of the law. Why, take its phraseology, and we find that this sum was appropriated to the purpose; and it was then intimated it would be more than was necessary, because a portion of the custom-house in New York would be or could be made available for the purpose of assaying gold which would be brought to it. Besides the objection urged against the enormous expense—which was alleged to be $30,000—of the transportation of bullion to the parent Mint at Philadelphia, was the principal, indeed almost the only substantial argument adduced in support of it. Now, what is the reality now presented to us. The really enormous sum of $530,000 is asked for these bank buildings, $46,400 for salaries of officers, &c., and—

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to occupy the time of the committee in reference to the general question of the bill. What I have to say will be in allusion particularly to what fell from the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] as to the reason why this appropriation for the assay office in the city of New York should be made an exception to the appropriations for custom-houses, which were, by a vote of the committee, ruled out from this bill. The ground I shall take on that point is this: The great, the ruling necessity for this appropriation for the establishment of an assay office in New York city is not one which relates mainly to that city and its interests. The question is a national one. The establishment of that assay office would be a matter of national economy. There would be a saving of from $45,000 to $55,000 per annum in the transportation of gold to and from Philadelphia, and the interest on the money for the period during which it is delayed. The whole amount of gold received in New York during the last year was something like $60,000,000. The cost for its transportation to and from Philadelphia is at the rate of seventy-five cents on the $1,000; and there would then be an absolute expenditure of $45,000 per year. That is not lost to the city of New York; it is a loss to the revenue of the United States, which would be paid into the assay office in ingots. It is a loss to the people of the United States in the aggregate; and that being so, it strikes me that it is a consideration which renders the insertion of this clause in this bill reasonable and just. It ought not to be an exception.

Mr. HIESTER. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If we get a vote on this we shall easily pass the other items.

The question was put on the motion that the committee rise; and, on a division, there were—ayes 69, noes 84.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask for tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and WITTE appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 85.

So the committee refused to rise.

The question then recurring upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FLORENCE,] it was put; and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move an amendment to reduce the sum five dollars, and I make the amendment in order to say to the committee, that as they have voted down a proposition to get clear of this lease for these buildings, I think a clear case is made in favor of purchasing the property. That is all I have to say upon the subject.

A Voice. That is right.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. But the gentleman from Virginia before said that the appropriation for this purchase ought not to be in this bill, at any rate, but should be put in the other bill.

Mr. WITTE. I desire to say a word in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] but by no means to indorse the reasons which he assigned for it.

It is well, perhaps, that this committee should understand that the amendment now before it, in reference to the assay office in New York, is one of considerable importance—important not only to this House, but to the country. The committee will agree with me, that much has been said here, when amendments have been offered, contemplating additional appropriations for custom-houses, and marine hospitals, in sums involving but one or two thousand dollars, in any one case. But here we have a direct proposition to vote into this bill, under the name, and in the guise of a deficiency, an appropriation of more than half a million of dollars. Now, sir, there are weighty reasons why this amendment should not remain in the bill, and the country ought to know it. There are important reasons why this subject should be made a subject for the special legislation of this House, and the country ought to know that. I will state one or two of them briefly.

I know the capacity of the parent Mint at Philadelphia. I know the cost of that institution. It was $250,000. I know its competency now to do all the work required of a mint, and more. I know that the hands at that Mint are not now fully employed. I know that $100,000 were appropriated at the last Congress for the establishment of an assay office in the city of New York, and I know that, at that time, the friends of that measure stated that such sum would be all that would be required. Now, an additional appropriation of $530,000 is asked for. That circumstance may well attract the attention of the House and of the country.

I do not propose to enter into that discussion now; but will do so at the proper time. But this point I desire to state to the committee and the country: Is it well, is it prudent, is it wise, is it economical in this Administration, or in any Administration, that one and a half millions of dollars—because that will be the effect of the amendment, if adopted—should be appropriated for the establishment of an assay office in the city of New York, when the parent Mint at Philadelphia, competent to do all the business required, cost but a quarter of a million of dollars, and is now but partially employed?

There may be good reasons why this committee should consider earnestly and respectfully the statement of my honorable friend, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], the member of the Committee of Ways and Means. It is important that this committee should behave with becoming dignity to the Secretary of the Treasury; and I impute no improper motive to him, nor do I impute any improper motives to the Committee of Ways and Means. I believe that the committee considered themselves as warranted in introducing this amendment into the bill; and it may be exceedingly important for the friends of the bill, the friends of the Administration, and especially those gentlemen who have professed so much sympathy and so high a sense of justice towards the laborers engaged here upon the Capitol extension, and the employees of the Government generally, to know how far they may endanger the success of the bill by suffering an amendment to remain in it so momentous in its consequences; involving, as it does, an appropriation of more than half a million of dollars made, under circumstances exceedingly doubtful, and which ought to be made the subject of special legislation here. I repeat what I said at the commencement of my remarks, that this is an important measure. It is said that this Administration desires to collect the revenues of the country with the greatest regard for economy, and I do them justice in saying that I believe them to be sincere in this; but remember if this is to furnish, in the slightest degree, extra additional pay for employees, and those engaged in the collection of the revenue, let it be charged to that account, and not to the account of the assay office. Let it be placed upon its own basis, that we may have no special or indirect pleading in legislation. I do not charge this upon the committee, because I believe they are perfectly sincere in what they have recommended.

There is another word which I desire to say in this connection, and it is this: My honorable friend from New York, [Mr. WALBRIDGE], for whom I have a personal regard, I think is somewhat mistaken in the position he took upon this subject. I desire here to make a remark in reference to the argument of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY]. He proposed that we should abrogate the contract in relation to the purchase of these buildings. If it be true—and I have no reason to doubt the word of the gentleman, because I know he is competent to judge—that this purchase might be considered as a business operation, an exceedingly advantageous and profitable transaction, then there can be no difficulty about changing the nature of the lease, or it may be selling out for a very handsome premium. I will say this, and I say it with a particular knowledge of what I am saying, because I have some little acquaintance with the geography of New York, that one tenth part of the sum in question will purchase a lot three times as large as the one involved in the contract, and which will be no further from the business center of the city than the present Mint is from the business of Philadelphia—

The question was then taken on Mr. BAYLY'S amendment; and it was rejected.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move to strike out the words "five hundred and thirty thousand dollars," and insert the word "two."

The gentleman from New York, when I last had the floor, asked me if I voted for this assay office. I tell him emphatically that I did not. I struggled as hard as any individual could upon this floor, on the last night of the second session of the Thirty-Second Congress, to defeat it; and I assure him if others had used the same zeal and industry which I then did, it never would have had an existence—but let by-gones be by-gones. I have no griefs to express. "I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him." When this subject of the establishment of an assay office in New York, or rather the branch Mint—for it is, in fact, the same thing —was under consideration during the last moments of the last session of Congress, to show that an extravagant appropriation was not anticipated for that purpose, it will be recollected by all—

Mr. HIBBARD. I call the gentleman to order. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. FLORENCE. I only wish to state facts, which I fear the gentleman does not relish.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] is not in order, and must take his seat.

[Loud cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. FLORENCE. Now, sir, after this interruption, my five minutes begin, I suppose? [Laughter.] I ask that the committee will indulge me a little upon this occasion, for I propose to vindicate the truth of congressional history, and show strong reasons why this appropriation should not be made. I shall do that, if gentlemen will permit me to indulge in a pretty large latitude of debate; if not, I may as well take my seat—

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. FLORENCE. Well, sir, to resume. I am opposed to this proposition, as a matter of economy, which has been so strongly urged as a reason why the appropriation of $530,000 ought to pass, and I hope I may be considered in order in speaking to that point. We are seriously and gravely told that the Secretary of the Treasury has made an economical contract for leasing this property, at the rate of $53,000 a year for a period of fifteen years, making in the whole period, if I recollect the gentleman's statement, for I have not made the calculation myself, the sum of $795,000, as the sum which will have been expended when the lease shall have terminated, and has secured the privilege of buying it in fee-simple for $530,000. I am compelled to candidly acknowledge that I, at least, cannot understand the principle of economy involved in this transaction, nor do I exactly understand how other gentlemen can. Hence I am in favor of striking out this appropriation, and at this time of only making provision for the payment of the rent merely, because if we are to continue the assay office in New York the expense, in addition to the $53,000 every year for carrying it on, will amount to the large sum of $174,000, or thereabouts, making in fifteen years an expenditure of $2,500,000. Now, I do not think this is a measure of economy much to be applauded. It would be, however, wise and economical to pay this sum of $53,000 to the Bank of Commerce, or Bank of New York, shut up the building, pay for the transportation of the bullion to Philadelphia, have the gold assayed and refined there, and still the Government would be largely the gainer by the operation.

Mr. WALKER. I would like to know how the gentleman makes out that the Government would be a gainer by such a course?

Mr. FLORENCE. If I have time I will explain to the gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the gentleman will explain, because I dispute the assertion.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will, more clearly, if the gentleman is not convinced; but before I do so I desire to say a word to my friend from New York, [Mr. WALBRIDGE], who advocated the passage of this appropriation, upon the ground, that if the Government made provision for the purchase of this property, they could sell it at the end of fifteen years, and get $1,000,000 more than we now propose by this bill to give for it. Now, sir, I do not agree with the gentleman, that it is proper, nor is it the province of this Government, to enter into the real estate business; but if we are to enter upon such a speculation it would be better to sell the property at once, or rent it out at an advance, and get a percentage upon it; because you would thereby obviate the necessity of paying the rent, and you would save, besides, the large sum of $530,000, which this provision proposes to appropriate. If the gentleman will introduce such an amendment I do not know but I would vote for it; because it would be really a matter of economy for us to pursue such a course, and have the gold bullion transported to Philadelphia for assaying, refining, and coining, the cost of which, I believe, will not be more than $15,000 per annum, or certainly not more than $30,000 per annum, according to the declaration of gentlemen upon this floor who advocated the establishment of a branch Mint in New York, as may be seen by referring to the debates, which my time will not now enable me to read, but which I may do at some future period in this debate. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALKER] is answered; but if he is not, I will proceed—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the committee do now rise.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Withdraw the motion!"]

Mr. WASHBURN. I am satisfied that it will be impossible for us to come to a final vote upon the bill to-day, and I insist upon the motion.

The question was taken, and upon a division, there were—ayes 75, noes 90.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. PRESTON. I hope we shall take a vote now.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman—

[Loud cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. JONES. Very well, gentlemen, my five minutes do not commence until you have done crying "question," and I do not want to occupy five minutes either.

Several MEMBERS. "Go on!" "Go on!"

Mr. JONES. As one member of the Committee of Ways and Means, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out this appropriation, because I think it is the true policy of the Government to pay this money.

I, sir, voted against the custom-house appropriations, because I believed that enough had been appropriated to erect buildings adequate to all the wants of the country, in the several localities. I voted against them as amendments to this deficiency bill, and I will vote against them by themselves or in any other bill.

I believe, sir, that, in this case, the Secretary of the Treasury, with just authority of law enough to give color of legality to the transaction he has entered into with these banks, has gotten us into this difficulty, and that the cheapest, quickest, best, and most economical way is to buy out of it. The authority given him was to procure, by rent, lease, or otherwise, a suitable building for the assay office in the city of New York. It is not pretended, I believe, that all this property which he has leased with a conditional right to purchase, is necessary for the assay office. The act of the Secretary has sufficient authority, in my opinion, to bind the Government, if it would not an individual; and that being the case, I wish to pass this appropriation and to get out of the difficulty in the best way we can. Even if it is the policy of the Government to void the lease altogether, I think we can get out of the difficulty with less cost by a purchase of the property, under all the circumstances.

A good many gentlemen here object to this appropriation upon the ground that it is not a deficiency. Sir, it is not a deficiency, nor is it a regular annual appropriation. Once passed, it is done with forever; and if you intend to pass it, the sooner you do it the better; if you intend to make the purchase, the sooner you stop the interest the better; which is certainly sound policy when you are buying up your stock at twenty-one per centum premium. Void or cancel this lease by the payment of $530,000, and thereby stop the accruing interest at six per centum.

The question was taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I respectfully appeal to the committee, as we have exhausted the whole subject, to let us take vote on the amendment.

Mr. PRESTON. I demand tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. STANTON of Tennessee, and HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. PRESTON; and it was agreed to, the tellers having reported—ayes 91, noes 59.

Mr. PRESTON. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is no other contested point in the bill pending. Let the committee rise and report the bill.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FAULKNER and HUGHES were appointed tellers.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it in order, Mr. Chairman, to amend the proposition now?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, MARCH 20, 1854.

NEW SERIES...No. 43.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 86.

So the committee refused to rise.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CRAIGE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to offer the following amendment, to come in after line one hundred and seventy-seven, which the Clerk has just read:

For the payment of laborers employed in shoveling snow from the walks around the Capitol, President's House, and other public buildings, $420.

This is an expenditure which became necessary in consequence of the extraordinary snow storm which occurred after this bill was reported.

The question was put, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to amend the amendment just offered by the gentleman from North Carolina. [Mr. CRAIGE.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late; but he will state his amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I propose to amend by adding one dollar to the appropriation for completing the pedestal and inclosure of the equestrian statue of Andrew Jackson, as that was, I believe, the clause to which the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina was attached.

The CHAIRMAN. That clause of the bill has been adopted by this committee, and an amendment to it is not in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I insist that the gentleman's amendment comes too late, and therefore it is out of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I offer my amendment for the purpose of learning from the friends of this bill where they get their constitutional power.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I must insist upon the fact that I had the floor to offer the amendment when the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAIGE] offered his.

The CHAIRMAN. Such being the case, the Chair will then entertain the amendment with pleasure.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to increase that appropriation one dollar.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I rise to a question of order again. It is, that the amendment is offered too late, and therefore it is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move the amendment to that item, and it is in order, because we have not advanced beyond that clause in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the last clause read, and the Chair thinks it is in order to receive the amendment to that clause.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to increase the appropriation one dollar; and to show that I have no purpose to prostrate the action of the committee, I will content myself with inquiring of the friends of this bill—I will not select out any particular one of them—those who doubt the constitutional power of making these appropriations, where the power is found in the Constitution to vote money out of the Treasury of the United States, for the purpose of either erecting or protecting that equestrian statue?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am opposed to the gentleman's amendment, and hope it will not be adopted. Let us have a vote upon it.

Mr. CAMPBELL, there being no objection, withdrew the amendment.

The Clerk then resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If there be no objection, I move that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HAVEN. I object to voting upon this bill without reading it.

The following section was then read:

"For the compensation and expenses of the commission of civilians and military men appointed under the provisions of the first section of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, approved 3d of March, 1853,' to determine matters connected with the management of the national armories, $5,996 61, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the payment or allowance of any compensation to the military men employed, other than their regular pay and emoluments as officers of the Army."

Mr. BISSELL. I propose to strike out the proviso from the clause just read, and to insert the following:

Provided that in the payment of such officers of the Army as may have served upon that commission, their pay as such officers shall be deducted.

I desire to say but a word or two in explanation of the amendment I have offered, and the committee will see at once the necessity for its adoption. In the commission here spoken of, three or four of the board were taken from civil employments, and two were officers of the Army. The proviso in the bill, as it now stands, excludes those officers from any pay excepting their regular pay as officers. That is certainly unjust, as I am sure I can convince the committee in a single moment. These two Army officers, after living upon pay just about enough to support them, and after they gathered all the conveniences about them, and made all their arrangements by which they could live as cheaply as possible, were ordered from their quarters and subjected to the expense of living at hotels, traveling a good deal, and to all the dear charges and enormous expenses which we know men are subjected to who are engaged in business that calls them from city to city.

A MEMBER. But they had mileage.

Mr. BISSELL. How much would that amount to, in passing from one little town to another? They had to live at hotels just as their colleagues were obliged to do, and their expenses were consequently more than their pay and allowances as Army officers. You certainly would not degrade those two officers, by compelling them, when sent upon a commission, as they arrived at a city or town, to go in search of cheap and obscure lodgings, when their colleagues went to hotels. You would expect them to lodge at hotels as their colleagues did; and to enable them to do so, you must allow them sufficient pay. My amendment proposes to pay them as the other members of the commission are paid, deducting their entire pay and allowance as Army officers during the time they served upon such commission. I do insist that this is just and fair, and I am sure that no gentleman of the committee will oppose it.

These two officers, like the others, were kept for about five months here at Washington, at Springfield, and at other places. They had to live as the other members of the commission lived, and their pay as officers merely would not support them. They did not seek this position; they did not want it, nor was it for their advantage to have it; but you have requested them to take the position; they have performed the labor; and now you propose to reward them by withholding the pay you give to their colleagues, and to compensate them at a rate that would require them to purchase their breakfasts and dinners at the market, of the huckster women, and then sleep in the market house at night.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask that the amendment may be again reported.

The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. JONES. Now I would ask the gentleman what was the rank of the officers who were employed upon this commission?

Mr. BISSELL. I believe they received the pay of captain.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman if the officers employed were not Colonel Andrews and Colonel Steptoe?

Mr. BISSELL. Yes, sir; they were the men. They held the rank of colonel, but only received the pay of captain. But now that I am up, I wish to make a single remark in addition to what I have already said. We all know that the price of board in the hotels in New England, New York, and thereabouts, is enormously high; and all their expenses were proportionately high. And I repeat, that to compel these gentlemen to quit their legitimate business, and to have imposed upon them laborious duties by which they were compelled to incur large additional expenses, and refuse to afford them any additional compensation, is the grossest injustice. I hope the committee will not allow themselves to be prejudiced against this just and proper amendment.

Mr. JONES. I do not recollect precisely what rations officers of this grade receive, but I suppose they are some six or eight.

Mr. BISSELL. It depends upon the length of time they have served.

Mr. JONES. Very well. These rations are twenty cents each. They receive twenty cents a mile for travel, while the railroad fare between this city and Springfield is not more than two and a half or three cents; certainly not exceeding three cents. Then I believe they are allowed quarters, and other incidental allowances. Their pay continues all the time, and this service was as easy for them as their military service. I cannot see, therefore, why it is that when an officer of the Army in the employment of the Government, who is receiving pay for his services, if he is required to perform a duty, because it does not happen to be to command his men in battle, he should receive additional pay. They would not have given up their pay to take this little commission, it is true; but I think it is asking too much of the Government, whenever an army officer is required to do any duty—having previously had leave of absence, perhaps for months or years, that he should come in for additional pay for such services.

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the committee refused to rise.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of Mr. BISSELL's amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish to inquire if we did not adopt a provision in a previous portion of this bill forbidding the employment of military superintendents?

Mr. CLINGMAN. Oh, no; this is another matter entirely. It has nothing to do with that.

Mr. LETCHER. Before the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is adopted, I propose to add at the end of the proviso which he proposes to strike out, a proviso allowing these officers the same mileage as was allowed to the other commissioners.

Mr. BISSELL. The other commissioners were paid by the day, and I do not suppose they received mileage. I propose, in my amendment, however, that all the other pay which these officers may have received, whether as regular pay, rations, mileage, or in whatever shape it may have inured to them, shall be deducted.

Mr. LETCHER. I propose, then, to add, "the usual mileage allowed to officers for traveling."

This proviso was put into the bill somewhat by my agency. I had it brought in here because I saw that there was a disposition throughout this country to make the civil authorities of the land, the civil operations of the country, and the civil mechanics of the country, subordinate to the military authorities and to the military power.

Mr. BISSELL. With the permission of the gentleman from Virginia, I will say that, although this commission did not properly involve military duties, yet inasmuch as it related to investigations into the manufacture of arms, it was doubtless very proper that two of the six commissioners should be taken from the Army. I think, therefore, that no fault can be found upon that score.

Mr. LETCHER. No matter what considerations induced the designation of those men, they are officers of the Government, who, by contract, receive regular pay for their services, and it is not fair to discriminate between them and other individuals in the employ of the Government who are also receiving regular compensation. If I recollect aright, we have a law which prohibits clerical and other officers of the Government from receiving any pay in addition to their regular annual compensation. Now, while the other officers of this Government are compelled to obey the strict letter of that law, and to observe its faithfully, whenever a military officer is assigned to civil duty, he instantly comes before this House and demands that he shall receive extra compensation for his services. Well, now, how came these military gentlemen to be appointed? Because of their knowledge of fire-arms?

Mr. BISSELL. With the permission of the gentleman, I will answer his question in a few words. The law of Congress authorizing the raising of this commission, provided that the Department should put at least two men from the army upon it.

Mr. LETCHER. I know that that was the law.

Mr. BISSELL. Then why complain of the employment of those officers?

Mr. LETCHER. Now, what is the particular hardship inflicted on these military gentlemen? The gentleman from Illinois says that when they go upon service of this sort, they have to board at hotels, and to live more extravagantly than they would otherwise do. I do not know how that is; but judging from the rumors afloat, these gentlemen did live extravagantly enough, in all conscience. Sir, if these gentlemen, when engaged in service of this sort, choose to live extravagantly, or liberally, if you please, beyond their means and compensation, is it to be expected that this House will come forward and indemnify them, or that we are, by this course, to sanction the principle sought to be introduced into all the Departments of the Government, of placing military men in situations that belong to civilians and to civil mechanics?

Mr. CARUTHERS. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HESTER. On that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and FAULKNER were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the committee refused to rise, the tellers having reported—ayes 50, noes 76.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was rejected.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. BISSELL, which was again reported by the Clerk.

Mr. McMULLIN. I demand tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DEAN and RIDDLE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 49. No quorum voting.

Mr. BARKSDALE. There is no use in our sitting here unless gentlemen vote on one side or the other. I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That motion is not in order.

The Chair so decided.

[Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!" from all sides of the Hall.]

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to submit a question. Is it not competent for the Chair to count the House without calling the roll, and so ascertain whether or not there is a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. No. The rule requires that when the committee shall find itself without a quorum, the roll shall be called, and the names of the absentees be reported to the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I make the point of order that the committee may rise before the calling of the roll. The motion for the committee to rise is in order, and I do not see why that motion does not take precedence of the pending question on the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is not in order for the committee to rise after the Chair having ascertained that there was no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN. The roll must be called; the committee cannot now rise.

Mr. PRESTON. With all due deference to the Chair, I think that less than a quorum have the power to rise. I do not dispute what the Chair says as to the calling of the roll.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is clear that the motion for the committee to rise is not in order, as the rule requires—where the vote does not show a quorum present—that the roll shall be called.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I call the gentleman to order, because the Chair has decided the question, and against that decision an appeal is taken. The Chair decided that the motion to rise is not in order, and from that decision of the Chair I appeal.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw my motion that the committee do rise and report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that a motion that the committee rise is not in order after the roll is ordered to be called. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll having been called, the names of the absentees were noted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee) taking the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the deficiency bill, (H. No. 271;) and finding itself without a quorum, had, agreeably to rule 126, caused the roll of the House to be called, and thereupon directed him to report the names of the absentees to the House.

The following is the list of absentees:

Messrs. Abercrombie, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barry, Benton, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Chase, Chrisman, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cutting, John G. Davis, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Etheridge, Fwing, Farley, Franklin, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hiestler, Hill, Hillyer, Howe, Hughes, Keitt, Lamb, Latham, Lindley, Lindsley, Lyon, McDougall, McQueen, Mace, May, Mayall, John G. Miller, Nichols, Olds, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Ready, Reese, Richardson, David Ritchie, Rogers, Rowe, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Scudder, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Sollers, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tweed, Warren, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollicoffer.

The SPEAKER. There being a quorum of members present who have answered to their names, the Chairman will resume the chair.

The Chairman accordingly resumed the chair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the committee do now rise. It is evident that we cannot finish this bill this evening.

Mr. HOUSTON. We can finish it easily, if we try.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee were dividing on a motion when the committee found itself without a quorum, and the roll was called.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit to the Chair, as a point of order, whether it is in order to make a motion that the committee rise while the House is dividing?

Mr. BISSELL. If not, then the committee never can rise.

Mr. JONES. There is no difficulty in that. You have a majority here, and can complete the division, and then move that the committee rise.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DAWSON demanded tellers upon the motion; but they were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and decided in the negative—ayes 71, noes 73.

So the committee refused to rise.

The tellers [Messrs. RIDDLE and DEAN] resumed their places, and reported—ayes 72, noes 48.

So Mr. BISSELL's motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am instructed by the Committee of Ways and Means to offer three amendments, which I desire to be read as one.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"For arrears of pay for services of volunteers in the Kentucky regiment, called into service in the year 1836, $1,000.

"For arrears of pay for services of volunteers or militia, called into service in the Black Hawk war, $1,000.

"For clothing for the Army, camp, and garrison equipment, and horse equipments, to supply the articles lost in the wreck of the steamer San Francisco, $26,590."

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order. I submit to the Chair that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If there is to be any difficulty in relation to it, I will withdraw it.

Mr. PRESTON. I am convinced that there are more amendments to be proposed to this bill yet than gentlemen are aware of. I think it will be impossible to finish it to-day, and I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WHEELER. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PERKINS, of New York, and PHILLIPS were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 80.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. PRESTON. I move to strike out the first clause under the head of "Navy Department," and to insert in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. It is hardly necessary to have the amendment read. I suppose the gentleman from Kentucky can state what it is. I believe that it is the custom-houses and New York assay office amendments united.

Mr. PRESTON. Let it be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment, which commenced as follows:

"Custom-houses and assay office—"

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, (interrupting the reading of the amendment.) I rise to a question of order.

Mr. PRESTON. Surely, the gentleman does not decide me to be out of order before he hears my amendment read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not decide the gentleman out of order; but I raise a question of order. The amendment is headed "custom-houses and assay office," and I have a right to presume, from that heading, that it relates to custom-houses and the assay office; and I contend that it is not in order, as an amendment, at this point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know what is in the amendment; but if it corresponds with the title, it is evidently out of order at this point.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, I will withdraw it, and offer it at the end of the bill.

Mr. BALL. I move to amend that portion of the bill in reference to the Navy Department, by striking out the words:

"For fuel and lights, seven hundred dollars."

And on that I call for tellers.

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the committee do now rise; and upon that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRATT and VAIL were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the committee refused to rise; the tellers having reported—ayes 33, noes 90.

The Clerk then proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BALL. The amendment I proposed before the motion that the committee rise was submitted is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moved his amendment when the Clerk had read several paragraphs of the bill beyond where it has to come in, and it was not therefore in order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to strike out the words "expenses of the United States Navy in foreign ports, $72,666," and demanded tellers on the motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I hope that the committee will not grant tellers on that motion, for it is too transparent.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WALKER and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The question was put; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes not counted.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is lost.

The following section of the bill having been read:

"For continuing the publication of wind and current charts for printing and publishing sailing directions, hydrographical surveys, and other expenses of the hydrographical office—$10,000."

Mr. CAMPBELL. If this is the way things are to be done, (alluding to the obstacles interposed by members,) I move to reduce that item to five thousand dollars; and on that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and EASTMAN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported ayes 15.

The CHAIRMAN. There is not a majority of a quorum voting; so the motion is lost.

[Loud cries of "Count the other side!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand that the other side be counted.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I insist that the other side shall be counted. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRATT. And I insist that the decision of the Chair is the proper one. [Renewed laughter.]

[Loud cries of "Read on!" "Read on!"]

The Clerk proceeded to continue the reading of the bill.

Mr. PRESTON, (interrupting.) I rise to a point of order. I ask if the negative vote was announced by the Chair? If it was, then I will sustain the Chair in its decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not announced any vote in the negative. A quorum of the committee is now present, and a majority of that quorum has not voted; therefore, the motion is lost.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The negative vote has not been taken; therefore, the question was not regularly decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair repeats that he ascertained there was a quorum present; and a majority not voting in favor of the motion, it was lost.

Mr. PRESTON. I do not think that the Chair has a right to ascertain by count that there was a quorum present. That should only be done by a call of the roll.

The CHAIRMAN. It is quite manifest there is a quorum present.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Let us have the negative vote.

[Loud cries of "Order!" and "Question!"

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to know with what authority the Chair can decide that the motion was carried or lost, when both sides were not counted? [Laughter.]

Mr. PRESTON. I ask for a count of the other side.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is too late.

[Cries of "Order!" and "Question!"

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that it was not necessary to count the other side.

Mr. PRESTON. Then if that be the decision of the Chair, I appeal from it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. Chairman—

[Interruption and confusion.]

Mr. PRESTON. I will wait till the Chair definitely decides the point of order which I have raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will so decide the point when he shall have ascertained whether there is a quorum of members present.

The Chair then proceeded to count the committee, and announced that there were 148 members present; more than a quorum.

Mr. PRESTON. I rise again to a point of order. I state it in this way: I deny, after tellers are ordered, and the count has been taken of one side, the right of the Chair, in order to verify and ascertain whether there is a quorum present, to count the House by the eye.

A MEMBER. It is the every day practice here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the rules of this House require every member to vote, and upon a division of the House, a small number—a very small number indeed—voted in the affirmative. Consequently, the vote was not carried in the affirmative.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. And that number, too, less than a majority of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made its decision, and overrules the point of order taken by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

Mr. PRESTON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and upon that appeal demand tellers.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You cannot do that in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia cannot be entertained in committee. An appeal from the decision of the Chair has been taken in a proper manner by the gentleman from Kentucky, and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. PRESTON. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BOCK and VAIL were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 15; no quorum voting.

Mr. DAWSON. I observed that several gentlemen on the Whig side did not vote: I wish it were in the power of the Chair, as it would be in the House in the Speaker, to enforce the rule which requires every member to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll having been called, the names of the absentees were noted.

The Speaker having taken the chair, the Chairman of the Committee [Mr. CHANDLER] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the deficiency bill, (House No. 271); and finding itself without a quorum had, agreeably to rule 126, caused the roll to be called, and thereupon directed him to report the names of the absentees to the House.

The following is the list of the absentees:

Messrs. Abercrombie, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Ball, Barry, Bennett, Benton, Bissell, Bliss, Bridges, Brooks, Caruthers, Chrisman, Churchwell, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Edgerton, Elliott, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Franklin, Goode, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hill, Hilyer, Howe, Ingersoll, Keitt, Kerr, Knox, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lindsey, Lindsey, Lyon, McDougall, McQueen, Mace, May, Mayall, John G. Miller, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, John Perkins, Pringle, Ready, Reese, Richardson, David Ritchie, Rowe, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Scudder, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Sellers, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Straub, David Stuart, Tracy, Tweed, Wade, Warren, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer.

A quorum of members present having answered to their names, the Chairman resumed the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose, the question pending was an appeal from the decision of the Chair, upon which tellers had been ordered, and who had reported no quorum present. They will again resume their places; and the question will again be taken.

The tellers having resumed their places, reported—ayes 95, noes 24.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill.

At the end of the following paragraph:

For hospital at Philadelphia, $2,442 42—

Mr. PRESTON said: I want to ask the Chair if it will be in order at this point to move an amendment in reference to custom-houses, marine hospitals, and an assay office?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it would not be in order to move such an amendment under the head of Navy Department.

Mr. PRESTON. I will then offer it as an additional section to the bill.

The bill having now been read through,

Mr. PHELPS moved that the committee rise and report the bill.

The motion was put and carried, Mr. PRESTON meanwhile endeavoring to obtain the floor.

The committee accordingly arose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill (No. 271) "to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1854," and had directed him to report back the same to the House, with sundry amendments.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to make a privileged motion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and on that I demand the previous question.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The question was put; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the motion was agreed to.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL AGAIN.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The previous question then received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House again refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and being put, the motion was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on agreeing to the first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; which was read, as follows:

Strike out the words:

"For the collection of agricultural statistics and purchasing seeds, to be paid out of the patent fund, $10,000."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

For the collection of agricultural statistics and the distribution of seeds and cuttings, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Patents, $10,000

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn, and on that motion I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and PHILLIPS were appointed.

Mr. ORR. Will not this be the first question in order when we meet again?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it would.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to adjourn; the tellers having reported—ayes 25, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to vote on the amendments in gross?

Mr. DEAN. I demand a separate vote in regard to the assay office in New York city.

Mr. PRESTON. I desire that a separate vote shall be had on all the amendments, and I do not desire it in any unfriendly spirit.

The question was then taken on the first amendment of the committee; and it was agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment to strike from the bill the following clause; and it was concurred in:

"To purchase a site for a custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island, $24,000: Provided, That the entire cost of such site and building thereon shall in no event exceed the sum of $74,000."

The question next recurred on the amendment to strike from the bill the following clause:

"For the purchase of the lots or parcels of land, with the appurtenances and the buildings thereon, belonging to the one thereof to the Bank of Commerce, and the other thereof to the Bank of the State of New York, and particularly referred to and described in two contracts, one with each of said banks, for the leasing and right to purchase, the same bearing date the 19th of August, 1853: Provided, That before the said purchase is made, the State of New York shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over said land and property, and shall, by law, exonerate the same, and the property of the United States thereon, from all taxes, levies, and assessments thereon, whilst the same remains the property of the United States, $530,000."

Mr. DEAN. I demand the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion is not in order, the previous question having been seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn. I want to see a full vote on this very important question.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken on concurring with the Committee of the Whole; and it was agreed to—yeas 85, nays 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Bockock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bugg, Campbell, Caskey, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Colquitt, Craige, Crocker, Cullom, Dawson, Dent, Dick, Disney, Dowdell, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Edmundson, Elliott, Ellison, English, Everhart, Florence, Gamble, Giddings, Green, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Hicster, Hunt, Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lane, Lecher, Lily, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, Middleton Oliver, Orr, Phelps, Phillips, Morrison, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Smith Miller, Millson, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Sabie, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Showers, Skelton, William Smith, George W. Smith, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Andrew Stuart, Trout, Upham, Witte and Daniel B. Wright—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Carpenter, Chambers, Chase, Chastain, Cobb, Curaming, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dean, DeWitt, Dunbar, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Greenwood, Hastings, Haven, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Houston, Kittredge, Knox, Macdonald, Matteson, Maurice, Jones, Kirtledge, Knox, Macdonald, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, Morgan, Murray, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Peck, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Pringle, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Vail, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, and Wheeler—57.

So the amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was concurred in.

The question next recurred on the amendment to insert after line 177 the following, and it was concurred in:

For the payment of laborers employed in shoveling the snow from the walks around the Capitol, President's House, and other public buildings, $420.

The question next recurred on the following amendment:

Strike out the following words: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the payment or allowance of any compensation to the military men employed, other than their regular pay and emoluments as officers of the Army;" and in lieu thereof insert the following:

Provided, That in the payment of such officers of the Army as may have served on that commission, their pay as such officers shall be deducted.

Mr. LETCHER. That amendment involves a principle, and I call for the yeas and nays on it. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was concurred in; there being, on a division, —yeas 86, noes not counted.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 138, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Appleton, Thos. H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Belcher, Bell, Benson, Bockock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bugg, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Chastain, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craige, Cumming, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dent, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hiester, Houston, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Lilly, McCulloch, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, Macy, Matteson, Maxwell, Middlesworth, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peck, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Puryear, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Sabin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, and Daniel B. Wright—138.

NAYS—Messrs. Campbell, Carpenter, Cullom, Giddings, George W. Jones, Letcher, Maurice, Meacham, Morgan, Stratton, Elihu B. Washburne, and Wheeler—11.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon, at half past six o'clock, p. m., adjourned till Monday at twelve, m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

THE VERMONT SENATORSHIP.

Mr. FOOT. Mr. President, I rise to what I presume is a privileged question, for I believe a motion to reconsider is a privileged question; but as this day is set apart for special business, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to move the reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution was yesterday adopted directing the payment to Mr. PHELPS of per diem and mileage. The purpose is to move an amendment which is deemed necessary by the Secretary before he can make the payment under that resolution.

There being no objection, the vote was reconsidered.

Mr. FOOT. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "out of the contingent fund of the Senate a sum equal to," so that it shall read:

Resolved, That there be paid to the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS the amount of mileage and per diem compensation of a Senator, from the day of his attendance at the present session to this day.

The amendment was agreed to. The question recurred upon the resolution, as amended.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I desire to avail myself of this opportunity to say what I hardly need say, that if I had been present when the vote was taken, I should have voted for the resolution then pending affirming the right of the gentleman from Vermont to retain the seat which he claimed. Yesterday was the first time since the Senate commenced this session that I have been absent during its sitting. I was necessarily compelled to be absent by an important engagement. My presence would have made no difference, however; yet I wish to say that I am not in the habit of reporting on a case, and making a speech in its support, and then voting the reverse, or dodging the question when the vote is taken.

The resolution was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS AND POST OFFICE IN PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that this day is set apart for private bills.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I am aware of that, but I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate, for the reasons which I will state, to allow me to report back from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a bill to provide accommodation for the United States courts and the post office in Philadelphia, and I shall ask the Senate to consider it at this time. In consequence of an act consolidating the city and county of Philadelphia, enlarging the city limits, the United States courts are about to be turned out of the State House in Philadelphia; and there is also inadequate accommodation for the post office. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to report back the bill to provide a place for the post office in the city of Philadelphia, and for the courts of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. I will briefly state the reasons why it should now pass.

There being no objection, the report was received, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

It proposes to authorize and empower the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of the Interior, to provide necessary and permanent accommodations for a post office for the city of Philadelphia, and for the courts of the United States, with the office connected with them, in the eastern district of Philadelphia, by leasing and fitting up the same for a term of not less than ten years, or by purchase, with a proviso that no purchase shall take place except within the limits of an appropriation to be made by Congress.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, this bill is in the language of the one passed in regard to the holding of the courts of the United States for the district of Massachusetts, in the city of Boston, which directed the Secretary of the Interior to provide a suitable place for holding the courts there. The only difference is, that I have included in this bill the Postmaster General, because there is an inadequate accommodation for the post-office in Philadelphia. In New York, a large church has been rented, for which the Government pays some $10,000 a year. The post office is now kept in Philadelphia in the Merchant's Exchange, a place altogether unsuitable for it. The grand jury of the United States courts in Philadelphia has frequently made it a subject of complaint, and has twice made a presentment that the accommodations are inadequate.

There is now no place in which to hold the United States courts in that city. The City Councils have given notice that the State House can no longer be used for that purpose, since the city proper and surrounding districts have been consolidated. I have a communication from the Postmaster General stating these facts, and I have in my hand the proceedings of the City Councils to which I have referred. I have also a communication from the district judge of the United States, stating that on the 1st proximo the United States courts and their records will have to be removed from the State House in that city.

Our bill proposes to place Philadelphia upon the same footing with New York and Boston; and I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to it.

It makes no appropriation. It refers the matter to the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Interior.

I have included both those officers, because it may be necessary for them to separate. It may be that they cannot get in one building a suitable place for the post office and the courts; and hence, if they are obliged to separate, the Secretary of the Interior, having charge of the courts, their accommodation will come under his jurisdiction. If they can make a proper arrangement, they will so report to Congress, and an appropriation will hereafter be asked for. I hope that, under these circumstances, there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. STUART. I do not desire to object to the passage of the bill; but, as I understand the proviso—and I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the fact—it amounts to no proviso at all. As I understand it, it is in this language—provided, if they purchase, they shall not exceed an amount hereafter to be appropriated by Congress. That is no limitation at all.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask for the reading of the proviso. I think the Senator from Michigan is mistaken as to its purport.

The proviso was read, as follows:

Provided, That no purchase shall take place except within the limits of an appropriation to be made by Congress."

Mr. STUART. That is, an appropriation hereafter to be made by Congress. Now, under this language, if they go on and make a bargain, all Congress is to do is to fulfill it by paying the amount agreed upon. If it is any object to limit the discretion of the officers, it seems to me, and I suggest it for the consideration of the Senator from Pennsylvania—for, as I have said, I do not wish to oppose his bill—that we had better provide, that in case they agree to purchase, they shall report to Congress the terms on which they can purchase, before any contract be permanently entered into.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That is the intention of the proviso as it now stands. These officers are to make a conditional contract. They are to report to Congress the amount for which proper and suitable buildings can be purchased. I think, therefore, that the language of the proviso now is entirely proper. It is the same language as was used in the Boston bill.

Mr. BUTLER. The bill in reference to Boston came up for consideration in the Committee on the Judiciary, and I think it proper to say, that there were serious objections to it in the committee. Among others, the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. TOOMBS], I know, entertains decided objections to the whole system; for, if we buy court-houses and post offices for Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, every city in the Union will have the same claim, and we may be compelled to buy buildings for those purposes for all of them. This, therefore, is the commencement of a system. I do not know whether or not I shall be in favor of it; but I know there are very strong objections to the whole system, and I think it is rather precipitate to decide upon the bill now in its present form. I agree with the Senator from Michigan, that there is no restriction at all in the proviso to which he has referred.

Mr. BRODHEAD. If we provide suitable accommodations for the United States courts and post offices in Philadelphia, New York, Boston, and New Orleans, it will not, I think, therefore follow that all other places must necessarily be so provided for. These are the great arteries; these are the large places of this continent; and they are likely to remain so. It is impossible to obtain in such large cities from private individuals suitable buildings to accommodate the United States courts and post offices. Besides that, the State penitentiary in Philadelphia is now used for the confinement of prisoners of the General Government.

Mr. BAYARD. I should suppose the object of the honorable member from Pennsylvania might be attained, and yet the honorable members from South Carolina and Michigan be satisfied, by striking out the words "within the limits of an appropriation to be made by Congress," and by inserting in their place these words: "Conditionally, and dependent upon the making of an appropriation by Congress." The proviso would then read:

Provided, That no purchase shall take place except conditionally, and dependent upon the making of an appropriation by Congress.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That is the intention of the original proviso.

Mr. BAYARD. Then the alteration which I suggest will make it clear, definite, and certain. I move that amendment.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to; the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. BUTLER. I know that it is asking what perhaps may be thought irregular; but I wish to submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary in order to have it printed. It is one respecting the rules of the Senate; and as we are likely to go into Executive session—involving the necessity of deciding upon this report—very shortly, I simply desire to submit it, and ask that it may be printed.

The report was received by unanimous consent, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

Bill to provide for the distribution of arms to the several States and Territories, and Joint resolution explanatory of the law regulating the number of cadets to be appointed to the Military Academy at West Point.

HODGES AND LANSDALE, AND JOHNSON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of Hodges & Lansdale, and the legal representatives of Rinaldo Johnson and Ann E. Johnson.

Mr. BAYARD delivered an elaborate argument in opposition to the bill. [His argument will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. PRATT next obtained the floor.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, March 20, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of the twentieth section of the act of Congress of August 26, 1842, a detailed statement of the expenditure of the contingent fund of the Navy Department and its several bureaus, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1853.

The communication and the accompanying documents were ordered to be laid on the table, and printed.

Also, a communication from the Commissioner of Patents, transmitting, agreeably to the design of Congress, as indicated by an appropriation of March 3, 1853, for the collection of agricultural statistics and the purchase of seeds, the agricultural portion of his annual report.

Mr. MURRAY. I move to lay the communication on the table, and that it be printed.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to refer the document and the motion to print to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is not necessary, as there is no proposition to print an extra number.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. We ought to have the document printed, at any rate; and then a motion to print an extra number necessarily will go to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay upon the table is a privileged motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The usual custom is to refer the document to the Committee on Patents. It is the agricultural portion of the report.

Mr. BAYLY. I acquiesce in the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. JONES. If, then, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MURRAY] will withdraw the motion to lay upon the table and print, I will move that the report be referred to the Committee on Patents, and that it be printed.

Mr. MURRAY. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. JONES. Then I make that motion.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not withdraw the motion to lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MURRAY] made that motion, and he has withdrawn it.

Mr. JONES. - I move, as I said before, to refer the report to the Committee on Patents, and that it be printed; and also, that twenty-five thousand extra copies be printed for the use of the House, and that motion will go to the Committee on Printing. Upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. BAYLY. I beg to be understood. My motion was to refer the document and the question of printing to the Committee on Printing. I did not withdraw the motion. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] as I supposed, suggested to refer the two questions to the Committee on Patents, and if that had been the suggestion, I would have withdrawn my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia will allow the Chair to explain. The gentleman from New York moved to lay the document upon the table, and to print; and until that motion is disposed of the gentleman from Virginia could not move to commit the document to the Committee on Printing. Does the Chair understand the precise motion of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BAYLY. I think the Chair and myself do not understand each other. I understood the motion to be to lay upon the table, and print.

The SPEAKER. That was the motion.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to refer both, the document and the question of printing, to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could not move to refer the document to the Committee on Printing until the motion to lay upon the table is disposed of.

Mr. BAYLY. That motion has been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. It was not withdrawn until after the concurrence of the gentleman from Virginia in the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BAYLY. My motion was still pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to withdraw the motion, and to concur in the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BAYLY. The Chair certainly misunderstood me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not misunderstand. The motion to refer the document was not in order until the motion to lay upon the table was disposed of.

Mr. BAYLY. I would remind the Chair that that motion was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so stated, but not until the gentleman from Virginia concurred in the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BAYLY. Well, I believe the question of printing is debatable.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The previous question has been demanded, and debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no disposition to take the gentleman from Virginia by surprise. If it were competent to separate the motion to lay upon the table and print, and to move to refer the motion to print, the Chair does not know but the motion would stand, so far as the motion to print is concerned.

Mr. BAYLY. The motion to print, it seems to me, is a motion that ought to be, and can be, referred.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to submit this point of order: A demand has been made for the previous question, and no discussion is in order while that demand is pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware that the debate is not in order; but in order that there might be no mistake in reference to the character and effect of the several motions which have been made, he has allowed it to go on.

Mr. BAYLY. I did not mean to make any point on the Speaker. I know he did not mean to take me by surprise, nor did my friend from Tennessee mean to do it; but the form in which the matter has come up did take me so, under the present ruling of the Chair; because, I thought the gentleman from Tennessee only wished to make the suggestion that my entire motion should go to the Committee on Patents. I yielded to him to make that suggestion, although I did not mean to acquiesce in it; but I certainly did not mean to yield the floor for him to demand the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Virginia must see, I think, that the ruling of the Chair is entirely correct. The gentleman was never properly upon the floor to make his motion. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MURRAY] having made the motion to lay the document upon the table, it was not in order to make the motion to refer while that motion was pending.

The SPEAKER. It very clearly was not in order to make such a motion.

Mr. JONES. I then obtained the floor, and the gentleman, under the apprehension, perhaps, that I was going to refer his whole motion to the Committee on Patents, acquiesced in it. But, be that as it may, while I had the floor the gentleman from New York withdrew the motion to lay upon the table, and I then made the motion that the document be referred to the Committee on Patents, and be printed, and the further motion that twenty-five thousand extra copies be printed for the use of the House, which latter motion would go to the Committee on Printing; and upon that motion I demanded the previous question.

Mr. STRAUB. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw the motion for the previous question for a single moment, to enable me to ask him a question.

Mr. JONES. I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. STRAUB. I want to know, if the gentleman pleases, whether this twenty-five thousand extra copies is to be the aggregate number which he proposes to have printed of this mechanical part of the Patent Office report?

The SPEAKER. That is a mere proposition which goes under the rule to the Committee on Printing. Every motion to print an extra number of any document must, by an express rule of the House, go to the Committee on Printing. When that committee report upon the motion, it will then be competent for the House to determine the number it will order.

Mr. MIDDLESWARTH. I desire to suggest that that portion of the communication which refers to patents shall be referred to the Committee on Patents; that the motion to print be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. That is precisely the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MIDDLESWARTH. And I wish to make a further suggestion, that so much of the communication as refers to seeds, &c., shall be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been demanded, the gentleman's motion is not in order.

Upon seconding the demand for the previous question 67 rose in the affirmative.

Mr. ORR. I demand tellers upon seconding the demand.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The question was then put on seconding the call for the previous question; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes not counted.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BENSON. I would inquire of the Chair whether, if the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee prevail, the extra numbers of the document will be limited to twenty-five thousand?

The SPEAKER. The proposition to print an extra number of copies goes under a rule of the House, without a vote, to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BENSON. It does not limit the number of extra copies to twenty-five thousand?

The SPEAKER. It does not fix the number at all. The proposition to print an extra number of copies is simply referred under the rule to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. JONES. That committee will report the printing of one hundred thousand extra copies, and you can limit it to a million if you please. [Laughter.]

The question was then taken; and Mr. Jones's motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to, and to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays on that latter motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered. The question was then taken, and the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table was adopted.

RESOLUTIONS OF GEORGIA.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present the preamble and resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Georgia, in relation to the Territory of Nebraska.

No objection being made, the resolutions were received, and read, as follows:

Resolution in relation to the Territory of Nebraska.

The State of Georgia in solemn convention having firmly fixed herself upon the principles of the compromise measures of 1850, relating to the subject of slavery in the Territories of the United States, as a final settlement of the agitation of that question, its withdrawal from the Halls of Congress, and the political arena, and its reference to the people of the Territories interested therein; and distinctly recognizing in those compromise measures the doctrine, that it is not competent for Congress to impose any restrictions to the existence of slavery among them upon the citizens moving into and settling upon the Territories of the Union, acquired or to be hereafter acquired; but that the question whether slavery shall or shall not form a part of their domestic institutions is for them alone to determine for themselves; and her present Executive having reiterated and affirmed the same fixed policy in his inaugural address—

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Georgia in General Assembly met, That the Legislature of Georgia, as the representatives of the people, speaking their will and expressing their feelings, have had their confidence strengthened in the settled determination of the great body of the northern people to carry out in good faith those principles, in the practical application of them to the bills reported by Mr. Douglas, from the Committee on Territories, in the United States Senate, at the present session, proposing the organization of a territorial government for the Territory of Nebraska.

And be it further resolved, That our Senators in Congress be, and they are hereby, instructed, and our Representatives requested, to vote for and support those principles, and to use all proper means in their power for carrying them out, either as applied to the government of the Territory of Nebraska, or in any other bill for territorial government which may come before them.

Resolved further, That his Excellency the Governor be requested to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

On motion by Mr. CHASTAIN, it was Ordered, That said resolutions lie upon the table and be printed.

RESOLUTIONS OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, presented the joint resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois, relative to the establishment of industrial universities for the encouragement of practical and general education among the people, in the several States of the Union, to cooperate with each other, and with the Smithsonian Institution, at Washington.

On motion by Mr. WASHBURN, it was Ordered, That the resolutions lie upon the table, and be printed.

RESOLUTIONS OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present resolutions from the Legislature of Mississippi.

The resolutions were then read by the Clerk. They declare that efforts are being made in Congress to prohibit the introduction of slaves into the Territory of Nebraska, in a manner not in accordance with the spirit of the Federal Constitution; therefore, be it resolved, that the bill now pending before Congress, organizing a territorial government in Nebraska and Kansas, is in accordance with the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and in the opinion of this Legislature just and proper, and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be instructed to support this bill by all honorable means.

On motion by Mr. BARKSDALE, it was Ordered, That the resolutions lie upon the table and be printed.

BIDS FOR NAVAL SUPPLIES.

Mr. BOCK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to make a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and in case there is any objection, I shall move to suspend the rules, in order that I may make such a report.

The following joint resolution was then read the first and second time by its title.

Joint resolution relative to bids for provisions, clothing, and small stores for the use of the Navy.

Mr. BOCK. I ask to have the joint resolution put upon its passage; and I will state in five minutes my reason for its adoption.

The resolution was then read through by the Clerk.

[A message in writing was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of SIDNEY WEBSTER, his Private Secretary.]

Mr. BOCK. I have no idea of detaining the House, unnecessarily, with any suggestions which I have to make in relation to this question. If there were no objection to the resolution upon the part of any one, I would not say a single word, but let the vote be taken at once. I appeal to the House to bear me out in the assertion, that I have trespassed upon the time of the House as little as any member present.

I wish now to make a statement, which will occupy but a few minutes, to show the reasons why I come forward to-day and ask the peculiar privilege of being permitted to bring forward this resolution, and also to have it put upon its passage.

Mr. Speaker, this was a resolution that was sent down three or four weeks ago from the Department. I received with it letters both from the Secretary of the Navy and from the Chief of the Bureau of Clothing and Provisions, representing it to be of immense consequence to the success of that branch of the public business that this resolution should be passed. It was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and, some three or four weeks ago—immediately after its receipt—it was considered in that committee, and, I believe, there was not a dissenting voice either to the propriety of passing it or to the necessity that existed for its immediate passage. Since that time I have not had an opportunity to report it. I do not know, from the position in which the Committee on Public Lands stands now, when, in the ordinary course of affairs, I should have an opportunity to report. And so, sir, it seemed to me to be best to bring it forward at this time, as it is of great importance that it should be passed at once, and for this reason.

The time has arrived when the annual advertisements of this Department for bids of this sort are to be published. I believe these advertisements are usually made on the 15th day of the present month. The Department has waited up to this time in the expectation that this resolution would be considered and adopted, and has agreed to wait for a week or two longer, but beyond that time the urgency of the service will prevent it from further procrastination.

Mr. Speaker, if this resolution is to be adopted at all, it should be adopted at once. It proposes to take the contracts for these supplies out of the hands of speculators, and to confine them to real bona fide manufacturers of, or dealers in, the articles. But, I do not intend this morning to enter at length into the discussion of the question of the contract system for supplies of the Navy Department. Permit me to state this much, however, that in many regards it has proved to be an entire failure. Let me explain. Proposals are made, under the present system, for the supply of particular articles of provisions. Gentlemen come in and make their bids. These bids they make as a matter of pure speculation. If the price of the article rises in the market they throw up their bids, and the Government finds it in vain to attempt to get redress from them. For instance, a contractor comes and makes a bid for the supply of flour; the bid, which is made as a matter of pure speculation, is accepted, and the contract entered into. Afterwards the article of flour rises in the market, and he immediately throws up his contract; or, if he complies with his contract in form, he does so by furnishing an inferior article.

What does the Government then do? Does it go into the courts and sue the contractor for his breach of contract? Why, if the Government were to go into court and sue, it would have the expense, trouble, and annoyance of the suit, and that is about all it would get. But, if the article falls in the market, so that the price at which the contractor proposes to furnish it is double its value, the Government has no power to annul the contract. The Government, under such circumstances, cannot go into the market and buy articles at the low prices at which they may be sold, but is bound in good faith to keep its contract with the contractor.

I say, therefore, that in many cases, especially where these contracts are taken by pure speculators—a thing which is very usual—and not by real dealers, the Government, under the present system, stands a chance to lose, but has no chance whatever to gain. Now, that evil is increased very greatly by the fact that these contracts are often given into the hands of speculators. Real dealers—men who live by their trade—must sustain their reputation. They feel that their future success depends, in some respect, upon their performing faithfully what they undertake to do.

It is to remedy or to obviate this evil that this resolution provides that bids shall not be taken—but by the option of the Department—from those who are not known to be regular manufacturers of, or dealers in, the articles which they propose to supply; and also that if two or three bids are made by the same firm, they shall be all rejected, at the option of the Department, because that fact would show that the bid is a mere matter of speculation. It also provides that one partner shall not be taken as security for another partner.

Mr. Speaker, on a single other particular branch of the subject I ask to say a word. The latter part of the resolution proposes to permit the Department to go into the market and buy particular brands of flour, when such brands are known to be essential to particular services. It is stated, in the communication of the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Provisions, that particular brands of flour alone can bear to be transported around Cape Horn, and to be used on the Pacific ocean.

There are other brands of flour which, though they may look well here, turn out very inferior if brought around Cape Horn, and are so much waste and loss to the Government. The only way to avoid that condition of things is to give to the Department the power to go into the market and buy these particular brands which are known to keep in a good state of preservation.

That cannot be done by the contract system. A man can come into competition, take the contract at a lower bid, but furnish a different quality of flour, which, if it looks well here, must be received under the contract, and if any loss accrues by that course, it is thrown upon the Government. I believe I have fully explained the object and effect of this resolution.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. In relation to the latter portion of the remarks of the gentleman who introduced the resolution, [Mr. Bock], I do not suppose that I have sufficient information to speak intelligently or with certainty on the subject to which they refer.

But in relation to the first branch—that which proposes to put it into the power of the Secretary of the Navy to enter into contract with others than the lowest bidders for the supply of the flour and other articles, and which confines the contract to be entered into with the dealers in the particular article—I apprehend that such a course will be the means of creating combinations and monopolies in particular neighborhoods in relation to the matter of making bids.

We have had no little experience in the State of New York in regard to the operation of the contract system; and it is true, perhaps, as a general thing, whether the contract be entered into with a regular dealer, a mechanic, or any other person, that if the contract turns out to be an unprofitable or a bad one it is very often abandoned.

But I know of no reason why you should expect that a miller, with whom such a contract should be made, would, if the price of flour should rise, and thereby his contract become unprofitable, comply with his contract and furnish the flour, any more than would a responsible merchant or mechanic, who should enter into such a contract, and should find it a bad one. I can see no reason why he should suppose there would be any difference. It seems to me that it is opening the door to any one who has authority or competency to enter into a contract, to do so, rather with the view of benefiting the contractor than the United States.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. As I understand the honorable chairman of the committee, [Mr. Bo-cock,] who introduced the resolution, to state that these proposed changes are the result of the large and extended experience of the Department.—

Mr. BOGCOCK. If the gentleman will permit me to say a word, I will remark, that the proposed changes are the result, not only of the large experience of the Department, but the course has been sanctioned already, in regard to two or three other articles. It was found necessary to relax the severity of the contract system, in reference to butter and cheese, and a few other articles, and it is only desired now to extend that policy to flour, and some other things.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I am perfectly satisfied, from the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, that we ought to yield something to the experience of those who have the special charge of these matters. And I, for one, am willing to lend my aid to the improvement of the naval service, and yield to the suggestions of the Government in that respect. I trust that such, also, will be the sense of this House. Under the circumstances, I am in favor of the resolution; and, before I take my seat, I beg leave to call the previous question.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask my colleague to withdraw that call for a moment.

Mr. SMITH. I will do so, in favor of my colleague.

Mr. BAYLY. Mr. Speaker, I entirely concur with my colleague from the Appomattox district, [Mr. Bogcock,] that there are a number of articles which the Department ought to be allowed to purchase in open market. This is a subject which we have heretofore investigated elaborately in this House. In the article of tobacco, for instance, in that of butter and of cheese, and some others, it was demonstrated at the time—for I had something to do with the investigation myself—that purchasing by contract was the most expensive possible mode we could adopt. Under it, articles that would pass inspection, would be carried into southern latitudes, where they would quickly spoil, become unfit for use, be condemned, and be thrown overboard.

I recollect the statement has repeatedly been made, from the highest authority, that in respect to such articles as would not keep in the different changes of latitudes real economy required that they should be purchased in open market, rather than by contract. Upon the articles of tobacco, butter, cheese, and many other articles, when the Government abandoned the system of purchasing in open market, and adopted that of purchasing by contract, they lost at least fifty per cent. upon the cost of these articles. I believe it was more than that, but I am certainly within bounds when I say that the Government lost more than fifty per cent., growing out of the inferiority of the article furnished by the lowest bidder. They ought to be purchased in open market, of responsible persons.

It does occur to me that in the matter of furnishing our Navy, where the health of the officers and men is concerned, to say nothing of economy, that system ought to be adopted which would insure the best articles of supply. The system of letting the contract out to the lowest bidder does not produce the best article. I repeat, that the stores of the Navy have been frequently found in such a condition, that large quantities of butter, flour, cheese, and other articles have had to be thrown overboard. They have been found to be so affected by the change of climate as to be unfit for use. That has been the experience of the Government; and so far from saving anything from having these articles furnished by the lowest bidder, the expense has been greatly increased, and the discomfort of those employed in our Navy has also been greatly increased. I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make a single inquiry of the gentleman who reported this resolution. I do not desire to make a speech about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make his inquiry by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. JONES. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to withdraw the demand for the previous question, and give me the right to make the inquiry.

Mr. BAYLY. I only renewed the demand for the previous question to accommodate my colleague, who reported the bill. Of course I withdraw the demand, with his consent.

Mr. JONES. I think this joint resolution is right, so far as it goes. But, in my opinion, the Department should have the authority to go into open market, and purchase any articles of supply which it may deem necessary.

We know that when the Department advertises for bids for supplying provisions, persons who never owned a barrel of flour, a pound of pork, or a dollar's worth of any of the articles needed by the Government, will put in bids, and then rely on buying them after they shall have the contracts awarded them. If you will permit the Department to send its agents into the open market, they will find all the articles in the hands of the regular dealers. They can buy them on better terms, in my opinion, and get better articles by going to those who have them on hand, whose interest it is to sell them, and who are consequently anxious to make a fair and honest sale. A fairer sale can be thus had than by advertising.

I merely wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who reported this resolution, and who has it in charge, whether it would not be better to go further, and give the Secretary of the Treasury the right under law to advertise if he thought proper, or to go into the open market and purchase all the supplies that may be needed for his Department? In my opinion it would; but, perhaps, I am not sufficiently informed on the subject.

Mr. BOGCOCK. In answer to the question of my friend from Tennessee, I wish to say to him and the House, that in all the views he has presented on this occasion, I myself entirely concur. I believe that it would be a great deal better for the Department, in relation to the matter of provisions at least, to go into the open market and buy the sound article at the market price for the reasons which I gave at first. But I knew, Mr. Speaker, that if such a resolution were introduced here, it would open up a long discussion, perhaps, on the merits of the contract system. The urgency of the case was such that I did not think proper to introduce anything at this time which would lead to that lengthy debate. I preferred taking what I thought I could get. I preferred coming here and asking what was necessary to the exigency of the case, and to leave to the future to take care of the balance. This is what we want at present. I ask it of the House as the best thing that we can get without protracted discussion. I hope it may be granted. Believing the matter to be fully explained, I call for the previous question.

At the request of several members, the joint resolution was again read.

The call for the previous question was then seconded; there being, on a division—ayes 76, noes not counted.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question now being on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time,

Mr. WALSH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, was subsequently read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOGCOCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put, and the motion was disagreed to.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move to set apart the first week in May for the consideration of territorial business.

Mr. WHEELER. What kind of territorial business?

Mr. RICHARDSON. The local business of the organized Territories.

Mr. CUTTING. Does the gentleman include the Nebraska bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No, sir; only the business of organized Territories.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose the gentleman means the week commencing with the first Monday in May?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes, sir.

A MEMBER. Why not fix upon an earlier day?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Because we want time to report bills.

The question was then taken; and the motion was agreed to.

CHARGES AGAINST SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. BARRY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Whereas, it has been declared by a member of this body, upon the floor of the House, that "a usurpation of power and a perversion of the very principles of civil liberty itself" "have been committed by a Democratic Secretary of War," meaning the present Secretary of War, Colonel Jefferson Davis; and whereas, the same member has used in debate the following language:

"I charge, and it cannot be denied, that the War Department has gradually and insidiously engrossed and monopolized as many of the civil offices of the Government as it could, and by this means has been enabled to give snug and comfortable positions to its favorites until the evil has become widespread and dangerous."

And whereas, it is due to the officer against whom charges of such gravity have been made, as well as to the correct administration of public affairs, and the preservation of the legal distinction between the civil and military branches of the public service, that those charges should be at once and thoroughly investigated: Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of seven be appointed to inquire into the truth of those charges in their widest scope, and whether the Secretary of the War Department, in relation to the extension of the Capitol and other civil works; and all the facts in their judgment bearing on the origin, nature, and purpose of the charges made against the Secretary of War, and to report the same to this House; and that the committee have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. BARRY. The resolution simply proposes to raise a committee of inquiry. The charges alluded to in this resolution are simply quotations taken from a speech made in this House, and the object I have in its introduction at this time is to have a committee of investigation appointed to inquire whether the charges which have been made here and elsewhere are true.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire, whether there are objections to the introduction of this resolution?

Mr. ENGLISH. I object.

Mr. BARRY. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to introduce this resolution. I will state that it simply asks that a committee be appointed for the purpose of investigating the charges made against a public officer, which, if true, will render him liable to the censure of this House and the country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Barry] if there has not been already a select committee appointed to inquire into the prominent facts that have been charged upon this officer?

Mr. BARRY. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, I take it for granted that there is no such committee, because these charges are made by the gentleman who is the chairman of the Select Committee to which he alludes; and, of course, he would not be announcing the action of the committee in anticipation of the report which they are required to make.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi that he had better wait until the report of the committee is made.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I desire to make a single remark in connection with this matter, and it is this: Before the House adopts this resolution it would be well to inquire whether any such charges as are indicated by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. Barry,] who has offered this resolution, were made by me. I intended, in my remarks referred to, to make no such charges against the present Secretary of War. I did say, however, that the War Department had gradually and insidiously engrossed and monopolized certain civil positions all over the country. The system did not begin under the present Administration, but originated twenty years ago, and has increased until the evil is wide spread and dangerous. I did not mean to charge that it originated under the present Secretary of War, although it is continued by his Department, when it should be stopped.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not see any necessity for the passage of these resolutions. Shortly after Congress met a resolution of inquiry in regard to this matter was introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Stanton,] and referred to one of the standing committees of this House. Subsequently to that, a select committee upon the same subject was raised, and the matter is now being investigated by the committee.

Mr. BARRY. I should like to make a brief explanation—

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARRY] be allowed the privilege of making an explanation?

Mr. EDGERTON. I object.

Mr. BARRY. I move to suspend the rules of the House, so that I may be permitted to introduce the resolution which has already been read.

Mr. HIESTER. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion would not be in order until the rules of the House are suspended.

Mr. BARRY. I wish to state here that the Secretary of War desires that the charges which have been preferred against him should be investigated.

The question was then taken upon Mr. BARRY's motion, that the rules of the House be suspended; and it was decided in the negative.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. EWING. I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the House—and I hope there will be no objection to it—to make a special order in reference to a measure of practical importance. I wish to have the report presented by the special committee on the Pacific railroad made the special order for some day, even if it be a distant day. I do not care so much about the time.

A MEMBER. Name the day.

Mr. EWING. I propose to make it the special order for the second Wednesday in May.

A MEMBER. Better make it the second Tuesday.

Mr. EWING. Very well; let it be made the special order for the second Tuesday in May.

Mr. HAVEN. I do not know whether it is of any use for me to undertake to resist these motions for special orders any further. I have already, this morning, made objection to one of these motions; but as I am afraid lest this making of an additional special order may too much constrain the House I oppose it also; I insist that it is better for us not to tie ourselves up, and repress ourselves under such rules, lest when the time of these special orders arrives it may not be opportune or appropriate for us to consider them.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, is this debate in order?

Mr. EWING. I would simply suggest that we have so many things before us for our action that we cannot reach those which are of chief importance without making special orders for them. If, instead of taking matters of business in the accidental order of time, we select those of chief practical importance, and specify a certain time for them we will do just as well. I think the House is right in making these special orders; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] is wrong in opposing them. This Pacific railroad affair is a matter of great practical importance, and I hope that my motion will be acceded to.

Mr. LETCHER. I have no objection to have this special order made, provided the day is far enough distant.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I object to this discussion.

The SPEAKER. The discussion is not in order.

Mr. HAVEN. I ask the Chair whether the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is a motion to make a special order at this time, or whether it is merely a motion to suspend the rules, so as to enable the gentleman to make the motion he desires?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to inquire whether there was any objection to the motion, for if there be it cannot be adopted at this time.

Mr. HAVEN. I object.

Mr. EWING. I thought it was too late to make objection when we had got to the consideration of the question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that objection was substantially made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN.]

Mr. HUNT. The gentleman from New York stated that he had a general objection to making these special orders, but he went on to say—as I understood him—that he did not object in this instance.

The SPEAKER. At all events, the gentleman from Kentucky has lost nothing, as it would require a vote of two thirds to suspend the rules to enable him to make the special order he asks.

Mr. EWING. Then I move to suspend the rules for that purpose; and on that I demand tellers.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 101, nays 76; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ball, Banks, Barksdale, Bennett, Benton, Bissell, Breckinridge, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmands, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Ewing, Farley, Florence, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Harrison, Hastings, Hendricks, Hiestler, Hill, Hunt, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Lane, Latham, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougall, McMullin, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Pennington, John Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Preston, Ready, Richardson, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Shannon, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, Andrew Stuart, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—101.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Thomas H. Bayly, Barry, Belcher, Benson, Carpenter, Caskie, Chastain, Colquitt, Craige, Crocker, Dent, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmundson, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Gondo, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Haven, Hibbard, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lecher, Lilly, McNair, Matteson, Maurice, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Packer, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, Sabin, Seward, Shaw, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, John F. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Daniel B. Wright—76.

So the rules were not suspended.

FRAUDS ON THE TREASURY.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, now charged with the duty of devising measures to recover the money supposed to have been fraudulently drawn from the Treasury upon the claims of Gardiner and Mears, be further instructed to report what measures are necessary, if any, to recover money which has been drawn from the Treasury of the United States for services as Ministers Plenipotentiary, Chargé d'Affaires, of Secretaries of Legation at foreign courts, or other officers of the General Government, by persons who have not entered upon or discharged the duties of the offices to which they were appointed; and also to report such additional measures as may be necessary to prevent in future such frauds upon the Treasury, with power to send for persons and papers.

No objection being made, the resolution was received.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before the question is taken upon the adoption of the resolution, I desire to make one remark, and will consume but a moment or two of the time of the House.

I understand, from a report which has been laid on our desks, that this practice has prevailed to some extent, namely, that persons who have received appointments to lucrative offices under the Government, such as ministers, secretaries, judges, &c., have drawn money from the Treasury for their services, outfits, &c., and have never, in any way, proceeded to discharge any of the duties of their offices. Such an act I look upon as an outrageous fraud, and if the practice prevails, it is one that calls for some prompt action upon the part of Congress.

It is true I have not heard that any of these gentlemen have taken strychnine yet, as in a recent case, and I prefer that this investigation should be had while they are still in the land of the living, so that they may make their defense, if they have any. This is all I have to say upon the subject, and I move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his demand for the previous question, in order to allow me to offer an amendment. I do not wish to discuss the matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I should like to know what the gentleman's amendment is before I withdraw the demand.

Mr. BAYLY. I will inform the gentleman, if I am allowed to do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind gentlemen that this discussion is out of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, sir, while retaining the floor, I withdraw the demand in order to hear the suggestion of the honorable gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BAYLY. My suggestion is in reference to the proper course to be pursued in this matter. I think the proper course would be to call upon the Department to know whether any such thing as stated in the resolution has been done. That is all.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would say to the gentleman from Virginia, in reply, that the information has already been called for, and furnished by the Department, and the gentleman will find it in the document room. I mention no names in connection with this matter.

Mr. BAYLY. If the information has been called for, I have nothing further to say, nor any amendment to offer.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to say, in answer to a suggestion made near me, that names should be given, that I mention no names, and single out no individual case. I assert simply that we have the information from the Department, and that I think the matter calls for some action on the part of this House through the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio the propriety of raising a new committee to take this matter into consideration. If that is done, of course the gentleman will be at the head of it. If such practices as are referred to in the resolution have prevailed, they ought to be exposed, and persons who have committed them ought to be punished; and, in order that there may be no covering up such practices, if there is any such thing, I desire that a new committee may be raised, and the gentleman from Ohio himself be placed at the head of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am obliged to the honorable gentleman from Illinois for the suggestion. It is enough, however, for me to say, in reply, that I have no sort of ambition to be at the head of any committee myself. I would much prefer that the friends of the Administration should have charge of the matter themselves, as it involves, to some extent, the integrity of the Administration. It is a matter, I suppose, which affects them quite as much as it does those of us who occupy seats upon this side of the House. I have, however, other reasons, why I do not wish to be connected with an investigation of this matter. I have merely offered the resolution because it appears, as I before said, from information which we have before us, that such an investigation is required. I have no doubt the Committee on the Judiciary are fully competent to do justice to the subject.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I have a single suggestion to make to the gentleman from Ohio. This resolution seems to refer exclusively to foreign Ministers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, no; it applies to other officers of the Government as well as foreign Ministers. I understand there are some of the judges who should be looked after as well as the foreign Ministers.

Mr. STANTON. The suggestion I was about to make was that if the resolution referred to foreign Ministers altogether, it would be proper that the matter should be intrusted to the care of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I prefer that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary. I think it quite likely that, upon examination, it will be found that some additional legislation will be found necessary to prevent the recurrence of these things in future. It may be that it will be found that there is no power to punish persons who have been guilty of receiving their salaries in advance, without ever once moving towards a discharge of the duties of their offices, and who do not "disgorge," even after they resign. When a foreign Minister receives his $9,000 outfit, or his salary in advance, or when a judge receives his salary in advance, without ever entering upon the duties of his office, and discharges none of the duties, I regard it as no better than an absolute robbery of the Treasury. It is a fraud not second in its enormity to the Gardiner fraud, and ought to be investigated, and the perpetrators punished.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to suggest to him, that by the laws of the United States, neither the judges, nor any other of the officers of a Territory can draw any part of their salaries until they have gone there, and have entered upon the discharge of their duties? I think, therefore, that the gentleman's remark will not apply to the judges.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is a matter I have not examined. Of course I do not mention any particular instance. I merely speak of the facts as they are presented in this public document. I have also heard rumors in reference to other cases, and it is for this reason that I desire that the Committee on the Judiciary should have full power and ample scope, as they will have under this resolution, to report any measures which they may deem necessary to protect the public Treasury from frauds of this description in either branch of the public service.

Mr. PRESTON. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to allow me to make a statement in reference to this matter.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PRESTON. I conceive that it is very proper that we should pass this resolution. It is evident, from information already before the House, contained in executive document, No. 67, in a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitted in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 13th of March, containing a list of the sums paid to the various diplomatic agents, that, among other sums, $9,000 was paid on the first day of July, to Samuel Medary, as Minister to Chili, who, I am informed, has never gone to that court. I mention this circumstance merely to attract the attention of the House. I will remark that, from the information before it, I have no hesitation in saying, that in my opinion it is proper that the committee should not only inquire into this case but into any other cases that may be presented. I do not wish to prejudge the case to which I have alluded; I only say, that if these circumstances do exist, it is a matter of sufficient importance to demand investigation upon the part of the House, and that the resolution should pass.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not aim this investigation at Mr. Medary, of my own State. There are other instances and other cases. I do not know but that gentleman and his friends may be able, I trust that they will succeed, in showing that there was no impropriety on his part.

Mr. CUTTING. With the gentleman's permission, I will make an inquiry of him. Before the House sends down to the Judiciary Committee a sort of probate commission to inquire into the things appertaining to abuse of office, it seems to me that there ought to be something of a case made to show that it is appropriate to the duties of that standing committee. Now, as I understand the gentleman from Ohio, he says that he has heard rumors of payments made and received before services were rendered. Well, certainly, on such a mere vague intimation of that kind, this House ought not to treat it with that character of respect as to raise a committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I did not yield the floor for the gentleman to make an argument. I will say, in reply to his suggestion, that I do not base this resolution to inquire on a mere vague and idle rumor; and if the gentleman would post himself up a little he would find official and authentic information, which was laid upon his desk some weeks ago, on which I predicate this demand for investigation.

Mr. CUTTING. Then that is the only subject which ought to be referred, and that not to the Committee on the Judiciary, but the Committee on Grievances. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not propose to direct an investigation into frauds on the Treasury in such a way as to apply solely to that class of officers who are named in this Executive report. If it shall be made to appear before the Committee on the Judiciary that others have been peculating and acting fraudulently, and they find that legislation is necessary, I desire that they may have authority to report such a bill as will reach all these cases, and bring all who are guilty to summary justice.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to ask my colleague how far back he purposes his inquiry shall go?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Just as far back as the Committee on the Judiciary wish to make it go; and if my colleague supposes that I stand here for the purpose of throwing any obstacle in the way of investigation that will affect my party or its friends he is mistaken in the man. The gentleman and his friends may seek to throw obstacles and raise objections here for the purpose of stifling this investigation. If there were any frauds during the late Administration let that committee expose them, and the more there are the more is the importance of having legislation. That is what I seek—what, as a member of this body, representing an honest constituency of all parties, I demand.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to do justice to my colleague. I did not rise for any purpose of putting obstructions in the way of inquiry; on the contrary, I knew that my colleague would feel very anxious to reach a celebrated case which occurred during the late Administration, and had been the town-talk here. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. All cases. I stand here to shield no man guilty of fraud. I do not come here for any such purpose; but, as far as I am able, by my voice and vote, to expose them all. I am ready and willing to act. I hope my colleague will prove that he is with me. Make the application general. That is the reason why I have couched the resolution in general terms, giving the committee general power to bring in such measures as they may deem necessary to protect the Treasury of the people and the interests of the country.

The question was then taken on the resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. CLINGMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GROW. I suppose that the Indian appropriation bill will be considered in a few days. The Committee on Indian Affairs have agreed upon an amendment to that bill, and they have instructed me, some time since, to make a report explanatory of that amendment. I ask that that report be laid upon the table and printed, in order that the House may be informed of the facts when the amendment comes before them for action.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, and asks that it may be laid upon the table and printed. Is there any objection?

Mr. GROW. No, sir; that is not my motion. I merely wish to submit a report stating the facts upon which the amendment which we propose to offer when the Indian appropriation bill comes before us for consideration rests. I simply ask that the report of those facts may be laid upon the table and printed, for the use of the members.

The SPEAKER. Is the proposition objected to?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire if the amendment to the Indian appropriation bill spoken of by the gentleman makes an appropriation?

Mr. GROW. It proposes an appropriation in pursuance of treaties with the Indians.

Mr. JONES. What will be the probable amount of it?

Mr. GROW. Ninety-two thousand dollars.

Mr. JONES. Well, I wish the gentleman, in making his report, would report the estimates on which the proposed amendment is based, and let them be printed, and laid before the House. For one, I do not approve of this plan of an Administration, or any of its officers, sending estimates for appropriations to a committee, and not to the House.

Mr. GROW. I have been so unfortunate as not to make myself understood, and I will therefore state, that this very claim was referred by the House to the Committee on Indian Affairs to be examined, on the petition of the eastern Cherokees. That committee have examined the claim, and decided that it appropriately belongs to the Indian appropriation bill; and they have agreed, that when that bill comes before the House they will offer it as an amendment. This report is made in obedience to the instructions of the committee; and all I now ask is, that it may be laid upon the table and printed before the bill comes up, so that when our amendment is offered gentlemen may be able to act understandingly upon it.

It comes from the eastern Cherokees, as a claim under treaty stipulations. It was presented to this House, and by them referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. They have examined it, and I have stated what they propose as their action. Let this report be printed, and gentlemen will then be in possession of all the facts in relation to the matter; and they can either approve or reject the amendment, according to their judgment upon it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the Indian Department have been applied to upon this subject, and if they have made a communication? I desire that all communications from the Indian Department, in relation to this matter, should accompany the report.

Mr. GROW. It is a report made by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which, if gentlemen will allow to be printed, they will thereby have all the facts, before the question of appropriations for this purpose comes up, and they can then vote understandingly upon the merits of the case.

Mr. HOUSTON. My object is to get all the communications in reference to this matter printed. If there have been any received from the Department I desire to have them all printed.

Mr. GROW. All the information necessary for an understanding of the case accompanies the report.

The SPEAKER. No objection being made, the communication will be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

DUTIES OF COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

Mr. DENT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill to be entitled, "An act to regulate and define the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions in certain cases."

The bill was then read the first and second time by its title.

Mr. DENT. I ask the indulgence of the House for one or two minutes, for the purpose of stating the merits of the bill which I have introduced. I ask, first, that the bill may be read, as it will, in a great degree, explain itself.

The bill having been read through by the Clerk—

Mr. D. resumed: I desire to make but a simple statement of facts in reference to this bill. The Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior have good reason to believe that the public service suffers for the want of such a bill as I have introduced. It is well known that there are numbers of frauds annually committed upon Government by people who have managed to be placed upon the pension list—those who are disabled at the time they were so placed, but, after their disabilities have been removed, continue to draw pension money from the Government.

The provisions of this bill are such as to enable the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions, through their agents in the different States of the Union, to discover and ferret out these frauds; and when discovered the bill authorizes them to suspend payment. The bill has been read, and it explains itself. I would not have pressed it upon the House this morning but that the public service demands it.

The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions have recently addressed a letter to a distinguished gentleman on this floor, which has been handed to me, and which proves the necessity that exists for such a bill as that proposed. That bill has been prepared for three weeks; but, up to this time, I have had no opportunity to report it. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House that the bill be put upon its immediate passage.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to allow an extract from the report of the Secretary of the Interior to be read. I have sent it up to the Clerk's desk for that purpose.

Mr. DENT. Certainly; with pleasure.

The Clerk then read the following extract from the report of the Secretary of the Interior:

"Numerous frauds have been committed under the pension laws. In perpetrating them perjury and forgery have been frequently resorted to. Several prosecutions have been successfully instituted—the criminals have been convicted, and are now expiating their offenses. Some, whose guilt was palpable, have escaped, in consequence of the act of Congress limiting prosecutions of this character to two years from the commission of the offense. These offenses are committed in secret. Every expedient is adopted to avoid detection; and it is seldom that, with the greatest vigilance, they are discovered within the time limited by law for their prosecution. A change is therefore earnestly recommended; and if any limit is fixed, of which the propriety is doubted, it should be much extended.

"From recent examinations," it has been discovered that invalid pensions have been obtained by persons who do not come within the provisions of the laws; and many, since the issue of the pension certificates, have been found without any disability whatever. To prevent this in future, and to detect such impositions, the Commissioner of Pensions recommends the enactment of a law similar to that of 1819 requiring an immediate examination of the invalid pensioners, and a biennial examination thereafter by two approved surgeons. In this I most heartily concur, believing that it would afford an effective remedy against the abuse of the laws, and save to the Government large sums fraudulently obtained from the Treasury."

Mr. BISSELL. This bill, I am decidedly of opinion, ought to be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pension directed me to report this bill three weeks ago.

Mr. BISSELL. I beg pardon of the gentleman from Georgia. I did not so understand him before. I am happy to be corrected. I am satisfied then, of course, on that point, but still, Mr. Speaker, I am not satisfied with this bill as I now understand it. I think that it is a little dangerous to put into the hands of the different pension agents throughout the United States the power to withhold pensions at their pleasure. Neither do I understand what particular opportunity a pension agent has to know as to the disqualifications of the various pensioners in their State any better than almost any other man. Take, for instance, Illinois, my own State. We have but one pension agent there. He resides at Springfield, three hundred miles distance from many of the pensioners. He never sees them. They send to him for their pensions. Now, what means I ask, has he of knowing what the abilities or disabilities of these various pensioners may be?

Now, sir, that the Government has been subjected to the most enormous and wicked frauds, in the way of granting pensions, is very obvious, and nothing is to be more regretted. I think some mode ought to be adopted for the purpose of protecting it from like frauds in the future. But I do not conceive that this proposition will effect that object.

I would prefer that there should be a standing law compelling all pensioners periodically, either annually or biennially, as the case may be, to submit to an examination by a surgeon of the Army, who should report upon their respective cases to the Department, and thus enable it to act understandingly.

But, according to this bill, upon mere rumor from some disinterested or interested, or perhaps some malicious person, if the pension agent has reason to suppose that the pensioner is not entitled to receive it, he withholds the pension, often to the great inconvenience and perhaps loss to the pensioner. I do not think that this bill provides the right mode of remedying the evil. I think that such a bill as we ought to adopt should conform, in its provisions, somewhat to the suggestions which I have thrown out.

Before I take my seat, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I hope and trust that it will be taken up and considered, and that some such substitute be adopted before the close of the session.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. If I understand the object of the pending bill it is to get up a commission to examine all the soldiers of the second war of independence, who have received a pension on the score of disability, to see if some of those old veterans could not get a living without a pension—whether, by some means, those who were disabled have not become able, so that they could, whether by keeping a cake-stand at the corner of our streets, by begging about the doors of the Capitol, or in some other way, get a living without receiving what they are entitled to—a pension from their country. I think there is a way to obviate all this difficulty, and that is to do what we ought to have done long since, and must soon be compelled to do by the force of public opinion, and that is to do away with all this evidence about disability, and to place every man who was in the last war upon the pension roll, whether wounded or not.

The gentleman talks about fraud and perjury, and wishes to provide against them. Now, is not the Government, in its penurious courses towards the soldiers of the second war of their country's independence, offering a bounty for perjury and fraud? Not one man in twenty who is entitled to a pension now gets it, in consequence of the difficulty of procuring the requisite evidence. If the object is to give the soldiers their just deserts, and yet prevent the perjury and fraud complained of, I have a substitute that will accomplish it. My bill requires no evidence as to disability. If he was in the war at all the soldier gets his pension. If he be dead his widow gets it. No additional evidence is required of those who got bounty land; their evidence is already on file. Those who did not get bounty land will, of course, have to prove that they were in the war; or, if widows, that their husbands were. This makes a plain case of the whole matter. This supersedes the necessity of this commission asked for.

My bill is ready to be introduced at any time. Public opinion is ripe for it; but I am afraid this House is not. The next one will be, I am confident; and I hope there will yet be such a change in this House as will save the necessity of an appeal to the people. Meanwhile, I hope Legislatures will continue to instruct, and the people to memorialize, for my plan for doing away with this proposition before the House.

Mr. DENT. I desire to make only a few remarks in support of the bill, and in explanation of its provisions, that the House may be enabled to understand its purport something better than they now do from the remarks which have been already made. There is not a man upon this floor who would go further than I to defend the rights of the soldier, and the widow of the soldier. But, sir, if frauds exist they ought to be detected.

This bill provides, not that upon the suspicion of any person, nor upon the information of any malicious person, but when the Secretary of the Interior has received information sufficient to authorize him to suspect any person as practicing fraud upon the Government, it only authorizes him to suspend the payment of the money until a simple requirement upon the part of the pensioner has been complied with. He must get the certificate of two respectable physicians, who have been qualified before a magistrate, to the fact that his disability is such as to prevent him from labor. They are only required to do this biennially, and where the certificate is to the fact of permanent disability they are not required to do anything further. Such is the humanity of the law, and such it ought to be, that ninety-nine guilty persons may go unpunished rather than that one innocent person should suffer; but, at the same time, if the Secretary of the Interior has good reason for believing that any person is practicing fraud upon the Government, it certainly is not unreasonable that the person so suspected should be called upon to give this information to which I have alluded. That is all we propose to require. I ask for the passage of the bill, and I demand the previous question.

Mr. BOCK. If the demand for the previous question be sustained, what will be its effect? Has the motion to refer been made?

The SPEAKER. The motion was made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL.] to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and if the demand for the previous question be sustained, and the main question ordered to be put, the question will first recur upon the motion to commit.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon the motion to commit, and carried in the affirmative.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

LAND TITLES IN INDIANA.

Mr. MILLER, of Indiana, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

A bill to ascertain and adjust title to certain lands within the State of Indiana.

DETROIT CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. CLARK, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of constructing a custom house in the city of Detroit, Michigan, on the lot owned by the General Government in said city, upon which there is a Government warehouse occupied by Colonel Howard; or of selling said lot and warehouse with a view to the construction of a suitable custom-house for the Detroit district.

WILKES'S EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into the expediency of publishing a new edition of the scientific portions of the reports of the exploring expedition made under the command of Lieutenant Charles Wilkes, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Several MEMBERS made objection.

Mr. DICKINSON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, for the purpose which I have indicated.

The question was put; and, on a division, there were—ayes 61—

Mr. DICKINSON. I demand tellers on the question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and BOCK were appointed.

The question was taken, and the rules were not suspended, the tellers having reported—ayes 58.

AID TO WRECKED SHIPS.

Mr. WALLLEY, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to consider and report whether further legislation be required to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, or other officer of the Government, to indemnify, at his discretion, the owners and masters of vessels for losses and charges which they may have incurred by reason of their rendering aid to vessels in distress, or by rescuing the crews of wrecked vessels, and for which aid no provision of law now exists.

POST OFFICE BLANKS.

Mr. OLDS, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to communicate to this House a statement of the several sums paid for post office blanks for the last four years, designating the quantities and kinds of blanks, and the prices paid, for each district for which required, the time when each contract expires, giving the items.

CODIFICATION OF THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to enable me to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the first bill on the Calendar, being joint resolution (Senate No. 1) "authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the expenses of codifying and revising the revenue laws."

I will state to the House the object of the motion, and my reason for making it. The last Congress directed the Secretary of the Treasury to revise the revenue laws, and at the same time a bill was introduced appropriating $10,000 for that purpose. Mr. Guthrie, the Secretary of the Treasury, employed Judge Barrett, of my State, to do the work. Judge B. came here on last June, and has now nearly completed the work. It will be ready next month. By some means or other the bill making the appropriation was lost, and a joint resolution was introduced in the Senate immediately after the commencement of the present Congress, making the necessary appropriation. That joint resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and stands first in order upon the Calendar. Judge Barrett has been employed on the work for nine months, and not one dollar has yet been paid to him for his labor or the expenses of the work. The joint resolution has been examined by the Committee of Ways and Means, as I have been informed, and I believe there is no objection to it from any quarter.

I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the House to enable me to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of it, in order that it may be put upon its passage now.

There being no objection, the question was put on the motion, and it was agreed to.

So the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution; which was then read by its title, as follows:

A resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the expenses of codifying and revising the revenue laws.

The SPEAKER. The resolution contains an appropriation, and therefore requires a suspension of the rules to be considered in the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. But two thirds of the House have decided that it should be received, and it is now before the House.

The SPEAKER. They may have decided that with a view of sending the resolution to another committee. The Chair has uniformly held that the rules must be suspended in a case of this kind.

The question was then taken upon the suspension of the rules, requiring a joint resolution to be first considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the rules were suspended.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the resolution to be read the third time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JONES.] I understand the gentleman to say that this resolution had been examined by the Committee of Ways and Means. I do not think that it has been before any Committee of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JONES] is mistaken, I think, in the statement that he made. It is very possible that he was misled by myself. We had a conversation this morning, in which I informed him that I had examined the bill myself, but that it had not been before the Committee of Ways and Means. It is an order made by the Senate at the last session, and the labor has been done. The estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury was not placed in the deficiency bill, because the Senate had already passed a joint resolution for the purpose of defraying the expenses of this work, before we could take any action upon the bill. The money is already due, and I do not see that we can avoid its payment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JONES,] who has examined the bill, how many persons have been employed upon this work, and whether there is any limitation as to their compensation? Is the Secretary of the Treasury to be authorized to pay to one man $10,000 for his services? I think that there should be some limitation as to the pay, and that the resolution should also read: To pay the expenses of codifying and publishing the revenue laws of the country.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I will state, for the information of the House, that when this resolution was passed by the last Congress, it was contemplated by the Secretary of the Treasury to employ three gentlemen. Three distinguished gentlemen were appointed and sent for. On their arrival they found that the whole sum limited by Congress for the purpose of codifying the laws was $10,000; and it was ascertained that this sum would not prove an adequate compensation for the amount of labor required to be performed, after deducting the expenses of printing, binding, and all other expenses incidental to the work. Judge Barrett, of my own State, was one of the three gentlemen appointed for this purpose. The other two gentlemen appointed declined to act, and at the solicitation of the Secretary of the Treasury, Judge Barrett consented to undertake the whole labor, including all the expenses of clerk hire, printing, binding, &c., for the compensation of $10,000. The resolution now introduced does not propose to give a dollar more than that sum. That was the limitation made by the last Congress, and it is the limitation made now. The Senate passed this resolution appropriating $10,000 immediately after the commencement of this session. Judge Barrett authorizes me to say now that the work will be completed by the next month, and that not another dollar will be asked for from the Government for the completion of the work. It is not to be provided for as a deficiency, but it is provided for in a special act making an appropriation for a special work.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask the gentleman whether there has been any money heretofore appropriated for this object?

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. Not a dollar.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. How long have these gentlemen been employed upon this work?

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. Over nine months.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Are we to pay this gentleman $10,000 for nine months' work?

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. Certainly not. That sum is to pay the expenses of the whole work, as already stated, including clerk hire, printing, binding, &c.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. What other expenses are there which we shall have to pay in connection with this work?

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I am willing to answer the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] to the full extent of my knowledge. I cannot precisely say what other expenses there are connected with this matter. I can only say that $10,000 were appropriated, or directed to be appropriated, at the last Congress, which, as I understand it, was to cover everything. The bill was passed in the last Congress, but has been lost. When Mr. Barrett was employed by Mr. Guthrie he was assured by him that an appropriation had been made. On his arrival here, nine months ago, he consented to enter upon the duties of the office under that impression.

He undertook the labor and superintendence of the work. The other two gentlemen declined it, because there was not compensation enough left to pay the three. He undertook it in good faith. This contract was made with the Secretary of the Treasury, who was authorized to make it, by a resolution of the Senate, to which I refer gentlemen. This resolution authorized and directed him to employ persons, and to have the work performed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Read the resolution.

Mr. JONES read the resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be required to have prepared and submitted to the Senate at its next session a general revenue law, with the view of superseding all existing laws on the subject, which shall embrace all needful provisions for regulating the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States in American and foreign vessels, the assessing and collecting of the duties connected with the same, including fees of all kinds, tonnage duty and light money, the registering, enrolling, and licensing of vessels, the number, duties, and emoluments of custom-house officers and employees of every kind, the levying and remission of penalties, fines, and forfeitures, the service of the revenue marine in all its details, and providing generally for the due performance of all the duties of any description connected with the revenue service in all its branches and details, including all the requisite official forms to be observed in the transaction of custom-house business.

"Resolved further, That in the preparation of the said revenue code or law it shall be distinctly shown what are the provisions of existing laws which are retained, what, if any, portion of said existing laws are omitted, and what new provisions or additions are made."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I may, in connection with this, say, that I have been informed by Judge Barrett, of my State, that could he possibly have anticipated the amount of labor and expense required he never would have undertaken it. He has worked on it for nine months without having received one dollar of compensation. Both he and the Secretary of the Treasury were under the impression that the money had been already appropriated.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) Mr. Speaker—

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I only want to make one remark more. There were two clerks employed. This $10,000 is to cover all the labor and expenses of the work; and I can safely say that the amount originally contemplated and asked for by the Secretary of the Treasury is not too large. I not only know myself, but I have ascertained from a gentleman who I am convinced would not mislead me, that this sum is hardly sufficient. Judge Barrett only asks for that sum, in compliance with his contract made with Mr. Guthrie.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I propose to amend the resolution by providing that the compensation of the principal employed on the said work shall not exceed $3,500 per annum, and that the compensation of the clerks employed shall not exceed $1,500 per annum.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I propose an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JONES] as yielding the floor to the gentleman from Tennessee, for the purpose of permitting him to submit an amendment?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have also offered an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee was on the floor and offered an amendment, and the Chair does not understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has yielded the floor for any such purpose to either gentleman. The Chair now desires to know whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielded the floor to the gentleman from Tennessee, or the gentleman from Virginia, to propose amendments?

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I cannot yield the floor for such purpose to either gentleman.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to yield me the floor for an instant.

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the gentleman if he will not consent to defer this matter? Let us pass from its consideration to-day, and then take it up to-morrow, when we can have all the information necessary for a thorough examination of the subject.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I would state to the gentleman over the way [Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine,] that here is the report, the substance of which I have already stated.

I would have no hesitation in accepting the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] if I knew all the facts of the case, so that it might not be embarrassed by an amendment of this kind. I have not the slightest doubt, in my own mind, that the amount to be received by Judge Barrett, over and above the expenses of the work, is not equal to the compensation offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. He has entered into a specific contract or agreement, as I understand it, with the Secretary of the Treasury, and has taken upon himself individually the payment of the salaries of all his clerks, the expenses of his office, and every other expense connected with it; and his compensation is to be the balance left, which, according to my information, will be a less sum than that offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Now, to undertake to make a restriction without being sufficiently informed of all the details and facts, might embarrass the matter. I can only say to the House that this $10,000 was appropriated more than one year ago. It was passed by the Senate unanimously, and has been upon the Calendar of the House ever since it was sent in from the Senate, and is the first on the Calendar. I have conferred upon this matter with several of the members of the Committee of Ways and Means—not in their official capacity, but individually—and with other members of this House, and I have not found a single gentleman who understood it who has had a single doubt of its propriety and importance. It is estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury, who has requested this House and the Senate to appropriate the money to pay for the work which they ordered him to have done.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to make a single inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. What did this gentleman get for his services as judge in Pennsylvania?

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. Sixteen hundred dollars a year and mileage.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he had not better submit a motion to refer this bill?

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. Let me say, further, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, that Judge Barrett, of Pennsylvania, assured me that all he could realize out of this contract would not be equal to his salary of $1,600 a year at home.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Strange! I never knew a man in my life to get anything out of the United States that did him any good. [Laughter.]

Mr. PECKHAM. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what evidence there is before the House that the work was or would be completed satisfactorily and thoroughly, and according to the original contract? I do not know of any evidence before the House to that effect; and I am not in favor of paying until the work is done.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. The Secretary of the Treasury has entire charge of the matter by an act of Congress, and he asks for money to pay for the work they have ordered him to have done, and he certainly will not pay unless the work is done, and done properly.

The SPEAKER. I would remind the gentleman that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was upon the floor, and yielded to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN,] who is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that there is no doubt the House is willing to vote the appropriation, if, upon inquiry and examination, it appears that the amount is due to the gentleman. But it is also very clear that we have not sufficient information upon the subject in order to act intelligently. We do not know how much labor he has bestowed, how much time he has employed, how much money he has expended, or how much his clerk hire amounts to.

It seems to me that if the gentleman would only permit this matter to be committed, so as to prevent it from going upon the Speaker's table, it could be taken up to-morrow, or on some subsequent day, and he would then be able to inform the House fully of the facts connected with it. I suggest that he should pursue that course. It would be more satisfactory to the House.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I am not disposed to be tenacious of any particular course the bill may take, nor do I wish to prevent gentlemen from having an opportunity for investigating the whole matter; but I would say to gentlemen now again that the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to have this work done. He has made the contract for the amount. The work is finished, or nearly finished, and the Secretary of the Treasury has himself written letters to gentlemen of this House to that effect, as I am informed. The fact is so, and I presume I am authorized to say so. I again state to the House that the work will be completed next month, and that the sum of $10,000 is the smallest amount which will compensate the labor, including all the expenses; that such is the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, who was directed to have it made, and that he has officially notified the House of these facts. This is sufficient for me to act upon.

Mr. PECKHAM. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to allow me to make a single remark. I am in favor of this proposition; if it be true that a valid contract has been made, I am in favor of carrying it out; but at the same time I desire to have it understood that this gentleman is not to receive pay for performing his contract until it has been executed. I hope, therefore, the resolution will be so amended as to provide that this amount shall be paid after the work shall have been done to the acceptance of the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not know whether the work will be well done or ill done.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I will answer the gentleman; the custom has always been to appropriate money before the contract begins; and the Secretary will not pay in full until it is completed; but now the gentleman proposes not to pay a dollar until the contract has been entirely completed.

Mr. PECKHAM. Not at all; I propose that the money shall be appropriated now, but not paid until the contract has been completed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman says the Secretary of the Treasury has made a contract with this gentleman for performing this service. What is the contract?

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. If gentlemen will allow me, I will read a portion of the letter of Judge Barrett, which may throw some light upon the subject:

"WASHINGTON, March 8, 1854.
 "Hon. J. Glancy Jones:
 "DEAR SIR: When I agreed to enter upon the duty of revising the revenue laws, I was under the impression, as was the Secretary of the Treasury, that $10,000 had been appropriated to pay the expenses. Mr. HAMLIN of the Senate and others, say it did pass, but was omitted in transcribing the bill, or in some other way. Mr. Guthrie was anxious, however, that I should go on with the work authorized, saying that he would recommend and urge an early appropriation at the meeting of Congress to pay for it. At his solicitation I did so. His request for it will be found in his estimate of deficiencies. I have now been engaged in the work for over nine months, without having received a dollar from the public Treasury; and, in the mean time, have paid out considerable sums of money for contingent and other expenses. I have the work now pretty well forward, and will be able to finish it in the month of April. If Congress had made the appropriation early in the session, so as to have enabled me to employ a sufficient force, I would now have been through; but I could not increase my force without the means of paying. You will find the resolution authorizing the work on the Senate Journal for 1852-53, page 112. No further appropriation will be needed or asked if the present bill passes."

Mr. SMITH. Is that all the contract there is?

Mr. JONES. No, sir; this is the letter to which I referred. There is another letter addressed to me by Judge B. from which I may read. I wish it, however, to be understood, when I speak of a contract, I do not allude to any specific written contract for a given sum between the Secretary of the Treasury and Judge Barrett. What I mean by a contract is, that there was an agreement or understanding between them that this amount of money had been appropriated for the work, and that if he would undertake to complete the work in a proper manner, including all expenses, the money would no doubt be paid; the sum not being too large for such an amount of expense and labor.

Mr. McMULLIN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make a single suggestion. I am certainly not disposed to violate any oaths or contracts upon the part of the Government. If they have contracted to pay this money, it should certainly be appropriated. But I would suggest that the whole matter be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. Let them examine into it, and when they report back to the House we shall then be able to act understandingly upon the subject. If the gentleman will allow me, I will make that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. If the House desires it, I have no objection to that disposition of the matter for the present.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move, then, that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks of a contract between the Secretary of the Treasury and Judge Barrett. I wish to ask the gentleman if the Secretary has made an agreement with Judge Barrett by which he is to revise and codify the revenue laws, and for which he is to receive the sum of $10,000, as payment for all expenses, including clerk hire? If this amount does not cover all the expenses I wish to know it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will allow the matter to go to the Committee of Ways and Means, and not take up the time of the House longer with it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to have the question answered, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give me the information.

Mr. HOUSTON. We can get that information in committee, if it goes there.

Mr. JONES. I want it before it goes there.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to have the question referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, so that the proper investigation may be had; and on the motion for reference I now call for the previous question.

Mr. FULLER. With the permission of the gentleman from Virginia, I would suggest that the reference should be rather to the Committee on Commerce, which has had the matter under consideration so far as relates to custom-houses and the codification of the revenue laws.

Mr. McMULLIN. I cannot withdraw the call for the previous question. I prefer that the matter should be referred as proposed to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will withdraw his call for the previous question but for a moment I shall renew it.

Mr. McMULLIN. I withdraw it on that condition.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I wish to reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, who inquired whether such a contract, as has been referred to, was made. I can only repeat in a few words what I stated before, that $10,000 was appropriated for the work. Judge Barrett, with two other gentlemen, came here, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, to undertake it. He told them that that amount of money was appropriated (that being his impression) to pay all expenses, and no more would be given. Two of the gentlemen declined to act, because the compensation above expenses was not more than sufficient to pay for the services of one man; and then Mr. Guthrie made an agreement—it may have been verbal, as I am informed, I speak from information—that if Judge Barrett would undertake the work and perform it properly, in compliance with the provisions of the act, $10,000 would be paid to cover all the expenses, and no more.

As I agreed, I now renew the call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The joint resolution was then referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

RATES OF OCEAN POSTAGE.

Mr. BENSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing the present rates of ocean postage to the uniform charge of two cents for the mere transportation of a single letter from any port in the United States to any port beyond the sea, at which the American mail steamers may regularly touch, with leave to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. McQUEEN. I object.

Mr. BENSON. I move that the rules be suspended, for the purpose which I have indicated.

The question was put; and the rules were not suspended, two thirds not voting in the affirmative.

PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. LETCHER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be directed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing from the printer now engaged in printing the alphabetical list of private claims, ordered by resolution of the House of the 22d day of December, 1851, five thousand additional copies of the same: Provided that the cost thereof shall not exceed the price paid under the contract, deducting therefrom the cost of composition.

Mr. WALSH. I object to that resolution.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to offer the resolution.

The question was put; and, two thirds not voting in favor thereof, the rules were not suspended.

EXPLORATIONS OF THE AMAZON.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the members of the House of Representatives twenty thousand extra copies of the report on the surveys and explorations of the river Amazon, with the maps and plates accompanying, by Lieutenants Herndon and Gibbons.

The SPEAKER. Unless objected to the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does not the resolution go to the Committee on Printing?

The SPEAKER. If introduced at all it does.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, and referred, under the rule, to the Committee on Printing.

RECIPROCITY TREATIES.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a joint resolution; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A joint resolution authorizing the President to give the requisite notice for terminating our reciprocity treaties of commerce and navigation in certain cases.

JEFFERSON'S MANUAL FOR MEMBERS.

Mr. CHASE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas, The 139th rule of this House provides that the rules comprised in Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary practice shall govern this House in all cases to which they are applicable, and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of this House, and the joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives; therefore,

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be authorized and instructed to procure a copy of said Jefferson's Manual for each member of this House.

UNITED STATES JUDGE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the judge of the United States court for the western district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I object.

Mr. RITCHIE. A similar resolution was referred to the Judiciary Committee on a former occasion.

Mr. WRIGHT. It differed in terms from this. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. RITCHIE. I do not object to the resolution; I merely throw out the suggestion to my colleague.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to suspend the rules, for the purpose of enabling me to introduce the resolution.

The question was then put; and, on a division being had, there were—ayes 59, noes not counted. So the rules were not suspended.

CAPTAIN MARCY'S SURVEY.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be published ten thousand extra copies of Captain Marcy's survey and exploration of the Red river and its sources.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the House will receive the resolution and adopt it. The report is a very valuable one.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would be glad to know in this connection something about the publication of books which we have already ordered. I do not exactly understand the importance of ordering books to be published when we cannot get them for a long time after they are ordered. For instance, Herndon's Report, for which the people are continually calling, has not yet been published, and laid before the members of this House. And so it is with the publication of the eulogies pronounced on the death of Vice President King. We cannot get them, and I think that we had better take some steps towards getting those already ordered than directing more books to be published, which may get out of date before we can receive them.

The SPEAKER. The question is only upon a reference of the resolution to the Committee on Printing. If there be no objection that reference will be made.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

LONDON EXHIBITION BOOKS, ETC.

Mr. CHANDLER. About three weeks ago a joint resolution was received in this House from the Senate, authorizing the Library Committee to receive certain books and medals illustrative of the London exhibition in 1851. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to put the resolution upon its passage.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

A joint resolution accepting certain volumes and medals presented by her Britannic Majesty's Government to the United States.

The resolution was then ordered to a third reading; and, having been read the third time, it was passed.

DUTY ON SALT—DRAWBACKS.

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following bill. My object is to have it referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The bill was then read the first and second time by its title, as follows:

A bill to repeal the duty on salt, all allowances to fishing vessels, and drawbacks upon the exportation of pickled fish.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I object.

Mr. DISNEY. I move, then, to suspend the rules, for the purpose of enabling me to introduce the bill.

The question was then put; and there appeared 71 votes in the affirmative.

Mr. DISNEY. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and BRECKINRIDGE were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. That is not two-thirds; and the question is lost.

PENSIONS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be instructed to inquire into the justice and expediency of reporting a bill providing for granting pensions to all persons who have actually served in the field as privates or non-commissioned officers in any of the Indian wars, and in the late war with Great Britain.

Mr. CRIAGE. I object to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. LANE. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce it.

The question was put, and the motion was not agreed to; two thirds not voting in favor thereof.

THE SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, offered the following resolution; which was read for information:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be, and the same is hereby, discharged from the further consideration of joint resolution, (No. 16,) being the "Joint resolution manifesting the sense of Congress towards the officers and seamen of the vessels, and others, engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers, and the officers, and crew of the steamship San Francisco from perishing with the wreck of that vessel," and that the same be now put upon its passage.

Pending the reception of the resolution—

Mr. WARREN moved that the House do adjourn, which motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly, at three o'clock, p. m., adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 20, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of Sarah Larrabee, former widow of Barstow Newell, a soldier in the war of 1812, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred documents in relation to the claim of Captain George E. McClelland's company of Florida volunteers, on account of services during the Seminole war, submitted an adverse report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Nathaniel Frye, praying compensation for performing the duties of paymaster general during the sickness of that officer, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill allowing exchanges of, and granting additional school lands in the States which contain public lands; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

COMPENSATION TO POSTMASTERS.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the necessity and expediency of providing for a further or different compensation to postmasters.

NEW POST ROADS.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of creating post roads from Little Rock, via Perryville, Danville, Parkersburg, Reville, and Charlestown, to Fort Smith.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. GEYER, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for holding an additional term of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Missouri; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the report of the Secretary of State, communicating papers in relation to the conduct of David Cook, master of the English bark Sarah, in saving the passengers and crew of the American ship Caleb Grimsaw, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the petition of Elisha W. B. Moody be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. FORNEY, their Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1854.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 14th instant, a copy of Lieutenant Williamson's report of his surveys to ascertain a practicable route for a railway to the Pacific ocean; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN subsequently rose and said: Mr. President, a few minutes ago a communication from the War Department, transmitting a copy of Lieutenant Williamson's report of his surveys to ascertain a practicable route for a railway to the Pacific, was presented and ordered to be printed. The chairman of the Committee on Printing suggests that it would probably be better that all these reports should be printed together. I move, therefore, to reconsider the vote by which it was ordered to be printed, and that it be referred to the select committee on the subject of a national railroad to the Pacific. It was intended for the examination of that committee.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I have a word further to say in regard to this subject. My remarks in regard to the resolution presented by my colleague, calling for this communication, were so reported in the Union as to be capable of the interpretation that I wished to call for the report, in consequence of a consultation which I had had with the Secretary of War. The fact is, that I had not consulted any one in the world about it; but I wanted to see this report, and I ascertained that the best mode of getting an opportunity of examining it would be to call for it. That was the only motive which I had.

The communication was referred to the select committee.

TERRITORIES OF NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. FESSENDEN having presented, in that order of business, several petitions against the passage of the Nebraska-Kansas territorial bill, and moved to lay them on the table, as the bill was not now before the Senate—

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I should be glad if the honorable Senator who presents these memorials would withdraw his motion, that they lie on the table. I wish to submit a few remarks.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well, sir; I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BADGER. I shall have probably, Mr. President, in my possession, as I understand, tomorrow, a petition from constituents of my own against the passage of the Nebraska bill. I had expected to have it this morning, but I have been disappointed. I wished, upon submitting that petition, to make a few remarks to the Senate, and they are quite as appropriate, so far as I see, upon the petitions of like purport offered by the Senator from Maine; and I will therefore ask the Senate to indulge me in submitting them now.

It is my purpose, Mr. President, to endeavor to correct two mistakes which seem to have been made, respecting the effect and operation of an amendment moved by myself and adopted by the Senate, to the bill to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, coming in, as it did, immediately after the amendment, respecting the Missouri compromise line, adopted on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Territories. It has been supposed, in the first place, that that amendment, in the form of a proviso, produces in law some effect or operation which the words preceding it would not of themselves have produced; and particularly some southern gentlemen have taken up an idea that that amendment which I moved has produced an effect, in some manner or other, unfavorable to the southern interest which they represent, and which they desire to promote and forward.

* Sir, I took occasion, when the subject was under discussion in the Senate, on the night of the 2d of March, to say that, in my judgment, as a professional man, the amendment reported from the committee would have the effect and only the effect, of leaving that Territory without any law, either of allowance or prohibition; that the repeal of the eighth section of the Missouri compromise act would not set up or introduce any law which might have existed previously in that Territory. But, as I was perfectly sincere in entertaining that opinion, and as doubts were expressed by some gentlemen who were members of this body, whether it might not have another and a different effect; and as, besides, I deemed it to be important that perfect frankness should characterize all our legislation, and that no opportunity might be afforded to others, either for good or ill purposes, to misrepresent the action of the Senate upon that subject—to put an end to any possibility of such misinterpretation—I submitted the proviso which was adopted by the Senate.

And now, sir, as I have stated, I wish, in the first place, to show, and, as far as a subject of this kind is capable of it, to demonstrate, that the bill without the proviso had precisely the same legal effect and operation, and none other, as it had with the proviso. The language to which this proviso was appended is this:

"Except the eighth section of the act preparatory to the admission of Missouri into the Union, approved March 6, 1820, which, being inconsistent with the principle of non-intervention by Congress with slavery in the States and Territories, as recognized by the legislation of 1850, (commonly called the compromise measures,) is hereby declared inoperative and void; it being the true intent and meaning of this act not to legislate slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom, but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States."

Now, sir, it was supposed, or suggested, that the repeal of the prohibitory clause in the Missouri act might have the effect of setting up, or putting in force again, the pro-slavery law, if any such existed antecedent to the passage of that act, or at the time when that territory was acquired by us from France. It was so supposed, upon a rule sometimes laid down by the common-law writers, that where a statute is repealed, and the repealing statute is subsequently repealed, the first statute is again set up. I took the liberty at the time of saying, in effect, that the meaning of that was only that, where there was a simple repeal, and a subsequent simple repeal of the repealing statute, by implication, by supposed legislative intent, the first statute was set up; and, therefore, that no repeal of a statute could set up any former law repealed by it, if such repealing act excluded such implication of a legislative intent.

Having looked a little into this matter, I propose to show that what, upon general recollection and a general notion of the principles which govern the matter, I had stated to the Senate is substantially correct. The rule which we common-law lawyers have upon the point—I suppose it to be so with all, I know it is the case with myself—is deduced from Blackstone's Commentaries. Here is what Blackstone says, and all that he says, upon the subject:

"If a statute, that repeals another, is itself repealed afterwards, the first statute is hereby revived, without any formal words for that purpose. So, when the statutes of 25 and 26, Henry 8, declaring the King to be the supreme head of the Church, were repealed by a statute of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, and this latter statute was afterwards repealed by an act of 1 Elizabeth, there needed not any express words of revival in Queen Elizabeth's statute, but those acts of King Henry were impliedly and virtually revived."

First, I wish to notice the terms of Blackstone's proposition, that there is no necessity for any formal words in order to revive the original statute, and that in the case, and the only case, which he cites to illustrate the rule which he lays down, he says there needed not any express words for the revival of the repealed statute, because they were "impliedly and virtually revived." Now, in order to understand the case to which Blackstone refers, and the true nature and extent of the rule deduced from it, we must look at the statutes themselves.

The statute of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, is entitled "An act repealing all statutes, articles, and provisions made against the See Apostolic of Rome, since the twentieth year of King Henry the Eighth; and also for the establishment of all spiritual and ecclesiastical possessions and hereditaments conveyed to laity." The statute begins by reciting many acts by which, in violation of the rights of the Bishop of Rome, both spiritual and temporal, in the kingdom of Great Britain, the sovereign of Great Britain had been declared the temporal head of the Church, and the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and the temporal rights depending upon it, of the Pope had been abolished or transferred; and then, after reciting these, it proceeds:

"Be it enacted by the authority of this present Parliament, That these clauses before rehearsed, and other of the said act concerning the supremacy, and all and every branch, article, words, and sentence in the same, sounding or tending to the derogation of the supremacy of the Pope's Holiness, or the See of Rome, and all pains, penalties, and forfeitures made against them that should by any means set forth and extol the said supremacy, shall be from henceforth utterly void and of none effect."

Then the statute of Elizabeth is entitled "An act restoring to the crown the ancient jurisdiction over the State ecclesiastical and spiritual, and abolishing all foreign power repugnant to the same;" and after reciting the acts which had been passed in the reign of Henry VIII. giving him the rights which had been abolished by the repealing act of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, "for the repressing," as the act expresses it, "of the said usurped foreign power, and the restoring of the rights, jurisdiction, and preëminences appertaining to the imperial crown of this your realm." What? Why it is enacted that this repealing law of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, shall "be repealed, and shall from thenceforth be utterly void and of none effect." The statute sets out that it was the intent to restore to the crown the jurisdiction which had been conferred by the acts of Henry VIII. which acts had been repealed by the statute of 1 and 2 of Philip and Mary; and, therefore, for this purpose of restoration, the act of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, is repealed.

That demonstrates the truth of what I said the other night, that it was nothing but a question of intent. The intent to set up the first law was inferred from the nature and circumstances of the case, and the declared object of the last.

Mr. Justice Blackstone, in the passage which I have read from him; refers to Coke's Fourth Institute, as the authority upon which he predicates the rule and the particular application of it. Coke is there considering whether, after the act of 1 Elizabeth, the high commission court had any jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical; and, if so, whether its original jurisdiction was established in its former plenary extent, or to what modifications it was subjected. In order to determine upon the jurisdiction of the high commission court, to ascertain, that is, whether it had any jurisdiction at all, it was indispensably necessary to ascertain whether, after the passage of 1 Elizabeth, the Queen was restored to her headship of the Church, because the high commission court was but her court, sitting to administer that part of her royal authority which she possessed as head of the Church. If her headship over the Church were not restored by 1 Elizabeth, it followed that the high commission court could have no jurisdiction; for the Queen was the fountain and source from which alone power could be derived to that tribunal. Now, let us consider briefly what Lord Coke lays down; why he held that the first statute was revived by the repealing statutes of 1 Elizabeth. He says:

"First, the title of the act is, 'An act restoring to the crown the ancient jurisdiction,' &c. By this the nature of the act doth appear to be an act of restitution."

And this is also manifest by the preamble of the act, where it is said:

"Whereas, divers good laws were made in the time of the late King Henry the VIII., for the extinguishment of all foreign power, and for the restoring into the crown of this realm the ancient rights and jurisdictions of the same."

"From whence this reason is drawn, that seeing the express letter and meaning is to restore to the crown the ancient ecclesiastical, and no commissioner by force of that ancient ecclesiastical jurisdiction could impose fine and imprisonment, that these commissioners having their force from this act of restitution, cannot punish any party by fine or imprisonment, otherwise than shall be hereafter expressed," &c.

Having thus opened the design of the statute from its title and recitals, he subsequently thus deduces his conclusions:

"And upon this clause being the final intention of this act expressed in the title and preamble, do the subsequent clauses depend; therefore this clause is especially to be considered, and therein these things are to be observed:

"First, that by this Queen Elizabeth was not declared supreme head, &c., but by a former clause in this act, viz: that the statute of 1 and 2 Ph. and Mar. cap. 8 (whereby amongst others, the act of 25 H. 8, cap. 3, and 55 H. 8, cap. 3, were repealed) was by this act made utterly void, and consequently the act of repeal being repealed, the acts of 25 H. 8, cap. 1; and 35 H. 8, cap. 3, were amongst others impliedly revived, by which acts of 25 H. 8; and 35 H. 8, it is declared and enacted, that the King, his heirs, and successors should be taken and accepted the only supreme head on earth of the Church of England."

Now, sir, it is impossible to consider the terms in which Blackstone lays down this rule, and the statutes which furnish the illustration of it, and the grounds laid down by Lord Coke for his interpretation, without seeing that the whole question was as to the intent of the Legislature. Therefore, he says, the act being entitled an act to restore the jurisdiction of the Crown in causes ecclesiastical, the preamble reciting that such is the object of the statute, and then the statute repealing the repealing law of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, the manifest intent of Parliament was to set up the repealed statute. Why? The intent of Parliament was to restore the headship and jurisdiction; but that could not be done by the repealing law, unless the first law conferring the headship and jurisdiction was thereby impliedly revived. Now suppose for one moment that that repealing statute, instead of reciting that its object was to restore the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Crown as head of the Church, had recited, "It being the true intent and meaning of this present Parliament, not by its legislation, to make or exclude any temporal head of the Church, but to leave to the convocations of Canterbury and York to settle that matter as they may deem best for the interests of the Church; is it possible to conceive that any court, judge, or lawyer in England could have held that, in defiance of that declaration, the Queen was made the head of the Church, by setting up a statute which they make the Parliament set up, in order to destroy the very object which they declare they had in view in repealing the repealing law?"

The whole subject lies within a nut-shell. Where a law is repealed and the repealing statute is subsequently repealed, it is a question of construction whether or not the first statute is thereby set up. If the last statute show its purpose to set up the first, of course it is set up, because all that is necessary to establish or abolish a law is a declaration of its will by the legislative power. If the nature and circumstances of the case require that there shall be some law upon the subject—and there will be none if a second statute be repealed, unless the first be restored—then the courts may rightfully infer (nothing being said to the contrary by the Legislature) that it was the intention, in repealing the second, to set up the first. To illustrate this: Suppose there were a statute which punished with death a certain offense which at common law was a misdemeanor, and suppose that statute should be repealed, and subsequently the repealing statute should be repealed; if the last statute said nothing about the purpose or intent of the Legislature, nothing from which the intent could be collected, it might be a question whether the second statute was restored. But suppose the law were repealed, with the express declaration that the Legislature deemed capital punishment too severe for a crime of that description; what would follow? Why, clearly, that neither statute would be in force, and the offense would be left to be dealt with as a misdemeanor at common law.

Therefore, Mr. President, if we are to place any reliance upon the principles laid down, if we are to give any weight to the illustration which is given by Blackstone, if any force is to be attributed to the reasons upon which Lord Coke grounds his conclusion that the statutes of Henry were set up by the repeal in the first year of Elizabeth of the repealing statute of 1 and 2 Philip and Mary, the conclusion is irresistible—that nothing in any such case is accomplished but an implied revival of a repealed law, in order to accomplish a presumed intent of the Legislature; but it is an established rule that there can be no implication in any instrument, deed, or statute, against an express contrary declaration. What do you mean by an implied revival? A revival supposed, intended, or taken to have been purposed, where the Legislature are silent and say nothing expressly upon the point. But if the Legislature exclude the implication, then, if their will is to govern, there can be no revival of a law against their express declaration.

To ascertain the intent of the Legislature, in order to execute it, is the object of all judicial rules of interpretation. Where that intent in any particular is not expressly declared, a court may, and, if it can, ought to gather it from other particulars in which the Legislature may have expressly spoken; but to impute a purpose which is in terms disowned, to make a law accomplish what is declared not to be the intent of its makers, would be to overrule and not to obey the legislative power—to subvert, and not to maintain the law.

Now, Mr. President, upon the original form of the provision introduced on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Territories, I ask if it is possible that any man can make a doubt, can raise a dispute, can involve for a moment any person accustomed either to legal disquisition or to ordinary reasoning, upon the point that this repeal revives nothing? "Which"—that is the exclusion of slavery by the restriction in the Missouri law—"being inconsistent with the principle of non-intervention by Congress with slavery in the States and Territories, as recognized by the legislation of 1850, (commonly called the compromise measures,) is hereby declared inoperative and void." The result would have been clear upon that statement had the amendment proceeded no further; but it continues: "It being the true intent and meaning of this act not to legislate slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom, but to leave the people thereof perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way."

Sir, if the pro-slavery law which existed in that Territory when we acquired it from France be revived by the repeal of the Missouri compromise act, then Congress revive it; then Congress puts it again in force; then it is the act of Congress which truly, though indirectly, establishes the pro-slavery law there. It was taken out of the way by the Missouri law; and if Congress, by repealing the Missouri law, revive the other, then Congress legislates slavery into the Territory. Yet the declaration of the amendment of the committee is express, that it is not the true intent and meaning of this act to legislate slavery into any Territory or State, nor to exclude it therefrom. Now, I undertake to say that it is clear to a moral demonstration, that if that provision had stood in those words, there is no court in America, high or low, that would have held for one moment that that repeal had the effect of reviving any law. Well, then, what is the proviso?

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to revive or put in force any law or regulation which may have existed prior to the act of the 6th of March, 1820, either protecting, establishing, prohibiting, or abolishing slavery."

The allegation was that there had been a law authorizing slavery, and that that law was repealed by the prohibition in the Missouri act. These were the only two laws upon the subject, the only two laws that had ever been in force. There was a law authorizing slavery when the territory belonged to France. By the act of 1820, that law was annulled. If, then, as is clear and evident, beyond dispute, that clause without the proviso did not revive that law, it did not revive any. There was none to be revived. There had been an allowance, and there had been a prohibition. The prohibition is repealed without reviving the allowance, and therefore the subject stands without any law upon it, a tabula rasa, free for the introduction of such legislation as the Territory in its organized form shall think proper to make. That is precisely what the language of the proviso declares—not because it was not clear to demonstration to a legal mind before—not because there ever could have been a moment's hesitation in any court in coming to that conclusion; but because it was due—it was eminently proper—that those gentlemen who, from northern and northwestern constituencies, were supporting the provision in this bill, should not be liable to any misrepresentation before collections of persons, who, however honest, might not have the ability, perhaps, to understand the reasoning, clear as it may seem to us, upon which the conclusion was arrived at; and therefore it was thought just and right to say, in unmistakable terms that the plainest understanding can comprehend, what had already been said in terms unmistakable by a legal understanding. That was all.

It is very singular, Mr. President, allow me to remark, that some complaints have been made of this provision by gentlemen who were entirely content with the enactment proposed by what was called the Clayton compromise of 1848. But what was that as compared with this? Why, it was just exactly as if this Territory had been constituted without the repeal of the restriction in the Missouri act, and leaving, therefore, a law in force, unless the courts should determine it to be unconstitutional, which excluded the admission of slavery into the Territory. It seems to me, therefore, that not only is this, beyond all dispute, right and proper, and susceptible of the one interpretation that I have given to it, demonstrably so, but that it has this advantage over the former compromise, that the only real or supposed obstruction is removed out of the way of the Territorial Legislatures, and real and full power, in form and in fact, given to them to regulate this domestic relation for themselves.

I said, Mr. President, that there were two subjects to which I wished to refer. The other is, that some of our southern friends have been accused—and, of course, I must fall under the same category, as I acted with them on this occasion—of having, by their vote for this bill in the form in which it was put, sanctioned the doctrine of an inherent sovereignty, an inherent right to govern themselves in the people of a Territory, and a denial, consequently, of the right on the part of Congress to govern them; or, in other words, what has received the appellation, from the distinguished Senator from Michigan, of the doctrine of "squatter sovereignty."

Mr. CASS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not call it so. I called it the doctrine of the right of men to govern themselves. The other is the reprehensible term.

Mr. BADGER. Yes, sir, but, as you applied it to squatters, it amounts to the same thing. Mr. President, I do not concur in or admit the existence of any such right. I hold with the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. FETTER], that the powers of Congress over the territory of the United States are plenary; that we have a right to form their governments in such manner as we think best. We have a right, if we please, to govern them ourselves, without giving them any distinct organization, and to exercise such dominion over them as in the judgment of Congress shall be wise, just, and reasonable.

The honorable Senator from Michigan, who has more than once addressed the Senate on this subject, seemed to be a good deal troubled because the power to govern the Territories had not been referred to and deduced from a specific provision in the Constitution; and he asked that those who maintained the existence of the power should lay their fingers on that clause of the Constitution which conferred it. Sir, I think it is very evident that Congress may possess an unquestionable power without any man's being able to lay his finger on the clause of the Constitution which gives it. One instance is as good as a dozen. Does any man question the power of Congress to purchase a library? Yet, will any man lay his finger upon the clause of the Constitution which confers the power? No man can do it. This is, perhaps, the power exercised by Congress which is the most remote from any connection with an expressly granted power. When, therefore, the Supreme Court of the United States tell us that, from whatever source the power may be derived, the power is unquestionable, they have not stated that our power is doubtful; they have not intimated that the power of Congress is liable to dispute or disparagement; but only this, that though the source may be doubtful, the power is certain. It has been deduced from several sources; by some from the power "to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory;" by others, again, as a necessary and inevitable consequence of the power to acquire; and, by others, because the territory being out of the jurisdiction of any particular State, and yet belonging to the United States, the government of the territory must be in the hands of that power which represents the whole of the United States. But the court say, however derived, we have it; it is unquestionable.

Well, sir, if a power be unquestionable, it is a mere matter of curiosity to endeavor to trace its origin. It is important, if a power be doubtful, to endeavor to find out how we arrive at it; but the very moment it is ascertained that we possess a power unquestionably, it becomes a matter of mere curiosity to continue the investigation as to how we derive it. But I think this power may be derived from several sources in the Constitution; and as the Senator from Michigan desired that a finger might be laid on that part of the Constitution which conferred the power, I will lay my finger upon that which I think confers it, in the most ample manner.

Mr. President, at the close of the specific enumeration of powers granted to Congress, we find this general power: "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer thereof." Nothing was omitted, nothing was overlooked, in framing this instrument. The powers of Congress being enumerated, a general power of passing laws to carry them into execution is added. But there are other powers not conferred upon Congress, which cannot be carried into effect without legislation, and hence this clause confers upon Congress the power of passing all laws necessary and proper to carry into execution "all other powers"—powers besides those granted to Congress—"vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer thereof."

Then we find that the Constitution, when speaking of the President, declares that "he shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur." Well, sir, among the treaties known to all nations, both before and after the adoption of the Constitution, was the class of treaties of cession. We have made several such, by which we have acquired territory. There is a power vested in the President to make treaties; and among others, to make a treaty by which territory may be acquired; but the moment the President acquires the territory, no matter what may be the purpose for which it is needed, he can do no more. But the Constitution intended that this power should be carried into full effect, should be made available, that the ends in view should be realized to the nation; and therefore it gave to Congress the power to pass all laws necessary to carry into execution, to complete, to give full operation and effect to the power of acquiring territory by treaty.

Then, how stands the case? Here is, as I think, an express power to make a treaty by which we may acquire territory, as well as to make any other treaty; for no particular class of treaties is specified by the Constitution. Here is a provision that Congress may make all laws necessary to carry that power into execution. What is necessary? The President has power to acquire territory, and this clause confers upon Congress all the powers of legislation necessary in that emergency to perfect the act of acquisition, and devote it to ends proposed in acquiring it.

Let us see how we have acted upon this matter. By our treaty with China, to take one single instance, the Chinese Government put citizens of the United States in China out of the jurisdiction of the domestic tribunals of China, and declared that they should be there under the jurisdiction of the United States. The President, with the consent of the Senate, ratified that treaty. Suppose it had stopped there; these men would have been lost to all law, discharged from the domestic tribunals, and no tribunals established, because the President could establish none, to execute the laws upon American citizens there residing. What did we do? Why, in 1848 we passed an act by which we constituted our Consuls and our Commissioner in China courts of justice. We authorized them to take cognizance of civil causes. We authorized them to hear and determine prosecutions for offenses. We authorized them to pronounce and execute judgment of death upon American citizens in the Empire of China, for offenses there committed, and how did we do it? We did not require any jury. We did not conceive that we were establishing "courts of the United States" within the meaning of the Constitution. Congress did not desire this power under that clause of the Constitution; for if those courts had been "inferior courts" within the meaning of the Constitution, their judges must have held during good behavior. They were executing no such power; they were doing precisely what this last clause at the end of the enumeration of powers authorized them to do; they were passing a law which was necessary and proper to carry into execution the power vested by another clause in the President, of acquiring jurisdiction by treaty. The President, with the advice of the Senate, by treaty, made a compact, in virtue of which our citizens in China, though they were there, ceased to be liable to the local jurisdiction. That was all that the President could do; but Congress passed a law—for what? Why, for governing American citizens in China, establishing courts over them, and establishing them in just such form as they pleased—the Consuls and the Commissioner holding under the President, at his pleasure, being authorized to try, condemn, and execute American citizens, without a jury; the only provision being, that in the case of a capital offense, the Consul should call one or more, not exceeding four, American citizens to aid him.

The two cases, in my judgment, have a precise analogy. In the case of the acquisition of territory by treaty, the inhabitants, with the territory, are transferred under the jurisdiction of the United States. By the treaty with China, our citizens in that territory though the territory remained Chinese, though we acquired no jurisdiction over the territory as such, were yet transferred from the local jurisdiction to our jurisdiction. In the one case we took the land and the inhabitants together. In the other case we took a particular class of inhabitants there, to wit: our citizens residing there; and leaving them within the territory of China, we nevertheless acquired jurisdiction over them. Where, I ask, did we get power to do either? Here is a clear power, undisputed; no man can mistake it; nothing can be said against it; and anything which denies the power of Congress to regulate and govern the territories, denies the validity of the act of 1848, and pronounces it to be a gross usurpation, and leads to the inevitable consequence that if a man be executed by the award of our Consuls and Commissioner in China, they are all guilty of murder morally, and I suppose if they have any laws in China, might be said to be so legally.

Now, Mr. President, I have no more doubt myself about the entire authority of Congress to control the Territories than I have about the power of Congress to pass an appropriation—not a bit; and yet I concurred in that bill. Why? Although I admit our undoubted authority, although I admit we have a right to establish for them any sort of government we please, and to do as we did in the earlier history of the country, to do as we did with the Territory of Orleans—establish a government composed of a Governor appointed by the President, and thirteen freeholders, selected as a legislative body by the 33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

NEW SERIES.....No. 44.

President; although we have the power to do upon the subject as we please; we are bound to regulate ourselves in the exercise of that power by considerations of justice and reason, and prudence, and kindness; and therefore we should vary our legislation according to the varying circumstances of the territory and the various purposes to which it is intended to apply it. For instance, if the Government of the United States should acquire in the Mediterranean some small island, as being important to us for the protection of our commerce, important as a place on which to locate a navy-yard, and have a naval depot and station, without being dependent as now upon the favor of foreign Powers for such an establishment; I certainly would not be for holding, either that the inhabitants of that island had, or that it was right to grant to them, the power of self-government; but that, on the contrary, considering the use for which we intended the island, it would be the most unwise thing in the world to permit them to exercise any such power. The probability is that we ought, and that we would, under such circumstances, establish a military government over them, because the acquisition was intended for military purposes. But when we are establishing a government over Territories which are ultimately to be introduced into the Union as States, when we are establishing nurseries of freemen who are hereafter to be equally interested with ourselves in all the benefits and advantages of this Government; of course we vary our legislation to suit the existing circumstances. We grant to them all the rights of self-government which we can, consistently with the supremacy of the chief or principal Government—the Government of the United States. We retain certain safeguards. We have, in this bill, provided for an officer, to be appointed by the President, who is to exercise a limited veto over the decisions of the representatives of the inhabitants; and we had in the bill a provision that their laws should be sent here to us. I had no serious objection to this last being stricken out, because, according to my judgment, it does not make the smallest difference in the actual relations which the Territories bear to us. Our authority over them is, and continues to be, and until they are erected into States cannot cease to be, full and plenary. We may, a year after this bill is passed, if it shall pass, retract the whole government. We may, after they have passed all their laws, repeal them at a blow. The government exists by an exercise of our will, and with such powers as we please to confer; and we may retract them at pleasure, in whole or in part.

And therefore, Mr. President, when I gave my consent to this bill, I did not conceive myself to be in any manner or form recognizing the existence of what is called squatter sovereignty. I did not, and I do not, admit that the inhabitants of this territory, those who are there now, or those who may go there hereafter, have any inherent right to govern themselves. If they go upon our territory, they must submit to be governed as we, the Congress of the United States, representing the legislative authority of the owners of that territory, the people of the United States, may think proper to govern them. I would not deprive us of the power if I could; and my belief is that we cannot deprive ourselves of it if we would. I conceded it to them—not that they had a right to demand it, but because it was reasonable, and just, and proper, and fair, under the circumstances, to allow it. Under other circumstances it might not be; and if, under other circumstances, I had thought it would not be so, I should not have felt myself compelled to grant it, because they had a right over, above, paramount to our authority, to claim it at our hands! Other gentlemen entertain a different view. There is the honorable Senator from Michigan. He thinks we were only conceding what we were bound to concede—that we were merely carrying out, by our legislation, an inherent right theretofore existing. I do not. But the bill determines nothing of the kind. It necessarily implies nothing but this: that in the existing state of the country, and in the circumstances and condition in which the inhabitants of these Territories will be placed, we thought it fair and reasonable in respect to them, and not injurious to the United States, to extend to them the powers of legislation which the bill confers. That opinion I entertained, and upon that opinion I acted, but never, never, in any event, acknowledging, directly or indirectly, the existence of this squatter sovereignty.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will hear me with some patience upon this subject; I shall not speak long; but it is due to myself that I should make some explanations in reference to the true legal character of the provision referred to by my honorable friend from North Carolina, as I think it has been misconceived, and, as I think, errors have been put into circulation calculated to affect the public mind; and put in circulation, too, by the suggestions of southern men at Washington.

I concur with my honorable friend from North Carolina in all that he has said as to the legal import of his proviso upon the general provision of the bill. And, sir, that I may be distinctly understood, I lay down this proposition broadly, as far as my authority can go as a lawyer, that, according to the legal import of the bill, we have conferred upon the territorial governments created by it all rightful powers of legislation over every subject; and the proviso itself, in a court of justice, would not give it a different character. Now, what is the provision of the bill and the proviso? The proviso does not at all change the character or interpretation of the provision of the original bill; and, in my opinion, if we had simply conferred upon the territorial governments the power to legislate upon all matters of rightful legislation, it would be, before a court of justice, a bill having exactly the same operation.

Now, sir, take that bill with all its provisions, and is there a reasonable man—I will not appeal to gentlemen as lawyers merely, who may be supposed to have some technical peculiarity of reasoning; but is there a reasonable man who has read the bill, who will say, that by its provisions it intended to revive the French and Spanish laws upon the subject of slavery? It neither intended to revive, nor by its provisions could it revive, either the Spanish or the French law. I would say, sir, that by desuetude those laws have gone out of existence; but I attach no more importance to the Missouri compromise than this: while I say the Missouri compromise is repealable and controllable by any other act of Congress, I am not going to say that there are not powers under the Missouri compromise which, having been executed, are not well and properly executed. The States which have been formed, and the territorial Governments which have been organized under its implied and acquiesced authority, were good executions under it. And, sir, I suppose that from 1803 until this time, no court, no legal tribunal, no lawyer has ever adverted to it, or evoked in any way, the Spanish or French laws in these Territories. I do not say those laws were repealed by the Missouri compromise expressly; but if a custom grew up under the Missouri compromise, under which the laws of the Territory were administered, the former was a dead letter.

The bill which has passed the Senate, by its own provisions, independently of the proviso of my honorable friend from North Carolina, excludes the very idea of reviving any old law; so that it stands as nothing more than this: An act conferring upon the Territorial Legislature all rightful powers of legislation over every subject. That is all the power which it confers. In this respect, allow me to say in this connection, it is a better bill than the compromise known as the Clayton compromise of 1848, in which my late distinguished colleague [Mr. Calhoun] acquiesced. What was that compromise? I wish to bring up that issue so as to compare the two, and let them stand upon the same principle.

During the time when that bill was under consideration by the committee of eight, of which Mr. Calhoun was a member, I was frequently consulted, and I will not give the opinions of anybody else. The predicate of northern men was, that whatever compromise should be entered into, the Mexican law should not be repealed by the act expressly or otherwise; and what was more, I remember it was said, "We will not consent to confer upon the territorial government the power to repeal that existing Mexican law which excludes slavery." The northern men said, very properly, "Here is a southern President; you propose to put into operation a government under his auspices and direction; will he not appoint a Governor and judges; will he not put into operation a government that may repeal that Mexican law, and thus introduce slavery into the Territories?"

I know what Mr. Calhoun's views were, and I know what were the views of some of his distinguished legal advisers. Sir, Mr. Calhoun's view was, that, as common territory, belonging to all the States as equals, and held by Congress as trustee to administer it for them, the Constitution of the United States, proprio vigore, extended over the Territories, whether we carried it there expressly or not; and that it had not only a controlling, but a repealing operation upon the laws of the conquered country. I appeal to my friend from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] if I am not right in this?

Then that bill with even the Mexican law, then existing, was so shaped that we were willing to abide by the decisions of the courts. Sir, I will here state what I have never said before: In the councils which I had upon the subject, I said, that whatever might be Mr. Calhoun's opinions upon these subjects—and I concurred with him—it was a hazardous experiment to leave to the courts so important a question. I recollect his reply well. He said:

"It will give rise to the greatest debate that has ever been conducted in America; let that issue be made before the Federal Courts of this Union, and there never has been such a debate as will then arise; the American mind has never been engaged in such a debate as will take place upon that issue."

He added:

"If, sir, it is decided that the common territory, won by the common blood and common treasure of the South as well as the North, shall be appropriated to one class in preference to another, the sooner the South know their fate the better, and then let them look out either to acquiesce or to take the position which free people have a right to take when they think their rights have been invaded."

Those were his views.

Now, this bill is infinitely better than that; because we use this bill as a sponge to wipe out the Missouri line. As long as the Missouri line remains, it is a certainty that southern men will not carry their slaves over the line. There is that certainty before you if you draw the line and let it exist. But I say to southern gentlemen, who are prying into this matter with something like legal subtlety, and letting the great question of southern rights—I will not say southern rights, but the common rights of the country—rest upon a mere aper juris, a mere point of law; those who are looking about endeavoring to find a flaw here and there, with a view, in some measure, to dissatisfy the South, let them take this alternative which I now present. Let any southern man take this alternative: Will you take this bill, with its legal provisions and certain legal import, by which the southern slaveholders may have—I do not say by which they will have, but by which they may have—a potential capacity to enjoy the common territory of the country, or will you reject the bill upon your responsibility as a public man, and hug the Missouri compromise, and keep that odious geographical line in force? Under one, it is certain we can have no rights; under the other, we may have some.

Now, Mr. President, is it not something for a southern man to fight for his border? If Missouri is to be exposed to the invasion of northern fanaticism, is there anything wrong in her southern sisters coming to her rescue? I do not say that I would wish Missouri to carry slavery over into Nebraska or Kansas. We wish no such thing. But when the certainty is before us, that if that line continues, and the waves of agitation are poured out upon it, Missouri may be swept from the map of southern States, is it not something for a southern man to go to the rescue of that border sister of ours? I do not say that will be the fact; but I am very much inclined to think that the operation of this bill, if it shall become a law, will be such that the territorial government will pass no statute upon the subject of slavery, one way or the other. I think it will continue to be a neutral territory—neither slavery pouring into it, nor free-soilism and fanaticism rolling their waves upon Missouri. I am inclined to think it will retain its true position, if it maintains anything like discretion—the position of neutrality—being neither one way nor the other. I am satisfied that the Territorial Legislature, after we have sponged out this line, will not pass any law upon the subject. Do you suppose that any Territorial Legislature will pass a law to exclude or expressly to admit slavery? It would be a suicidal act on the part of the Legislature, and they are not going to commit such an act of folly. No, sir, they will leave it to be settled by American citizens, without regard to whether they own or do not own slaves. That will be the operation of the bill, in my opinion; and I say that to my southern friends, and to my southern associates who are disposed to act with us upon this subject.

Now, sir, is there not something due from the South? Ought they not cordially to give up much in order to concur in the deliberate judgment of a portion of our northwestern and northern friends, who have come forward amidst perils among which we have never trod, to do us justice? Sir, I would go very far to stand by them. I will be the last to desert them. I will stand by them because I believe they are right. I will stand by them because they have intrepidly assumed the position of justice, with the proscription of an uncalculating fanaticism over their heads. Something is due to them, and I will stand by them.

But there is another remark which I wish to make. I was not in the Chamber at the time when the honorable Senator from Michigan claimed the passage of this bill as a triumph of what is called the inherent right of the people of a Territory to invest themselves with a government. He claims this, I understand, upon the broad ground that they can assume upon themselves such rights whenever they may think that a proper case to do so arises.

Mr. CASS. Does the honorable Senator lay that down as my doctrine? It is not so at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I do not know what it is.

Mr. CASS. The gentleman attributes that doctrine to me. I never laid it down at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not wish to do the Senator injustice.

Mr. CASS. I know the Senator does not.

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly not.

Mr. CASS. My doctrine is simply the doctrine of our revolutionary fathers. I do not deny the power of Congress, as a matter of necessity, to prescribe a form of government for the Territories; but the moment they do so, then comes in the inherent right of the people to regulate their internal affairs for themselves. This is precisely the ground which our revolutionary fathers took. I do not wish to argue this question now, and I have not the strength to do so if I would; but I repeat, what I said on a former occasion, that there may be a difference of opinion, and a very rightful one, as to how far such powers of legislation may go. As the honorable Senator from North Carolina has said, under our legislation, at one time, a Governor and three judges were authorized to govern a Territory. We did have such a regulation, but I think it was all wrong. Better ideas have now begun to prevail, and we have a more definite idea than we had formerly of how far we may properly go.

Mr. BUTLER. I would be the last to do injustice to the distinguished Senator from Michigan; but allow me to say, although a younger man than he is, though I do not know that the world will think so, that I think it was outside the record, and contradicted by the record, when he assumed that this bill either recognized or countenanced that species of sovereignty which, in his own language, he has described, and which I will not undertake to explain. So far from being so, the bill is a recognition of the fact that Congress has the original and exclusive authority upon the subject of territorial governments, and that a territorial government can take—mark the word, I use it as a lawyer—no more than Congress may give, and that Congress can give no more than is conferred by the Constitution of the United States. So that, if upon this occasion, Congress has thought proper to part with a great deal of the original and exclusive power which it once had, and to confer it upon the territorial government as a mere deputy, it has been an act of discretion entirely. It is not what the people of the Territory could enact; it is not what they could demand; it is not what they had any right to demand.

Now, sir, as my friend from North Carolina has said, I would deal differently with different Territories, according to the people that were on them. Suppose we were to acquire the Sandwich Islands to-morrow; do you think that I, as a representative from South Carolina, or as a representative of the American mind, would delegate to those colored people, the Sandwich Island people, (who know nothing of the common law, nothing of those principles of Magna Charta which infuse themselves into the English mind,) the powers which I have agreed to give in this bill to American citizens, conducting the operations of Government, under the sanction of the sacred and recognized principles of the common law? Not at all, sir. I will give these powers in this case because it is prudent and proper. I will give them to those who, understanding the great principle of American institutions, will impress it upon the statutes of the Territory, until it shall assume such a position as will enable it to come into the Union as an equal State; but I am not going to deal so with all other Territories. I will deal so with this because, if you will allow me to say so, I know that Kentucky, Missouri, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, and, in part, South Carolina, have mingled their judgments in the population of Missouri; and that will be a judgment which is likely to prevail in the laws of these Territories. Sir, the mingled opinions of the citizens living in and beyond Missouri will carry out that judgment in the territorial laws of these Territories, and I believe they will be just. There are a great many from the North who will go into these Territories. I have seen some of them; they are men who are capable, before leaving home, of lifting themselves above the prejudices which prevail there; or who have left home with a view to take a fair position in reference to this matter.

I wished to make these explanations, and to lay down the proposition that the honorable Senator from North Carolina has not changed the legal character of the bill. I affirm that it leaves the Territory on this subject as a tabula rasa, upon which the American mind is to make an impression, and for which it is to form laws. I say, further, that there is no probability of interference one way or the other with the institution of slavery until Kansas, and until Nebraska shall assume the position, and be ready to perform the responsible duties of States. I lay down, furthermore, the proposition that there is no recognition by the bill of any power in the people of a Territory to govern, except what we confer upon them under the powers which we ourselves have under the Constitution of the United States.

If there should be any question made as to the right of a negro or slave to his freedom, to his emancipation, the issue would be in this way: "You demand your freedom?" "I do." "Upon what ground?" "On the ground that I am in the territory of the United States, the common property of all the States." What would be the reply? If the reply were worth anything, it would be this: the owner would say, "I hold my property by a tenure higher than any legal enactment which can be made of a local character to exclude me. I hold under the Constitution of the country." That is the ground which we have taken. But, sir, the sooner that we learn there is to be a discrimination with regard to the enjoyment of the Territories, that there is to be a mark of inequality, independently of the Missouri line, by the adjudication of a court responding to the doctrine of popular sovereignty, or the fanatical sentiment which is infusing itself into the country—the sooner we know this the better. I make no threats. Mr. President, you will bear me witness that I have never made any.

In all literature, in history, in poetry, and in the Scriptures themselves, the crow of the cock has been used as highly illustrative and indicative language. The game cock, when he stands in the presence of his adversary, gives forth a note of defiance, inspired by the danger and the excitement of the contest, and animates him to move on upon the path of peril to victory or death. But how different, sir, is the clarion note of the chanticleer, when he proclaims to us the coming of day. It is as different a note as anger is from peace. It is the note of intelligence, of hope, of peace. I say, sir, that if this bill shall pass, and shall be acquiesced in cordially by all sections of the Union, it will be the note of a bird of good omen. It will be the clarion note of the chanticleer, proclaiming to the South that light is dawning upon her; it will proclaim peace to all sections—a peace to which we can honorably be reconciled. If, however, these northern gentlemen shall let loose the waters of agitation, I will change the figure. If they will continue to fan the torch which has been lighted by discord, I do not know how soon the note may be changed to that of the proud bird to which I have alluded.

Mr. President, I have said more than I intended, but allow me to add a few words more. What a spectacle will the United States exhibit at this crisis, and at this eventful period of the world's history? Sir, at a time when a war is likely to take place at the East which may mark the age; at a time when a war may take place to change the whole character of European power, shall we exhibit to the world these evidences of weakness and distraction? It may be out of place for me to say a word upon this matter; but I must say, that I do not think the United States are likely to be in any danger so long as war is going on, because we may maintain the position and the safety of a neutral; but I will make this prediction: If Russia shall be crushed as a power in Europe by the combination of France and England, the termination of that war will place France and England in a position to induce them to interfere with American affairs. They will come out of that war, if they shall crush Russia, with triumphant armies, accustomed to war and victory, without bread, without clothes, and it will be an easy decision for them to upon our southern islands, for I call them ours. Perhaps the blood around those islands, in the sea-fights which will take place, will be the language in which to write its history. But, sirs, these are matters not pertaining to this subject, and I shall not notice them further. I thank the Senate for having allowed me to make these remarks.

"Cry Havoc, and let slip the dogs of war"

[Mr. MASON addressed the Senate in remarks which he withheld for revision, and have not been returned. When received they will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. BROWN. The honorable Senator from North Carolina having felt it his duty to give to the Senate and the country the reasons which influenced him, and which, in his opinion, justified him in moving the proviso when the Nebraska bill was under consideration, and the two distinguished Senators from South Carolina and Virginia having justified themselves before the Senate and the country in voting for that proviso, I wish to say a word in justification of myself for having voted against it.

I was one of five southern men who recorded their votes against that proviso; and though I had stood alone in the Senate, I should have voted against it. When I was called upon first to vote for the Nebraska bill I understood that its only dealing with the Missouri compromise was to repeal it. And the reason given for that repeal was, as I understood it, that originally it had been passed in violation of the Constitution, and in derogation of the rights of the southern people. This being so, a returning sense of justice, as I supposed, had induced our northern brethren to come forward to strike it from the statute-book. That, I understood, to be what Congress was called upon to do, and all that it was expected to do. If that had been done, and nothing more, we should, in my judgment, have been restored to the position which we occupied before the passage of the Missouri act. Upon what ground does the South claim its repeal, and upon what ground is it conceded to us, let me ask honorable gentlemen? We claim its repeal because originally, as I said before, it was passed in violation of the Constitution, and in derogation of our rights; and it is to be repealed that we may be restored to the rights which we had before it was passed. If we are not restored to those rights, I submit to you, Mr. President, and to the country, the repeal of it is not worth a rush to us. Why should we work ourselves into a passion, excite the country, and revive all this slavery agitation upon a mere abstraction? and I hold that it is an abstraction, unless we are restored to the rights we had in the territory before the passage of the Missouri compromise. If we get nothing by the repeal why repeal it? I dare say that the Nebraska bill stands, in the minds of southern people to-day, as it stood in yours and mine at the beginning—as a simple proposition to repeal the Missouri compromise, and nothing more. When the distinguished author of the bill [Mr. DOUGLAS] came forward with his amendment—the one which the Senator from North Carolina read this morning, and which I would reproduce if I had it before me—I hesitated long as to whether I would vote for it. It was doing a little more than I felt we had contracted to do in the beginning; but finding older Senators, men of more experience, more learning, more ability in every way, disposed to go for it I finally gave up my objections.

I hesitated, sir, because, among other things, I saw in it a departure from the original liberal and just purpose of restoring us to the position we had before the act of 1820. If we had the right to introduce slaves into this territory before the restriction act of 1820, the repeal of that act would have restored us to that right. The amendment moved by the Senator from Illinois seemed to me to be a denial of that restoration. But, as this construction did not meet the sanction of older Senators, I abandoned it. My anxiety to act in harmony with my southern friends gave an easier impulse to my decision. Imagine my surprise when I heard the Senator from North Carolina gravely contending that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois precluded the idea of restoring the South to its original position, and that his proviso only expressed, in language more distinct, what had already been expressed in adopting the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Allow me to say, Mr. President, that I by no means concur with the Senators from North Carolina and Virginia, that this bill is all the South has ever asked. If their reading of it is correct it falls immeasurably short of that point. The South has asked to be left alone in the enjoyment of all her rights—not to be legislated into or out of the Territories. In 1820 Congress legislated her out of Nebraska. In 1854 it is proposed to repeal this unjust legislation, and restore her to her lost position. But the Senator from Illinois comes forward with an amendment, which the Senator from North Carolina insists precludes this idea, (I take it for granted no one questions that but for the act of 1820 the southern people could have introduced slavery into this Territory.) The idea of restoring the French laws by repealing the Missouri act is wholly dispelled, we are told, by the language of the amendment first proposed. But to make assurance doubly sure, the Senator from North Carolina brings in his proviso, which says in terms, that no law existing prior to 1820, giving sanction or protection to slavery in these Territories, shall be revived or put in force. Suppose there were laws in these Territories prior to 1820 sanctioning and protecting slavery, as I think there were, and that you repealed them by the act of 1820—as you did, what does justice demand of you now?—not to legislate slavery into the country, no one asks that, but to repeal your repealing act, and put us back where you found us. This would be non-intervention. But it is not non-intervention for you to keep in force the laws of Mexico, which abolished slavery in Utah and New Mexico, and to repeal the laws of France, which tolerated slavery in Nebraska and Kansas.

I cannot concur with my friend from North Carolina in the opinion, that in the simple act of repealing the Missouri compromise, and thereby restoring the laws in force before its passage, (admitting that those laws sanctioned and protected slavery,) we should be legislating slavery into the country. We found laws in force there sanctioning slavery; we repealed those laws in 1820. If, in 1854, we repeal the repealing act, and thereby place the original law in force, the case will stand as if we had not acted at all. So far from legislating slavery into the country we shall simply leave things where we found them.

Mr. President, in voting for the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, I stood on the outer verge of the precipice. One hair's breadth further, I felt, would put me overboard. When the Senator from North Carolina brought forward his proviso, I said promptly I would not vote for it. The Senator has explained that it makes no alteration in the text of the bill as it had been amended. In this he and I differ. But suppose it does not then why ask us to vote for it? If it left us where we stood before why was it urged upon us?

I felt at the time that it was another concession; that it was still another and wider departure from the original purpose of the bill—the simple purpose of repealing the Missouri act, and leaving the South where we found her—and so regarding it I could not consent to vote for it. If the South is not restored to her position, is it not a mockery to talk about non-intervention? She has lost her position in the Territories, and by the acts of Congress, and by those alone. She had protection for slaves by virtue of the French laws prior to 1820 in these Territories. You took it away by the act of 1820. You not only do not restore this specific right in 1854, but you have said, in so many words, it shall not be restored.

I beg leave to dissent from another view of this subject taken by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, but—no, I will not pursue the discussion. I simply rose to give the reasons which influenced me in voting against the proviso of my friend from North Carolina. I felt called upon to do this from the course the discussion had taken this morning; and now having done this, and not desiring to widen the field of debate by the introduction of new topics, I take my seat.

Mr. CLAYTON. My honorable friend from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] has appealed to me for the correctness of his statement in regard to the compromise of 1848; and if I had no other motive for rising now to answer his question, my profound respect for him would induce me to speak. He says, and says truly, that at the time that compromise was proposed by me, the predicate of northern men was, that whatever compromise should be entered into, the Mexican law should not be repealed. The member of the committee on that compromise who first made the objection, that the Territorial Legislature should have it in their power to legislate on slavery, was Mr. Phelps, of Vermont. He said, as my friend has stated to day, "Here is a southern President: you propose to put into operation a government under his auspices and direction. Will he not appoint a Governor and judges to repeal the Mexican law which prohibits slavery in California and New Mexico?"

Mr. Calhoun's view was that no power should or could be conferred on any Territorial Legislature either to establish or prohibit slavery in the Territory. He held that the Constitution of the United States necessarily extended over the territories as soon as they were acquired, whether by express enactment of law or without it; and that, therefore, it controlled and repealed the Mexican law existing at and before the acquisition of the conquered and purchased country. In these views of Mr. Calhoun southern gentlemen who voted for the bill generally concurred. But the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] opposed the bill, and opposed this opinion. He held that in the face of the Mexican law, or in the absence of all law upon the subject, slaves could not be carried to the Territories; and he therefore dissented from those who proposed, by the bill, to send the question of law to the courts.

It is no part of my purpose to discuss the amendment to the Nebraska bill proposed by my friend, the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER.] That amendment provided, in substance, that the bill should not be held to revive any prior law which had established slavery in this Territory. I leave that to others who are more interested to establish slavery in Nebraska than I or my constituents; and I am the more content to leave it after what I said in the main debate on the bill before its passage, which has not been answered. Those who are satisfied that the Territories should be left, as they have said, a blank on this question; that there should be no law legalizing slavery, as there will not be under the bill, and without the old Spanish law, of course cannot expect any decision of the courts to sanction slavery there. They rely on the action of the Territorial Legislature, elected by the transient persons who may happen to be there when the government is organized, to sustain their claim to hold slaves there, or they vainly expect to do it in the absence of all law to authorize slavery.

This brings me to the question of the propriety of giving these transient persons, few as we know they must be, the right to decide this question of slavery. Mr. Calhoun denounced this claim of right in them as a most absurd and monstrous doctrine; and he was the man who gave this power, when thus conferred and exercised, the name of "squatter sovereignty." The Nebraska bill which passed the Senate is a bill which expressly confers that power. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CASS] was right when he rose in his place immediately after the final vote on that bill, and congratulated the Senate on the triumph of the doctrines of squatter sovereignty! I say he was perfectly right. It was the triumph of the very doctrine which Calhoun repudiated in 1848, and again in 1850. It authorizes the men who have no interest in the Territory to settle the question of slavery as they please—not merely to govern themselves, but to govern in this respect all who claim in the slave States to carry slaves there.

And now to defend their votes. Honorable gentlemen venture to compare this squatter sovereignty bill with the true non-intervention bill of 1848. That, sir, was indeed a non-intervention bill. It gave no power to any legislative councils to prohibit or establish African slavery; and the words which denied such a power to the local Legislature, were drafted into the bill by amendment in the committee by Mr. Calhoun himself. It necessarily drove the parties, North and South, to settle the slavery question in the courts, and ultimately into the Supreme Court of the United States. But this bill is only a non-intervention bill when the people of the Territories shall be ready to form a State constitution preparatory to admission into the Union. During the whole period of their existence under the territorial government, the local Legislature not only may act but will act under a power conferred in this bill by Congress, to which the power to legislate on the same subject is absolutely denied by some of the very gentlemen who voted for this bill. They have not, and will not explain to us, how the squatter sovereign can derive this power from Congress when Congress does not possess it.

Nor will it avail gentlemen to say that the New Mexico and Utah bills gave the same power to the squatter sovereigns. Had Calhoun lived, those bills would never have passed, in my opinion, without amendment in this very particular. They were not true non-intervention bills. What has been the result? Non-action. Why? Because those sovereigns desire to continue in those Territories the Mexican laws, and consider them in force there. It is vain to compare such measures with the true non-intervention measures proposed by the bill of 1848.

It is absurd to speak of non-intervention in these Territories with the Missouri restriction clause in force. Neither the bill of 1848, nor any other measure, could provide for non-intervention without repealing that clause. But apply the principles of the bill of 1848 to the Nebraska bill which repeals that clause, and you have full and satisfactory non-intervention. In the Nebraska bill, as it passed the Senate, the principle of non-intervention is abandoned, totally deserted by its pretended friends, as long as the territorial governments exist, and until the formation of State governments; because, while the Territorial Legislatures may, by that bill, decide the question of slavery, as it is now fully admitted they may, Congress will necessarily exercise the power of revising their acts; and the omission to declare that power in the bill, or the mere striking out of the clause which expressly gave Congress the power to revise, does not, in the slightest degree, affect the matter. Congress is, of course, left free by the Constitution to intervene while the local Legislatures act; and the question of slavery will be, of course, agitated here whenever the Territorial Legislatures shall decide that question. Nothing is settled by the bill, because the true principles of non-intervention have been deserted.

Sir, I forbear to notice other remarks made in this desultory and irregular debate—not merely because there is no question before the Senate, but because I have met them in the debate on the bill, and think it unnecessary to reply to them again. I know that northern and southern men put different constructions on this bill to suit the latitude of their residence; and I have no desire to embarrass them by any further observations.

Mr. STUART. Mr. President, it is known that while this subject was under discussion, before the passage of the bill, I forebore to discuss its general features. I do not intend to do it now, further than to meet some suggestions which have been thrown out by Senators this morning.

I am prepared to agree generally with the remarks made by the Senator from North Carolina, that the probable interpretation of the bill, before the adoption of the amendment which he offered, would have been the same that it would be now. I am not prepared to say, however, that that would certainly be the case. I think that Senators lay down that proposition a little too strongly. I think there was room for debate. There certainly was room for a difference of opinion; for since the bill passed the Senate, we have seen certain southern presses denounce it as good for nothing to the South, because of the adoption of that amendment, and another which was offered by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] taking away the revising power of Congress over the legislation of the Territories. It is known, at least here, that the amendment which was offered by the Senator from North Carolina, was that amendment which I drew, and which I had declared must in substance be appended to the bill, or I could not consent to vote for it. It was not so much because, as I say, I should have made any difference myself as a lawyer in the interpretation of the bill, as it stood and as amended, as that it left a matter of opinion as it stood. I stated then, what I repeat now, that whatever controversy is to grow out of that question, is to be looked for in the Northern States, and not in the South; and, sir, that controversy there should not rest upon the construction of the bill so far as opinion merely might go; for when one gentleman takes the stump against you and asserts an opinion which is antagonistic with yours, he will claim, what every man has a right to claim, that his opinion is as good as yours. Therefore I insisted, and I beg to refer to it now, because some gentlemen thought it was a threat upon my part, though nothing could be further from my thought—for it would not have altered the fate of the bill if I had voted against it—that if southern gentlemen should claim that this controversy should again come up in the North, we should have no two interpretations to the bill; that we should meet the question as it was said here it was intended to be met, conferring upon the Territorial Legislature all the power which we possess over that question. There I was willing to meet it if it became necessary. There, I think, with all respect to the opinions of others, it can be met, and met successfully.

Now, sir, I cannot acquiesce precisely. I never did, and I do not now, in the belief that this measure was brought forward as a northern measure. That it ultimately assumed that phase I admit; but I never heard of it until it was brought in here in that bill. I have never seen that northern man who could tell me that he was consulted about it; and I have inquired of some southern gentlemen, and I have not found any from that quarter who were consulted about it. I never believed it was wise to bring it here. I never believed any good could grow out of it. I met it, so far as my action and vote were concerned, as a measure brought here without any action of mine—a measure for which nobody was responsible except the committee who introduced it, to be acted upon like any other measure before the Senate, let the consequences be what they might.

Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senate while I state, in a few words, the greatest fear I have ever entertained in consequence of the introduction of the measure, and the fear that I still entertain, though I hope it will prove to be a groundless fear.

Under our institutions, whenever a sectional difficulty has arisen, and whenever any sectional difficulty shall hereafter arise, the only way known among men by which to settle that difficulty has been, and will be, by a compromise of opinion,

That was true when the Missouri restriction, as it is termed, was adopted. That was eminently true in 1833, when a difference of opinion, sectional in its character, grew up upon the tariff question. I never shall forget the effect that was produced upon me by reading the language of Henry Clay, when he came forward as one of the three great compromisers at that time. I do not know that I can recite it verbatim; but I can tell it in substance. It is as fixed upon my mind as that great assertion in Genesis: "God said, let there be light; and there was light." He said he wished to see no desolated towns, no sacked cities, no fields of American blood shed by American arms. Now, sir, in 1850, when this Union of States rocked to the very center, the patriots of the land again shook hands together upon a compromise of opinion. I have hesitated, I hesitated upon this bill, to repeal the Missouri compromise, for fear that whenever an occasion should arise in the future, when the Union of these States should be again in danger, if we had done aught which should shake the confidence of the American people in the sanctity, the utility, and the permanency of compromises, we might have laid the very germ which should terminate the existence of the Union. But, sir, I finally yielded all that, because other gentlemen around me, in whose opinions I was bound to entertain confidence, seemed to differ from me in opinion. Now let me suggest a word or two upon this doctrine of principle.

I may say that the language contained in this bill never had much force with me as asserting a principle. There is no principle asserted in a compromise. You agree to lay down the principles by which you have respectively been bound heretofore, and to do a solitary act. Therefore, there was nothing in the compromise of 1850 which it could be said, with accuracy, conflicted with the compromise of 1820; and, sir, I venture the prediction, that much as this bill now seems to demonstrate this as a principle, the years are very few, in the future, in which will be developed to us an occasion when we shall have territory that we shall be obliged to legislate for from the beginning to the end of the chapter. Time will bring to us acquisitions from the South of a people who not only know nothing of our institutions and laws, but have an inbred and traditionary hostile feeling towards us and them. We shall make these acquisitions. I say we shall make them because they are written in the divine law, which is irresistible. Having made them, we shall get a people that we shall be compelled to legislate for; and, so far as my action may go upon the subject, I intend to save my views on the right to legislate. The question of power I never yet have discussed; and I never mean to discuss it until the question shall arise when it shall be strictly involved. What did we agree to do in this bill, so far as the action of the Senate is concerned? In my humble judgment we agreed to do this: We agreed to leave this whole question of slavery to the people of the Territories, that they might legislate over it as over all others, according to their own will and pleasure. I thought that it was a ground upon which men might meet, and shake hands, and agree. I think so now. It establishes a principle, so far as it relates to these two Territories. It establishes that principle no further.

Mr. President, in my humble judgment, and it is only the judgment of an individual, you can establish no other principle than this: that Congress shall do, from time to time, whatever it shall become necessary to do in respect to the Territories which you hold. That doctrine of necessity is to be determined by members of Congress themselves, and has no other limit, therefore, than the judgment of each Congress may dictate. Why, sir, there was not a section in this bill that I should have voted for if I had believed that the Constitution did not confer the power to legislate for the Territories; and for the very plain reason that there is not any necessity for a government there at all. Then, again, there are provisions in the bill vital in their character respecting the rights of the people to legislate. There is a provision which stands in it now by which Congress declares that the Legislature of the Territory shall not levy any taxes upon non-residents greater than they levy upon residents. There is a direct interference in one of the very things for which our forefathers in the Revolution fought. There are others which might be mentioned; but, as I say, there was no necessity, and therefore, adopting the rule of necessity for congressional action, there was no need of acting at all.

The Senators from North Carolina and South Carolina have sought to show what will be the effect of this bill. I wish to say a word or two only upon that subject, and I shall have done.

The reason why I was willing to meet the issue again, unnecessary as I thought it was, and make another agreement so far as my vote went, was this: I believe that the laws of population are such that there will be ten occupants of these Territories from northern States to one from the slaveholding with his slaves. Why do I believe it? Why, one hundred men of the northern States, young men, without any real estate, without any property in the world, except five hundred or one thousand dollars, which they have in money, can make up their minds at night that they will go to Kansas and Nebraska, and can start the next morning after breakfast, and go; there is no impediment, and they will go; but a man who is a slave owner in a southern State has got a pretty large business on hand; in the first place to so shape his property as to get ready to go; and when he has done all that, he knows as well as anybody can tell him that he is subjecting the tenure of that property to the legislation of the people who are there, and it is a hazardous business, it is a hazardous property to move anywhere.

Therefore it is, without assigning other reasons, that I come to the conclusion that the laws of population, as they have done from time immemorial, will continue to act upon these Territories, and the population there will be at least ten to one from non-slaveholding States, and that Kansas and Nebraska, by the irresistible law of population, based upon the nature of man and his business, whenever they come into this Union will come in as non-slaveholding States. That was my belief; that is my belief now.

The memorials were then ordered to lie upon the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 21, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to present the memorial of the Maryland Institute for the promotion of the Mechanical Arts, in which they suggest that having understood that the Government of Great Britain are about to alter their law in reference to coinage, and adopt the decimal instead of the present system, it would be of great commercial importance that the two countries should agree upon some identical coin, so that it would pass in the United States and in England without regard to the place in which it had been coined. I have also a memorial of the American Philosophical Society of Philadelphia upon the same subject. I will ask the reference of the two memorials to the Committee on Finance.

They were so referred.

Mr. PRATT also presented a memorial of citizens of Maryland residing near the city of Washington, praying that the Columbia turnpike road, over which they bring their produce to that city, may be made free; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. FISH presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York, praying Congress to enact suitable laws to provide for the establishment of naval schools for the education and training of seamen for the merchant marine and the Navy of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a memorial of the society of Universal Democratic Republicanism, praying the Government of the United States to intervene on behalf of Frederick T. Weichel, who has been illegally imprisoned in Saxony and Bremen; and also, to enact laws for the better protection of naturalized citizens of the United States, and those who have declared their intentions to become such; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the petition of William Black, boatswain in the United States Exploring Expedition in 1838 and 1839, praying to be allowed the same extra pay that has been allowed to other officers of a like grade in the same expedition; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented the petition of Charles J. Swett, praying compensation for his services during the time he acted as purser on board the steam frigate San Jacinto; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SEWARD presented two petitions of legal voters of Nelson, New Hampshire, remonstrating against the passage of the Nebraska bill or any other modification or repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, the petition of James Stewart, a private of militia in the last war with Great Britain, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUMNER presented two petitions, signed by nine hundred and sixty-three women of Fitchburg, Massachusetts, remonstrating against any infringement of the Missouri compromise; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Also, resolutions passed at a town meeting of citizens of Adams, Massachusetts, remonstrating against a repeal of the Missouri compromise; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Also, resolutions passed at the annual meeting of the legal voters of Beverley, Massachusetts, held March 13, 1854, against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHIELDS presented a resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, in favor of a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from the west shore of Lake Michigan to the mineral region of Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a resolution of the Legislature of Illinois, in favor of a grant of land to aid in the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of Niagara; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of Illinois, in favor of the admission of sugar, molasses, and railroad iron, free of duty; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RUSK presented the memorial of Robert Mills, praying an appropriation by Congress to enable him to demonstrate the advantages of certain improvements made by him in the construction of railroads; which was referred to the select committee on the subject of the Pacific railroad.

PAPER WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, it was Ordered, That the petition of Bryan Callaghan be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, their Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a joint resolution from the Senate, accepting certain volumes and medals presented by her Britannic Majesty's Government to the United States.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Rulig Van Brunt, praying relief for losses incurred by him in consequence of the occupation of his property in 1814 by troops raised for the defense of New York, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills from the House of Representatives, reported them back without amendment, and recommended their passage:

Bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Isaac P. Simonton; and Bill for the relief of Madison Parton.

Mr. PEARCE, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the memorial of Horace Southmayd & Son, praying the return of certain duties, said to be illegally charged at Tampico, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of the legal representatives of Captain William Davis, late commander of the United States transport schooner Eufalia, reported it without amendment, together with a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Robert Sewall, praying compensation for property destroyed during the late war with Great Britain, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William C. Parke, praying for a distribution of the unclaimed balance of prize money appropriated by Congress for the heirs of John Paul Jones and the officers and men of the frigate Alliance, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GEYER, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill supplementary to an act confirming claims to land in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. SLIDELL, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Margaret A. Copley, of the State of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill from the House of Representatives, providing for the distribution of arms to the several States and Territories, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SAMUEL K. RAYBURN.

Mr. CLAY. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred House bill for the relief of Samuel K. Rayburn, have directed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to put it upon its passage now. It is one which I think will incur no opposition.

The Senate accordingly, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CLAY. The facts of the case are briefly these: Mr. Rayburn was a volunteer in the service in Mexico, and a private in a company of horse. It is clearly proven that while in the line of his duty, in the pursuit of some Mexicans, who fled before them, his horse fell into a well, which are numerous and peculiar to that country, some twelve feet in diameter, and some thirty feet in depth, and from that well he was rescued with some difficulty by some peons, who happened to pass by and discovered him; but his horse and all his equipments were lost; and now he asks payment for the horse and the equipments, amounting to $105. There was no difference of opinion in the committee upon it. It passed the House committee unanimously; and when under consideration in the House, met with no opposition whatever, and I think will meet with none here.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

CADETS AT WEST POINT.

The joint resolution from the House of Representatives, explanatory of the law regulating the number of cadets to be appointed to the Military Academy at West Point, was read a first and second time.

The PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHIELDS. With the consent of the Senate, I should prefer that the joint resolution be put upon its passage now. It is to remedy a difficulty existing in some of the districts in the several States so as to enable them to appoint cadets to the Military Academy, and it is necessary that it should be done as speedily as possible, in order to enable the appointees to join their classes. I think we understand the matter pretty well, and there is no necessity for referring it to the Committee on Military Affairs. I should like to have it put on its passage at this time, if there be no objection.

Mr. STUART. Let it be read.

Mr. BADGER. I suggest that it had better be referred. I have long been of the opinion that an alteration should be made in the law in regard to that institution, so as to give to the members of this body the power to appoint as well as those of the other House.

Mr. SHIELDS. The honorable Senator is correct, and I am about to call up a bill to accomplish that object; but this is an entirely distinct matter. I will state, that under the redistricting of the States, in the additional districts in some of the States, they are unable to make the appointment which the law regulates, without this explanatory bill. The appointments have already been made in all other cases; and unless this bill pass, these will not be made in time to join their classes.

Mr. HUNTER. I think this bill ought to pass in advance of the other. It is to reconcile an existing difficulty growing out of the redistricting of the States.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is it.

Mr. HUNTER. It ought to be passed in time to meet the specific case. It requires immediate action.

Mr. SHIELDS. The matter which the honorable Senator mentions is already embodied in a bill which I shall perhaps endeavor to have considered this morning.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. PRATT. I would like to make an inquiry of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. I understand there is a bill giving each Senator power to appoint a cadet. May I ask the honorable chairman whether this joint resolution confers that power?

Mr. SHIELDS. I stated that it does not.

Mr. PRATT. I have not the slightest objection to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to ask a question of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Does this joint resolution increase the number of cadets provided for by law? There were two hundred and thirty-three appointed at the former Congress; does this increase the number?

Mr. SHIELDS. It does.

Mr. JOHNSON. Temporarily or permanently?

Mr. SHIELDS. It enables these additional districts to make new appointments.

Mr. JOHNSON. As things now stand, some districts already have two cadets, while other districts, under the redistricting, have none whatever. Is that so?

Mr. SHIELDS. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON. Many of the new States have increased in population, and consequent representation. I will ask the Senator whether or not there is any provision in the joint resolution for the additional districts in the new States in regard to the number of cadets?

Mr. SHIELDS. The object of the bill is to put them on the same footing as others.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am satisfied.

Mr. STUART. I will suggest to the Senator from Illinois, that if he will have the joint resolution read, it will enable us to understand what it is about.

The PRESIDENT. Does the honorable Senator from North Carolina object to its consideration?

Mr. BADGER. No, sir; I will not object to it. I merely made a suggestion.

The PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

It proposes to direct that nothing contained in any act of Congress shall be construed to deprive any congressional district in the United States of its right to a cadet at the academy; but that whenever, from a rearrangement of congressional districts in any State, more than one cadet shall be thrown into the same district, notwithstanding such fact, there shall be appointed, in the manner now prescribed by law, one cadet from every other district from which there is no cadet in the institution, to be entered at the commencement of its next regular session.

Mr. CASS. I did not hear the resolution distinctly, and I will, therefore, make inquiry of the Senator from Illinois. In those districts that have two cadets, what becomes of the vacancy that occurs when one of them passes through the academy? Will it expire, or will it exist permanently?

Mr. SHIELDS. If a district has two cadets, the power to reappoint one will expire at the expiration of the term.

Mr. CASS. Is it so distinctly stated?

Mr. SHIELDS. The original law accomplishes that object.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I will make an inquiry of the honorable chairman: Has this measure been recommended by the Department, or has it any recommendation from the Executive?

Mr. SHIELDS. It was, as I understand, recommended to the committee of the House to settle the difficulty which exists at present. If, however, there is any doubt about it, I will move to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I think it will be better to do that.

Mr. RUSK. I suggest that that course had better be pursued, so that the committee can consider the propriety of moving an amendment in regard to appointments by Senators.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

MAIL CONTRACT IN ALABAMA.

On the motion of Mr. FITZPATRICK, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, for extending an existing contract for carrying the mail in Alabama.

It proposes to authorize the Postmaster General to extend the existing contract for carrying the mail upon the route between Montgomery and Mobile, for four years from the time at which it would expire by its own limitation, if, in his opinion, the public interest and convenience will be promoted thereby.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was read a third time, and passed.

NAVY BIDS.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a joint resolution relative to bids for provisions, clothing, and small stores for the use of the Navy.

The joint resolution was read a first time.

Mr. GWIN. I am requested by the Secretary of the Navy to ask the immediate consideration of the resolution. It is important to the Department that it should be acted upon at once. It was reported upon by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House unanimously, and passed the House yesterday. I will ask for the reading of the resolution, so that the Senate may understand what it is.

Mr. FISH. I will ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs whether the resolution has been printed, and received the consideration of any committee?

Mr. GWIN. It was introduced into the House of Representatives by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, at the request of the Secretary of the Navy. The chairman came to me yesterday and said it was of pressing importance, the Secretary had informed him, that it should be passed immediately. It passed the House without opposition on the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Naval Affairs; and I have been requested by the Secretary of the Navy to have it brought up this morning and acted upon. Let it be read. It will explain itself.

Mr. FISH. I do not object to the consideration of the resolution; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to this mode of legislation. It is a joint resolution prepared at the Navy Department, which, without being printed, passed through the House of Representatives on the day it was introduced, has been sent to the Senate, and, at the request of the Secretary, must be passed here without any consideration of it by a committee. If this mode of legislation is to be continued, it will be useless to have committees.

Mr. GWIN. Let it be read. It will explain itself.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be read a second time.

There was no objection.

It proposes to direct that all bids for supplies of provisions, clothing, and small stores may be rejected at the option of the Department, if made by one who is not known as a manufacturer of, or a regular dealer in, articles proposed to be furnished; which facts, or the reverse, must be distinctly stated in the bids offered; that the bids of all persons who fail to comply with the conditions in a contract they have previously entered into with the United States, shall, at the option of the Department, be rejected; that if more than one bid be offered for the supply of an article on account of any one party, either in his own name or in the name of his partner, or any other person, the whole of such bids shall be rejected at the option of the Department; that copartners of any firm shall not be received as sureties for each other; and that whenever it may be deemed necessary for the interest of the Government, and the health of the crews of United States vessels to procure particular brands of flour which are known to keep best on distant stations, the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Navy, shall be authorized to procure it on the best terms in market overt.

Mr. SHIELDS. It strikes me that that is a very extraordinary power to confer upon the Department.

Mr. GWIN. If there is any objection to it, I move its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think it will be better to do that.

Mr. CLAYTON. And let it be printed.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. FISH. I move that the resolution be printed.

The PRESIDENT. That will be done, as a matter of course.

ALEXANDER G. MORGAN.

Mr. JOHNSON. There is a bill which I wish to have taken up this morning for consideration by the Senate. I have endeavored several times to have it taken up, but without success. I trust I shall not fail now. It will take but very little time. It is the bill for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Colonel Alexander G. Morgan. I would here call the attention of the Senate to the fact, that if they do not take up and pass private bills at an early day, so as to get them sent to the House, they will never get any passed in the other House—they will never even be able to get them reported from the committees to which they are referred. It so happened last year, and it will so happen again. I ask that this bill may be taken up at this time. It has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, after full investigation, and is to pay to the heirs of Colonel Morgan the residue of moneys due to him for services in the Florida war. He died at Cerro Gordo. The claim is a just one, and ought to be passed.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill is designed to give authority to the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claims of Alexander G. Morgan, of Missouri, for services in raising troops for the Florida service, in the year 1837, and also for military services in Florida; but the pay and allowances to him are not to exceed the compensation of a captain of cavalry.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported it with an amendment to limit his pay to the period from the 11th of September, 1837, to the 15th of February, 1838.

On the 18th of August, 1837, Alexander G. Morgan addressed the Secretary of War, offering to raise three hundred volunteer riflemen for the Florida service. On the 25th of August, 1837, the Secretary of War authorized General H. Atchison to raise four companies, (as spies,) to be at Tampa Bay by the 15th of October. On the 31st August, the Secretary of War replied to Colonel Morgan's offer, and expressed his gratification at it, informing him, also, that General Atchison was authorized to raise the four companies of spies. On the 5th of September, the Secretary of War acknowledged the receipt of Colonel Morgan's letter of the 12th of August, and said: "General Atchison has been instructed to accept your offer of three hundred men as spy battalions for Florida." On the 11th of September, 1837, General Atchison inclosed to A. G. Morgan a copy of the order of the Secretary of War to raise four companies of spies, and appointed him to command as lieutenant colonel. On the 6th of November, General Gaines ordered Lieutenant Colonel Morgan to equip his company of Florida spies by the 16th of November. General Armistead ordered Lieutenant Colonel Morgan's company of spies to proceed with Captain Sconcis, and report to Colonel Z. Taylor.

In February, 1838, Colonel Taylor returned his thanks to Colonel Morgan's and other companies for their soldierly conduct, and ordered them to report to the commanding general for discharge. On the 12th of January, 1838, Colonel Morgan was ordered by General Armistead to repair to Fort Gardner, and report to Colonel Taylor for field duty; on the 15th they were ordered to equip for Fort Gardner.

From these facts, it is evident that Alexander G. Morgan was appointed lieutenant colonel on the 11th of September, 1837, by General Atchison, under the authority of the Secretary of War, and discharged in February, 1838, and that he was recognized as such in all the military orders. He was not paid for these services, "because he was not regularly commissioned," but the committee, being satisfied that he acted in that capacity, reported the bill for the relief of his legal representatives.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendment was concurred in; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

SECURITIES HELD ABROAD.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed five thousand additional copies of the report from the Treasury Department, of March 2, 1854, in reply to the resolution of the Senate of April 4, 1853, respecting Federal, State, Municipal, and Corporation securities held abroad, one thousand of which shall be for the use of the Treasury Department.

I would observe at this time, that many State officers have been very kind in furnishing the information which the Secretary of the Treasury has communicated to the Senate, and I therefore ask for the adoption of the resolution, that they may have an opportunity of examining it.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I wish to avail myself of this occasion to say to the Senate, that some two months ago, perhaps, the Committee on Revolutionary Claims reported a bill "to provide for the final settlement of the claims of the officers of the revolutionary army, and of the widows and orphan children of those who died in the service." I have forborne to call it up at first, because I considered it as a private bill, and therefore supposed that it would come up in its order on private bill day. Since my notion on that point has been corrected, I have not pressed it, because I did not desire to obtrude it at any improper time. All that I design now, is to say to the Senate, that while we are providing, as we are doing most amply for the present generation, and for those who have rendered service in recent times, something is due to the soldiers of the Revolution; and I beg leave now merely to intimate my intention to call up that bill to-morrow morning, and to ask the Senate then to act upon it. I give this notice now for the further reason, that if gentlemen desire to offer amendments to it, they may have them ready at that time.

DISPOSITION OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HUNTER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill to graduate the price of the public lands; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that the bill be printed. I do not desire to have it referred to a committee. It is a subject which has been discussed for some twenty or thirty years.

The motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill to provide for the sale of certain portions of the public lands to the States within which they lie, for the purpose of constructing railroads and canals; which was read, and passed to the second reading, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. SHIELDS. Before we proceed to the consideration of the order of the day, or go into Executive session, as the case may be, I wish to ask the Senate to take up and consider a bill which was assigned for consideration at an early period of the session, but owing to the pressing of the Nebraska bill was not considered on the day fixed. It is a bill "to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes." Let me say to the Senate, that in the present condition of the Army it is almost impossible to keep up its organization unless we increase the pay of the soldiers. I am informed by the Department that the recruiting stations might as well be abandoned, for no man fit to carry a musket will serve for seven dollars a month. I hope the bill will meet with no opposition. I move that the Senate now proceed to its consideration.

Mr. RUSK. I am in favor of that bill, but it is evident that it cannot receive proper consideration this morning. It will lead to some discussion, and amendments will be offered, which we have not sufficient time now to consider properly. I think the bill ought to be passed; I believe it is absolutely necessary; but I think the chairman would be more likely to secure its passage by waiting to call it up at some time when the Senate are in a better condition to consider it than they are now. Every body sees that there is great anxiety on the part of Senators to get up bills; and the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] is desirous that we should proceed to consider Executive business. Thus it will be seen that we shall have but a short time this morning for the consideration of this bill. I will go with the honorable Senator from Illinois to have it considered as early a day as possible, for I think it should be acted on promptly.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would not call up at this time the bill to increase the Army, for that is of too much importance to be disposed of in this way; but I take it for granted that every honorable Senator knows that some increase of the pay of the Army is absolutely necessary. For that reason, I supposed this bill might be passed this morning without difficulty. Every one must know that the Department is and will be unable to enlist soldiers at seven dollars per month. The reason why I call it up this morning is this: It was assigned for a particular day at an early part of the session, but I permitted the Nebraska bill to press it out of its order, and the Department now calls upon me to have it passed. I am informed by the Department that the Army has been diminished to a large extent, and recruitment has entirely ceased, and unless this bill be passed the Army will almost be disbanded.

Mr. RUSK. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. STUART. We can pass the bill while we are talking about taking it up.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not wish to have any discussion on the bill. It has been very carefully prepared by the Secretary of War, and examined by the committee. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MASON. I do not know the mind of the Senate in regard to the bill which the Senator from Illinois has moved to take up; but it is one of that character which generally, and almost universally, induces debate.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think this bill will not.

Mr. MASON. I fear that time will be occupied by it.

Mr. PRATT. Let us see.

Mr. MASON. If it does invite any debate, I trust the Senator will consent that it may be laid on the table, or postponed, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am desirous that we should go into Executive session, as the honorable Senator very well knows; and nothing but a sense of duty would induce me to press this bill forward.

Mr. MASON. I am aware of that—

Mr. SHIELDS. And I have been somewhat upbraided for not calling it up at an earlier day.

Mr. MASON. If any debate takes place on the bill, I must ask the Senate to postpone it.

Mr. SHIELD'S motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides the monthly pay proper of the several grades of the Army shall be at the following rates: a major general, $265; a brigadier general, $165; a colonel, $135; a lieutenant colonel, $115; a major, $95; a captain of cavalry, $85; a captain of artillery and infantry, $75; a first lieutenant of cavalry, $65; a first lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $57; a second lieutenant of cavalry, $55; a second lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $47; a cadet, $33; a sergeant-major, quartermaster-sergeant, principal musician, chief bugler, principal farrier, and ordnance-sergeant, $23; to each first sergeant of a company of dragoons, mounted riflemen, artillery, and infantry, $21; to all other sergeants of those arms, $18; to a corporal of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $14; to a corporal of artillery and infantry, $13; to a farrier, blacksmith, saddler, and artificer of dragoons, mounted riflemen, and artillery, $15; to a bugler of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $12; to a musician of artillery and infantry, $11; to a private of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $11; and to a private of artillery and infantry, $10. The existing allowances are to be confined to officers when on duty, or who shall have left their posts by reason of wounds received in the line of their duty, and that officers absent from duty under any other circumstances are only to be entitled to the pay proper of their respective grades. The surgeon general and paymaster general of the Army are to be allowed the pay and emoluments of a colonel.

Every soldier, who, having been honorably discharged from the service of the United States, shall, within one month thereafter, reenlist, is to be entitled to two dollars per month in addition to the ordinary pay of his grade, for the first period of five years after the expiration of his previous enlistment, and a further sum of one dollar per month for each successive period of five years, so long as he shall remain continuously in the Army; and soldiers now in the Army, who have served one or more enlistments, and been honorably discharged, will be entitled to the benefits provided for a second enlistment. Soldiers who served in the war with Mexico, and received a certificate of merit for distinguished services, as well those now in the Army as those that may hereafter enlist, will receive the two dollars per month to which that certificate would have entitled them had they remained continuously in the service.

Non-commissioned officers who, under the authority of the seventeenth section of the act approved March 3, 1847, were recommended for promotion by brevet to the lowest grade of commissioned officer, but did not receive the benefit of that provision, will be entitled, under the condition recited in the foregoing section, to the additional pay authorized to be given to such privates as received certificates of merit.

The President of the United States to be authorized, with the consent of the Senate, to confer the brevet of second lieutenant upon such meritorious non-commissioned officers as may, under regulations to be established, be brought before an Army board, composed of four officers of rank, specially convened for the purpose, and be found qualified for the duties of commissioned officers; and to attach them to regiments, as supernumerary officers, according to the provisions of the fourth section of the act, approved April 29, 1812, entitled "An act making further provision for the corps of engineers."

The allowance to soldiers employed at work on fortifications, in surveys, in cutting roads, and other constant labor, of not less than ten days, is to be increased to twenty-five cents per day for men employed as laborers and teamsters, and forty cents per day when employed as mechanics, at all stations east of the Rocky Mountains, and to thirty-five cents and fifty cents per day, respectively, when the men are employed at stations west of those mountains.

The provisions of the first section of the act granting pensions to the widows and orphans of persons dying in the naval service, approved August 11, 1848, is to be extended to the widows and orphans of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and soldiers of the Army of the United States, including volunteers and militia, mustered into the service of the United States.

And, in addition to the number of cadets authorized by the existing laws, two are to be appointed from each State, upon the recommendation of the respective Senators.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to offer one amendment, and only one. It is in the proviso in the first section, to insert after the words "wounds received," the words "in service, or disease contracted." The clause will then read:

"Provided, That the existing allowances shall be confined to officers when on duty, or who shall have left their posts by reason of wounds received in the service, or disease contracted in the line of their duty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASS. This is an important bill, and it introduces a great many changes, some of which I do not understand very distinctly, and there is one provision about which I have very great doubt. I refer to the provision with respect to the appointment of cadets on the recommendation of the Senators from each State. I doubt very much whether any such increase of the number of cadets is necessary. I think the cadets in the Military Academy now supply officers enough for the Army. Besides, I see there is a provision in the bill that non-commissioned officers may be appointed supernumerary second lieutenants. That feature I like very much. I exceedingly doubt, however, whether any more cadets are required for the service. I should like to know the number sent out by the academy for a few years past, and how they have been absorbed, and whether or not they have all received commissions, and whether there are not a good many of them who are now supernumerary second lieutenants. These are important points bearing on the subject. I have not examined the bill, and did not know that there was such a provision in it, until I heard it read; but I very much doubt whether, in the existing state of our Army, any additional number of cadets is required.

Mr. SHIELDS. This provision has been recommended by the Department for several years past, and also by various Boards of Visitors to the Academy; and I have inserted it in the bill in consequence of those recommendations. My opinion is, that it is one of the best provisions in the bill. The number of officers which it now supplies does not even equal the necessity, and certainly will not, if a number of old and superannuated officers are removed from the service, as is contemplated by a bill which has passed this body. I can state to the honorable Senator from Michigan, that in that respect it will do no injury; but, on the contrary, will be a great benefit to the service. The Department has recommended that each Senator, as well as each Representative in the other House, should have the recommendation of a cadet. It has been recommended by the Whig administration, and also by the Democratic administration, and by the Boards of Visitors to the Military Academy for as many years as I have been in the public service.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, the question with me is not who is to recommend the cadet, but does the public service require an addition? I can see that on the passage of the bill providing for a retired list there may be a deficiency for a short time, until the vacancies created by it be supplied; but I am strongly impressed with the idea that the cadets at present are amply sufficient to furnish officers for the Army. The Academy now must furnish, I think, sixty or seventy per year; I do not know exactly the number.

Mr. SHIELDS. About sixty.

Mr. CASS. I think that sixty a year must certainly be sufficient to fill up the vacancies in our Army; but, at any rate, before such a provision as this be voted for, I think the facts should be ascertained. We should know the precise number which the academy now supplies from year to year, and whether there is any deficiency in the number of officers requiring an increase of cadets. I do not want to have a great many supernumerary officers attached to the Army; but I wish to know whether the service really does require this addition. My friend from Illinois may be perfectly right in his views. It is true that this has been pressed from year to year; but that fact does not at all supersede the necessity of our examining the subject. This may make a very important addition to the Army; and before I vote for it, I must be sure that the Army does require it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I cannot give the honorable Senator, in detail, the information for which he asks. All that I am able to state is, that upon inquiring at the Department, I ascertained that these additional cadets would be needed. If the bill to which I have referred shall become a law, many of the superannuated officers will, of necessity, be compelled to leave the service, and their places will have to be supplied; and hence, in part, the necessity of this provision. If, however, the honorable Senator thinks it is necessary, I can get the information which he wants; or he can move to strike out the provision, if he chooses.

Mr. CASS. I do not wish to move to strike it out, because I do not say that it is unnecessary. I have only to say that I cannot vote for it now, for I have not the facts before me.

Mr. SHIELDS. Rather than that the portion of the bill providing for an increase of the pay of the Army, which is essentially necessary, should fail, I am willing to consent even to strike out this provision, and to bring it up hereafter, when I shall be better prepared to give the information which is asked for. I do this because of my anxiety for the passage of the main provisions of the bill.

Mr. PETTIT. I move to amend the bill by striking out the ninth section, which provides for the appointment of two additional cadets from each State, on the recommendations of the respective Senators.

Mr. BUTLER. I cannot consent to that amendment. I agree with the honorable Senator from Illinois, that this is one of the best provisions of the bill, and I should regret to see it stricken out. By the present mode of appointment, the Senators from each State have no voice at all in nominating one of these young gentlemen to the Military Academy, and this provision will reduce the whole system to something like symmetry. I am very well inclined to the bill altogether, but I am particularly in favor of the provision which it is now proposed to strike out.

I must say, further, that I am surprised that my friend from Michigan should oppose anything looking to war. Depend upon it, sir, we may have use for these young men—for many more than we have now. I think it is best to retain this provision.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think so.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Indiana will prevail. I think the law is right as it now stands, and that Senators ought to have nothing to do with the nomination of cadets. When they are nominated as lieutenants, as soon as they graduate, their nominations are sent here for our advice and consent to their appointments; and thus we are now a part of the appointing power in relation to them. For one, I want none of the patronage which appertains to cadet appointments. I thank God I have none of it, and I do not want any of it. I will vote, therefore, with great pleasure, for the amendment.

Mr. CASS. This is not a question of patronage; and though for myself I want to have nothing to do with such appointments, and would rather avoid them, yet, if the public service requires them, I am willing to assume my portion of the responsibility. All that I want to know is, whether the public service does require this addition. In respect to the remark of the honorable Senator from South Carolina, I would say that it is because I am a friend of the Military Academy, and wish to perpetuate it, that I seek for information now. I believe that that Academy has poured into our service officers equal to any in the world. I have voted for it, and sustained it under all circumstances; and it is because I am a friend to it that I do not wish to see the number of cadets increased, unless that increase be actually necessary. The way to break it down is to send too many there.

Mr. PETTIT. I have moved to strike out this section; first, because I agree with the Senator from Michigan that we do not need this increase; and secondly, because I agree with the Senator from Iowa that this patronage ought not to be placed here, and because I do not want to exercise it. I am glad it is not in my hands. Some dozen, fifteen, twenty, or perhaps forty, for aught I know, would be applying to me for an appointment as a cadet; and then the difficulty would devolve upon me of making a proper choice; and a disappointment would necessarily follow to thirty-nine out of the forty, for but one could be appointed. It is a position which I do not desire, nor do I believe that the public service requires it.

For these reasons I have moved to strike out the ninth section of the bill.

Mr. SHIELDS. Before the vote is taken on the motion to strike out, I wish to say that I have been informed by the Department, that the service of these additional cadets is necessary, and I can depend only on the Department for that information. I agree with my honorable friend from South Carolina in regard to the importance of the Military Academy; and I say that, if you were to abolish the Army altogether, if you were to have no standing army existing in this country, this institution ought to be kept up—and why? Because it is the depository of that species of information which ought at least to exist in the country. It is a school which gathers from every quarter of the world all improvements in relation to military matters, which, by possibility, we may have occasion to make use of at some day. I hope that we shall be spared the necessity for so doing; but yet, sir, every one knows that in the present condition of the world we may, possibly, be compelled to use the instruction which these men are collecting and arranging in West Point Academy. As my honorable friend from South Carolina says, further, this provision but gives the Senators precisely what the members of the lower House now have. Gentlemen say they do not want to use this patronage; but if the additional cadets are needed, it is a duty for them to assume the responsibility of recommending them. I have already stated that the object of the War Department (and every body knows that the head of that Department is well qualified for his position) is to get out of the Army some of the superannuated officers, and to pour new and fresh blood into it, so as to make it more efficient than it ever has been. I hope he will be able to do it, and I hope his friends here will sustain him in so doing.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, I shall certainly vote against striking out this section of the bill. In the first place, it comes recommended from the head of the War Department. Whatever opinion gentlemen may entertain of the head of that Department, I think all will concede to him in military matters a degree of knowledge and familiarity which peculiarly fits him for his position. So far as the patronage to be obtained by this provision is concerned, I should be glad to avoid it if I could, because I know, as the honorable Senator from Indiana has said, that we shall have to disapprove a great many where we can gratify but one. It will be an onerous duty to perform; but the members of the House take the duty now, and in the service of the country I feel very willing to assume my share of that responsibility which is properly devolved upon me.

This increased number of cadets is said to be necessary by the head of the Department for the service of the Army. I consider it necessary in another point of view. There are improvements, railroad improvements of vast importance now going on which absolutely require competent and well-instructed engineers, and there is a scarcity of them throughout the country. Many of the cadets of the Military Academy do not and will not go into the Army after receiving so good an education as they get at West Point, but will seek vastly more profitable employment in the private walks of life; and they will greatly benefit the country by their participation in these improvements. Under these circumstances, I think it would be wrong to strike out the section.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope that the section will not be stricken out. I am better satisfied as to its propriety since I have heard the remarks of other gentlemen than I was before. The class of young men who graduate at West Point come from all sections of the Union. They mingle there and diffuse themselves into society, or go into the Army; and wherever they go, they generally carry with them an excellent influence. They learn what young men at home frequently do not learn—something of the restraints of discipline. They are intelligent; they are willing to submit to discipline; they devote themselves to the useful pursuits of life; and whenever a war shall be declared, calling for the service of the young men of the country, whether they are in the Army or not in the Army, they will be prepared to take that responsible command on which we can safely rely. I sustain this provision, further, upon the broad ground that I am perfectly willing to increase the number of cadets at the West Point Academy, because it is a legitimate power which Congress has to provide for war, and I think this is one of the most commendable modes of doing it; and it is the most equal in distributing the advantages of the Treasury of the country to the different States of the Union. It is fair and equal.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I shall vote for sustaining this clause; and I look, in doing so, to the condition of the Army, and of the country in time of peace and in time of war. I believe that our Army is the best Army in the world; and the reason is, that our officers are the only officers in the world, practically; for all of them are educated to be common soldiers as well as officers, not only in a particular line of the Army, but in every line of the Army. Every cadet is educated and trained to practice all the duties of a common soldier; and he is educated to perform all the duties of an artillery officer, of an infantry officer, of a cavalry officer, and also, of an officer of the scientific corps, which is always attached to the Army. Hence it is, that whenever you call the American officers into the field, they are able to train and prepare an effective army. I believe that if you increase the number of cadets, and so the number of officers, you will be able, in fact, to diminish the rank and file in proportion to that increase. So much, I think, is shown by the operations of the Mexican war.

Now, in regard to peace. The number of officers now educated at West Point is the same, or practically the same, that it has been for many years past; but recently we have enlarged the boundaries of this country; we have increased immeasurably the operations of the Government in the way of military fortifications, defenses, internal improvements, and military roads. We have need for more officers with the great increase and extent of the country, and with the military and civic operations of the country. Besides, this is our best school for the education of engineers—not only military, but civil engineers.

In regard to the mode of constituting this appointment, I think that now practiced, and that proposed in the bill, is the most equal, and the most republican. Other appointments may go by political favor; but this is sure to bring into the Military Academy a number of persons every year, equally from each part of the country, without the least shadow of inequality, and to bring into it a number of men proportioned to the power of the political parties in Congress.

I see no reason why the Senators should not have in these appointments the same influence, or the same power, which is exercised by the members of the House of Representatives. Why not? Are we not as capable? It is said here that we have the power of appointing these persons, by being called upon to advise and consent upon their appointment to commissions by the President of the United States when they come to be nominated as officers of the Army, after having passed through the Military Academy. But, sir, it will be seen, on a moment's reflection, that we exercise, practically, no such power. These persons are nominated now, and are practically appointed, for cadets, by the members of the House of Representatives. They do not come here at all to obtain their warrants; but after they have graduated at the Academy at West Point, they are nominated by the President, as a matter of course, for promotion, when chances for promotion occur; and it is universally the fact that the Senate gives its consent at once, without inquiry and without objection. It is the principle upon which the whole Army is constituted, and no objection prevails, unless it be one to the Academy; and such a one I have never seen arise here.

With these views I sustain this provision, whatever may be the inconvenience which may attach to the exercise of such a duty as will be devolved on Senators; still it will be a duty to perform like everything else, which must be assumed for the benefit of the country.

—Mr. CLAYTON. I think it is very apparent, Mr. President—

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senator will yield me the floor, to enable me to move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. CLAYTON. I only wish to occupy the attention of the Senate for a few minutes.

Mr. MASON. Other gentlemen desire to debate the question.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then I will not ask to be heard. I only wished to make a suggestion.

Mr. MASON. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am willing to let the bill go over, under the circumstances.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 21, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER presented to the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of the Interior in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 13th ultimo, covering tabular statements, exhibiting:

First. The area of each State and Territory, expressed in square miles and acres.

Second. The extent of public domain now remaining in each State and Territory, expressed in acres.

Third. The extent of public domain alienated by the Government of the United States in each State and Territory, distinguishing between that sold for a valuable consideration, and that given, granted, ceded, or conveyed for the purposes of education, public buildings, internal improvements, and miscellaneous objects.

On motion by Mr. HAVEN, the papers were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting an estimate of the cost of a breakwater for the protection of the custom-house site at Point Isabel, Texas; and, also, a copy of a letter received from Stephen Powers, Esq., collector at that port, in regard to the necessity of such a structure; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE here obtained the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman give way for a moment to allow me to ask the unanimous consent of the House to present certain papers?

Mr. MURRAY. I have a report I desire to make from the Committee on Printing, which I believe is always in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know the nature of the proposition which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] desires to make, and until he is informed he cannot decide whether the gentleman from New York can take the floor from him.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask the gentleman to allow me a moment of his time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois, if thereby I do not lose my right to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will state for the introduction of what papers he asks the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask it for the purpose of presenting joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Illinois relative to a grant of land by Congress to the Great Northwestern Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the resolutions will be received.

The resolutions were then ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT OF PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Printing on the part of the House, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed by the printer of the House one hundred thousand extra copies of the Agricultural Report of the Commissioner of Patents, for the use of the members of the House, and ten thousand for the use of the Patent Office, together with the plates.

The number recommended in the resolution is the same number which has heretofore been printed by the House. It will give four hundred copies to each member. I move the previous question upon the passage of the resolution.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MURRAY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken; and the latter motion was agreed to.

CUSTOM-HOUSES, ETC.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have taken the floor, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of redeeming a promise made by me, pending the discussion upon the deficiency bill, that I would avail myself of the first opportunity of taking the sense of the House with regard to taking up and disposing of, in the Committee of the Whole, the separate bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, providing appropriations for the construction of custom-houses and marine hospitals. With a view of taking the sense of the House upon that subject, therefore, I now submit the motion, that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is to take the vote upon the motion just submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky, to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair will state, however, that if the motion should be voted down the business regularly before the House will then be the call of committees for reports.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope, then, the House will vote down the motion to go into committee; and will allow us to have the morning hour spent in calling committees for reports.

The question was taken; and the House refused to go into committee.

RESOLUTIONS OF LEGISLATURE OF ILLINOIS.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the General Assembly of Illinois: In favor of the passage of a law by Congress, granting land to aid in the construction of a railroad from the most feasible point on the west shore of Lake Michigan to the mineral region of Lake Superior; in favor of so modifying the existing tariff laws as to remove entirely the duty on sugar, molasses, and railroad iron, and have them placed on the free list; and in favor of a grant by Congress of such lands as they may deem just and necessary to aid in completing, at as early a day as it is practicable, a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara, in accordance with the act of the Legislature of New York upon that subject, passed July 21, 1853.

The joint resolutions were laid upon the table; and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The regular business now in order is the call of committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. DUNBAR, who said: I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a joint resolution of the State of Louisiana, with regard to a grant of land by Congress to aid in the construction of a railroad from Mobile to New Orleans, with a view of having it read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. It will be received, and so referred.

Mr. DUNBAR. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana, that objection will most certainly be made to the reading of the resolution, and that will shut out its reception altogether.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. DUNBAR. The resolution is very short, and I think should be read. I have observed that it has been the usual custom to have the resolutions of sovereign States read and referred in open House, and I think it is a very proper custom. At any rate it has usually been done, and I therefore ask to have this resolution read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair somewhat hastily announced that the resolution would be received and referred unless objection be made. If, however, the gentleman requires that it shall be read, the Chair decides that he is in time; and the question now is, whether the House will, by unanimous consent, receive the resolution, and allow it to be read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and be printed?

Mr. JONES, of New York. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the resolution cannot be introduced.

Mr. HAVEN. I apprehend this irregular business will continue unless some one arrests it. I therefore call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already announced that the regular order of business is the call of committees for reports; and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] was upon the floor for the purpose of making a report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DUNBAR. With the gentleman's permission, I will make an inquiry of the Chair. What has become of the resolution which I asked should be introduced, read, and ordered to be printed? I do not understand what has been the action of the House on it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution was not received. The Chair stated, for the benefit of the gentleman and the House, and he is sorry that he was not understood, that he very hurriedly announced, unless objection was made it would be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed. The Chair heard no objection at the moment. In the mean time, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUNBAR] arose, and insisted on the reading of the resolution. Then the gentleman from New York [Mr. JONES] objected to its being read, and therefore to its reception.

Mr. DUNBAR. I would ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw his objection, and allow the resolution to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES. I had no objection to that portion of the gentleman's original motion, but I was opposed to the useless consumption of time in the reading of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Then, if there be no objection the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report adversely on the joint resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama, which asked of Congress a grant of the public lands for the purpose of making a geological survey of that State. Previous to submitting the report, however, I want to relieve the minds of members in relation to the action of that committee in one particular.

Gentlemen have long complained because we have, in the discharge of our duty in making reports to the House on questions referred to the committee, occupied what they considered too much time. We have a number of reports in our possession ready to make, but not desiring to subject ourselves to the constant charge of occupying nearly the whole time of the House, we shall not do so now. We have resolved in committee this morning to make no reports in reference to grants for railroad purposes, until the Committee on Public Lands shall have been called a second time. We desire to obviate the objection, that we consume all the time of the House. We are willing to forego the privilege which we now have.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman from Alabama shall continue his speech?

Mr. COBB. I am through. I regret that I can never make explanation while many others are indulged.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is out of order.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Alabama will take his seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order in continuing his speech.

Mr. COBB. Can I submit another report?

The SPEAKER. If it be from the committee the gentleman can.

The Chair must say, in justice to himself, that he feels he occupies his present position for the very purpose of preserving order, and the gentleman must indulge him in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. COBB. I can with great propriety answer that, but I shall refrain from doing so. Other members are out of order frequently in their remarks, and they are allowed to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is not in order in casting reflections on the motives of the Chair.

Mr. COBB. The Chair is right in his view of the question.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Alabama is wrong.

Mr. COBB. I move that the adverse report on the resolutions be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported adversely on the following petitions; which were laid upon the table:

Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Ohio, in favor of the homestead bill;

Petition of sundry citizens asking for grants of the public land for school and other purposes;

Petition of George Wright and one hundred and thirteen other citizens, in relation to grants of the public land to actual settlers;

Petition of sundry citizens, in favor of the homestead bill;

Memorial of William Morris and thirty-four others, citizens of the State of Ohio, in favor of stopping the further sale of the public land;

Memorial of — Adam and twenty-nine other citizens, in relation to homesteads;

Petition of two hundred citizens of Pennsylvania, asking a grant of one hundred and sixty acres of the public land to each head of a family; and Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Indiana, in relation to the stopping of the further sale of the public land.

Mr. COBB also reported back a bill "to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands;" which was laid upon the table, a substitute for said bill having been heretofore reported by the committee.

Mr. COBB also reported back with an amendment, a bill to authorize the States in which sixteenth sections are situated to relinquish such lands reserved or granted for the use of schools as may be comparatively valueless or unfit for cultivation, and to select other lands in lieu thereof.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COBB also reported back a bill "to grant to the State of Alabama, and other States having public lands therein, the unsold and unappropriated public lands that have been in market for twenty years and upwards, for purposes of education and internal improvements."

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COBB also reported adversely on bills of the following titles; which were ordered to lie upon the table:

A bill granting the right of way and a donation of public lands to the State of Alabama, to aid in the construction of the Cohabo Valley railroad, in said State; and

A bill granting the right of way to the State of Alabama, and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Winchester, in Tennessee, to some point on the Tennessee river, at or near Deposit, Alabama.

Mr. COBB said, (in reference to the last bill,) if I was allowed to do so, I would say something to my friend from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] in reference to that bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. You have made a very sensible report on it.

Mr. COBB. There is another bill which I desire to report, and have put upon its passage. It will take but two or three minutes to pass it. Should the House not be disposed to pass it, I propose to have it referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

The bill was then read the first and second time by its title, as follows:

A bill to authorize the school commissioners of the fractional township No. 1, range No. 10 east, in Alabama, to locate one section of land for school purposes.

The bill was then read through by the Clerk.

Mr. COBB. There is an amendment reported with the bill. The object of the bill must be clearly apparent to all who have listened to the reading of it by the Clerk. The township for which this bill makes provision is divided by the line between the States of Georgia and Alabama. The law that now exists authorizes persons of this township to select half a section of land for school purposes, and this bill only proposes that they may locate that half section in a legal subdivision; for instance, in forty acre grants. These citizens never knew until recently that they had any rights in relation to the lands in question, which have been in market for at least twenty or thirty years. The lands in the State have all been taken up except the mountain lands. If you require these citizens who have slept upon their rights so long to locate in a tract of half a section, and take the whole half section in a body, then they will not get the benefit they would if you allow them to locate this land anywhere in fractional townships in forty acre tracts. Will you compel these people to locate half a section for school purposes in one body, whether worthless or not, or will you allow them to locate it in forty acre tracts upon the summit of the mountains? That is all there is in the bill. Will the House entertain the proposition, and put the bill upon its passage, or will they refer it to a Committee of the Whole House?

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed, and read a third time.

Mr. LETCHER. I would like to know why they did not get the sixteenth sections in that township before?

Mr. COBB. I stated the matter fully, but I know the great difficulty that there is in hearing in the House. I know that I can scarcely be heard myself sometimes, though I believe I speak as loud as most men. I will repeat, for the information of the gentleman from Virginia, that the line between the State of Georgia and the State of Alabama runs through the township in question, and of course the sixteenth section is in that part which lies in the State of Georgia. There is no sixteenth section in that part of the township belonging to the State of Alabama, and the inhabitants never knew that, under the existing law, they had a right heretofore to take as much as half a section in lieu thereof. The existing law authorized them to do it without the necessity of their coming to Congress. But this bill provides that they may take it in tracts of forty acres; whereas, if they acted under the original law, they would have to take in one body a half section, and thereby get perhaps some twenty-five or thirty acres of good land in the entire location. But if they are allowed to take it as this bill provides, in tracts of forty acres, they may get as much as thirty or thirty-five acres in each tract.

Mr. LETCHER. The explanation of the gentleman from Alabama is satisfactory; but I must say that this is one of the very few instances in which the citizens of a new State or Territory—barbarous as it may appear—actually forgot to take the land they were entitled to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the following amendment:

Strike out the following words, "is hereby authorized to enter, free of charge, one section of land in legal subdivisions anywhere in said township;" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "is hereby authorized to enter, free of charge, anywhere in the lands to which it is entitled by the existing law, half a section of land in legal subdivisions anywhere in said township."

The question was taken; and the amendment was adopted.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB. I propose to amend the title of the bill, as follows: insert between the words "one" and "section" the word "half," so as to make it read "one half section of land."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back House bill No. 64, which I had referred early in the session. It proposes the extension of the bounty land laws to certain officers, soldiers, and so forth. While we had it under consideration the Committee on Private Land Claims reported a bill which is precisely such a one as I desired to have, and which has passed and become a law. I am, therefore, instructed to report back the bill which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands on that subject, and ask to have it laid on the table.

It was so ordered.

Mr. COBB. I am also instructed by the same committee to report a joint resolution providing for the relief of the heirs of bounty land claimants, who have died between certain times; that is, before they obtained the benefit of the law, and after the filing of their papers. The resolution provides for the case of an individual entitled to bounty lands who has filed his application, and afterwards died before his claim was adjudicated; one or two years may perhaps have elapsed before the patent issues, leaving neither widow nor minor heir.

The present law, according to the construction of the Secretary of the Interior, which I believe an improper construction, has excluded such individual's legal heirs from the benefit to which he was entitled. This resolution proposes to obviate that difficulty, and I offer a bill, accompanying it, which was drawn up with great care by the Commissioner of Pensions. I ask that the bill be now read; and then it can be referred to act upon as the House may think proper.

The bill was then read by its title, as follows:

A bill to amend a certain act granting bounty lands to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States; approved September 28, 1850, and March 22, 1852.

Mr. COBB. There are three propositions contained in the bill which has just been read. My opinion in relation to the various bounty land laws—and I have had some considerable agency, and have taken a prominent part in assisting their passage through the House, and therefore ought to know something in relation to them—is that they provide for all the cases comprehended in this bill. But the proper Department of the Government has construed it differently, and hence arises the necessity of these additional provisions.

In the first place, the bill just reported provides that an individual may make his application for a bounty land warrant, and in case of his death, before the warrant is granted, it makes certain provisions to meet the case. An individual may now make an application for a bounty land warrant, and if, before the application is considered and decided upon by the Pension Office—and every man who has been a member of this body for four or five years, and had occasion to transact business at that office, as I have had, is fully aware of the tardiness with which business is transacted there, and that applications are frequently thrust aside for a long time, and in many instances a period of one or two years elapse before the cases are considered and decided—I say, that in such circumstances, according to the construction given to the present law by the Department, if that man dies, although he may have made the application two years before the period of his death, though it may be but one day before the warrant is issued by the Department, and though the delay and neglect was wholly the fault of the Department, yet if he leave no widow or minor heirs his estate is cut off from any benefit of it. Now, I ask this House if that is right? Is it right that his estate should be deprived of the benefit of the warrant when the individual has been at great expense in making out the papers and obtaining the evidence to sustain his claim; when the delay has not arisen from any default of his own; and when, by an act of Providence, he has been taken away before the patent is issued? I know you will agree with me that it is not.

Again, in the preparation of the papers, and the procurement of evidence, and the employment perhaps of agents to attend to his claim, he has contracted obligations and made promises, which must be fulfilled out of his estate, and which are a charge thereon. Now, with this state of facts existing, the question is, will you let his estate have the benefit of the eighty or one hundred and sixty acres, or whatever it may be, or will you allow it to be lost entirely to his estate? The first proposition contained in the bill which I have presented, provides for it.

Allow me to say, before I proceed to the further consideration of the several subjects embraced in this bill, that it was drawn up by the Commissioner of Pensions, with great care and with great ability, as you will see by attending to the language of the bill. I claim no credit on that score.

The second proposition of the bill is one which I intended to embrace, and supposed was embraced, in the bill which I introduced and assisted in having passed through Congress on a former occasion, but which, under the construction given to it by the Department, has not the effect intended. The provision is, that if a woman be a widow at the period of the passage of the bill—although she may have married a second time, after the death of a husband who had absolutely rendered service to this country—if she be a widow at the time of the passage of the bill, she shall be entitled to the benefit of one, or both, provided she do not get more than one hundred and sixty acres of land.

The position of the Department upon that part of the bill is this: They so construe it that when the first husband of a lady has rendered the service, and she has afterwards married, even though her second husband was dead at the time of the passage, although she is a widow, and the widow we intended to provide for by that bill, yet she is not allowed to receive bounty land. Is that right? If it be the sense of the House to give the law that construction, they can indicate it by striking out this portion of the bill. But I think that any one who will examine that law, must come to the conclusion that its intention was to provide for giving bounty land to those who were the widows at the time of the passage of the law, whether they had married again, and the second husband died in the mean time or not. The Department, however, has decided that, under the existing laws, these widows, if their husbands have died, cannot have a warrant issued for their benefit, and it will be for the House to determine whether this construction of the law shall continue.

Inow proceed to the third proposition. As I have before remarked, I believe the present law ought to be so construed as to supersede the necessity of this action; but they have seen proper to give a different construction, and hence we have deemed this proposition necessary. This bill provides that when the heir was a minor at the time of the passage of the original law he shall be entitled to receive the benefits of law. We have deemed this provision eminently proper, and just. And why? Here is an heir who was eighteen years old at the time of the passage of the original law. He makes his application through his guardian at the Department, but owing to the tardiness of the guardian in collecting the necessary evidence, the heir becomes of age, and is shut out from the benefits of the act. If that was the intention of Congress in passing the original law, and the House think it is the proper construction, all they have to do is to reject our recommendation; but I am satisfied that it was the intention of the House in passing that law to provide, first, for the soldiers then alive; second, for the widows of the soldiers who had died, which were then widows, and then for the heirs who were minors at the time of the passage of the act, whether they were minors at the time of the issuance of the warrant or not.

Under the construction which has been given by the Department, warrants have been issued to heirs who were minors at the time of the issuance of such warrants, and they have been denied to others who were minors when the act was passed, but who have become of age before the warrant would have been issued. Now the question is, will the House agree to the proposition that this latter class of persons shall have the benefit of the act, or will they allow the construction of the Department to stand, and after they have been at the expense of having their papers made out, suffer them to be denied the benefit of the bounty land act? Gentlemen know how difficult it is for guardians to procure such evidence in many cases. Two or three years will often elapse before the papers are completed, and then, when they come to the Department, and ask for the issuance of the patent, it is discovered that the heir has become of age, and the warrant is refused. Will the House so amend the law as to give the construction which I maintain should have been given to the original law, or will they vote the amendment down? That is the question for them to decide.

For myself, I will say that this is a question to which I have given a great deal of consideration, and I am satisfied the proposition is right. I am perfectly satisfied, because I introduced the first bounty land act into this House, and I know it was my intention that it should receive the construction this bill provides for giving it. I have had more to do with these bounty land laws than any other member of Congress, and I think my opinions in this respect are therefore entitled to some consideration upon the part of the House. I demand the previous question; but if any gentleman wishes to make the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I will not insist upon the motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw the demand for the previous question, to enable me to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. COBB. I am satisfied that if the demand for the previous question is withdrawn, and the bill thrown open to amendments, that every species of amendment which has ever been presented in reference to this bounty land question will be offered. The bill may perhaps be so trammelled with amendments as to defeat the very objects it was designed to effect. I therefore think I had better insist upon my demand for the previous question, and if the House will not sustain me, let them vote it down.

Mr. BROOKS. I hope that the gentleman from Alabama will not insist on his call for the previous question. I have an amendment to submit.

Mr. COBB. There are many other bills pending before the House to which the gentleman can attach his proposition. This is a single measure, and I trust that it will be speedily acted on.

Mr. BISSELL. I would ask the gentleman from Alabama what is the nature of the bill?

Mr. COBB. The bill contemplates nothing more nor less than carrying out what was intended by the passage of the bounty land law. It places a proper construction on that law. I know I am satisfied more of the intentions of those who passed the bounty land law than any other member present.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think that the bill had better be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I submit that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has called for the previous question, and he declines to withdraw his call.

Mr. JONES. Then I move that the bill do lie upon the table.

Mr. COBB. I withdraw the call for the previous question, and allow the House to take the bill into their own hands, and do with it what they choose.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw the motion that the bill be laid upon the table, and move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed; on which motion I call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded; and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then taken; and the motion was agreed to, there being, on a division—ayes 79, noes not counted.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill, which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

A bill to provide for the compensation of district land officers for the performance of certain duty now required of them by law.

Mr. WARREN. I am instructed, by the same committee, to report back Senate bill, (No. 228,) with the recommendation that it do pass. It is the same bill which I attempted to put on its passage when it came to the House from the Senate. It provides for the right of preemption to actual settlers on lands reserved for railroad purposes. The provisions of the bill sufficiently explain themselves. I hope the House will at once put the bill upon its passage.

The title of the bill was reported, as follows:

An act for the relief of settlers on lands reserved for railroad purposes.

The bill was read. It provides that every settler on lands withdrawn from market in consequence of proposed railroads, who had settled thereon prior to such withdrawal, shall be entitled to preemption at the ordinary minimum to the lands so settled on and cultivated.

Mr. ORR. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed.

Mr. WARREN. I regard the passage of this bill as important; and if it is in order, I will move to suspend the rules, to enable it to be put upon its passage.

Mr. ORR. That is not necessary.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to move to suspend the rules; nor is it necessary. If the House refuses to commit the bill, the question will recur upon ordering it to a third reading.

Mr. WARREN. Then I hope the House will refuse to commit the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. What is the object of the bill?

Mr. ORR. It is to give the right of preemption to actual settlers on the lands reserved for railroad purposes.

The question was then taken on Mr. ORR's motion, and it was decided in the negative; there being, on a division—ayes 38, noes not counted.

So the House refused to commit the bill.

Mr. ORR. The bill, then, is now upon its passage?

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. ORR. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. WARREN,] if, in the bill granting alternate sections of the public lands to the Arkansas railroad, there was not a provision which required that the sections reserved to the Government should be put up at public sale, and sold?

Mr. WARREN. Does the gentleman refer to the Iowa bill?

Mr. ORR. No; to the Arkansas railroad bill passed last session.

Mr. WARREN. There was such a provision in that bill.

Mr. ORR. That was my recollection of it, and for that reason I moved to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The Government, in these railroad grants, gives to the companies the alternate sections within six miles of the roads; but if they cannot get the full complement within six miles, they may go fifteen. Outside of the six miles there is no appreciation in the value of the reserved lands.

Now, this proposition is to allow the settlers, who may have gone upon the lands, perhaps since—

Mr. WARREN. No, sir.

Mr. ORR. Well, it applies to those already on the lands, and it allows them to enter the lands at $2 50 an acre. Now, part of the compensation which the Government is to derive from the grants of these alternate sections is the increased price of the reserved sections even beyond $2 50 an acre. Some of the lands already sold near these lines of railroad have been sold for $4, $5, $6, and $7 an acre, and the effect of this bill will be to restrict the Government from getting more than $2 50 an acre for the reserved lands. For that reason I do not think the bill ought to be passed. I am opposed to it, and I hope that it will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or rejected.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If I understand the object of this bill, it is to secure to persons who are settled along the lines of railroads the right of occupancy which they had acquired prior to the passage of the railroad laws. If I am right in this view, then, in my opinion, the bill is right, and should be passed. If those persons had acquired the right of occupancy prior to the passage of the alternate section railroad bill, nothing in those bills should be considered or enacted to deprive those settlers of the rights which had thus accrued. I suppose the bill secures to these occupants the right to enter lands at the minimum price of $1 25 per acre, and this I think is right. I am no advocate of vested rights, as they are sometimes called by politicians and lawyers; but here is a right which has accrued to the citizens who have settled upon those lands, and to say the least of it, in my opinion, it would be acting very badly upon the part of the Government to deprive them of such right under the law giving lands to companies to build railroads.

Mr. ORR. I do not understand that there is any necessity to protect them in their original rights. The railroad bill itself exempts from the operation of alternate grants those persons who have gone upon the lands and have preempted them, and where they were put in a position to enjoy them. Upon examination of the bill, I am inclined to the opinion that it does not require them to pay $2 50 per acre, but only requires them to pay $1 25.

Mr. JONES. That is right.

Mr. ORR. I do not think that it is right, and I do not believe that we ought to pass the bill.

Mr. JONES. I move the previous question. Upon the demand for seconding the previous question, a division being had, there were—ayes 66, noes not counted.

Mr. JONES demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order now to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I submit that motion. The question was put on the motion to lay the bill on the table, and a division was called for.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the question being put, there were—yeas 43, nays 142; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bocoek, Boyce, Chastain, Cullum, Dent, Franklin, Fuller, Giddings, Grey, Daniel T. Jones, Keitt, Kittredge, Leicher, Lyon, Macdonald, McNaught, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Peck, Pratt, Puryear, Robbins, Rufin, Sabin, Tracy, Vail, Wade, Walbridge, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, and Wheeler—43.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Barksdale, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cowin, Cox, Crocker, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmonds, Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Gamble, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hester, Hill, Houston, Hughes, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Lindley, McCulloch, McDougall, McMullin, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Middleworth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pringle, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sage, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stevens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vansant, Wadley, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollicoffer—142.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

Previous to the Speaker announcing the result, Mr. INGERSOLL asked the unanimous consent of the House to vote, and voted "No."

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs pardon. The Chair understood the gentleman to ask to change his vote.

Mr. INGERSOLL. No. I merely asked the unanimous consent of the House to vote.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. EDGERTON. Mr. Speaker, is the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired; but the House has ordered the main question to be now put, which is controlling.

The bill was then read a third time by its title.

Mr. ORR. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move the previous question upon it.

Mr. ORR. That motion is debatable, I believe. Is it not, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. COBB. Has the gentleman the floor to debate it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina made the motion, and is still upon the floor, and entitled to speak to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would inquire of the Chair whether the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to submit a motion, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I wish, at as early a period as possible, to reach the bill which is lying upon your table for the organization of the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman that he cannot, under the rules of the House, take the floor from the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] for the purpose of making such a motion.

Mr. ORR. I have no objection to yielding the floor to the gentleman from Illinois, for I suppose I should be entitled to it again upon my motion tomorrow morning?

The SPEAKER. Under the common practice of the House the gentleman would.

Mr. EDGERTON. Is it in order to move to go to business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. EDGERTON. Then I make the motion. Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was put upon the latter motion; and there were, upon a division—ayes 74, noes 112; whereupon

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. BOCOCK. I wish to propound a question to the Chair, for the purpose of informing myself in relation to the order of succession of business. I wish to know of the Speaker whether the bill for the organization of the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas can come up in the Committee of the Whole for consideration without laying aside every other bill upon the Calendar which is before it; and, among others, the bill providing for the construction of six steam-frigates?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House, the Chair would state that it is not competent to move, in committee, to take up a bill unless it be the first upon the Calendar, except they are general appropriation bills. To reach a bill not first upon the Calendar, the motion must be to lay aside numbers 1, 2, 3, &c., until you reach the bill you desire to take up. You cannot move to take up a particular bill unless it be one of the appropriation bills. The committee is confined, under the rules, to the bills in their order as marked upon the Calendar.

Mr. CUTTING. Will the chairman of the committee which reported the Nebraska bill allow me to ask him if it is his intention to take up that bill in committee?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly it is.

Mr. CUTTING. I desire to make a single suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CUTTING. I do not wish to enter into any debate, but merely to make a suggestion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole is not debatable. I object to any discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman then cannot make his suggestion.

The question was then taken, and decided in the negative—yeas 84, nays 108; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Barksdale, Benton, Bliss, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Caruthers, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craige, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dent, Dowdell, Dunbar, Elliott, English, Ewing, Faulkner, Florence, Goode, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Wiley P. Harris, Henn, Hlibbard, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Latham, Lindley, McDougall, McDougall, McMullin, McQueen, Macy, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Rufin, Seward, Shaw, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, John J. Taylor, Vail, Walsh, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollicoffer—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Corwin, Crocker, Cullum, Cutting, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmonds, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Gamble, Giddings, Goodrich, Green, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Hester, Hill, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Knox, Lane, Lilly, Lyon, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Maurice, Mayall, Meacham, Middleworth, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Seymour, Shannon, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vansant, Wadley, Walbridge, Wadley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel

Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, and Yates—108.

So the House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question then recurred upon the motion to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table; and, having been taken, was decided in the affirmative.

TWO JUDICIAL DISTRICTS FOR ARKANSAS.

The House then proceeded to take up from the Speaker's table and consider House bill (No. 14) to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Arkansas into two judicial districts;" which had been returned from the Senate with an amendment.

The bill and amendment were read by the Clerk.

The bill provides, that upon conviction of offenders in the western judicial district of the State of Arkansas for offenses to which punishment by confinement in the penitentiary is annexed, it shall be lawful for the court before convictions have or may be had, to sentence convicts to undergo imprisonment in the penitentiary house of the State, in the eastern judicial district, in the same manner as though the penitentiary house was situated in the western judicial district of the State; and that the counties of Sevier and Sebastian, in said State, are hereby added to and made a part of the said western judicial district.

The amendment to the bill is as follows:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That when any person shall be convicted, in the district court for the western district of Arkansas, of any offense, committed after the passage of this act, the punishment or part of the punishment whereof is imprisonment by the laws now existing, the said punishment or part of the punishment shall be confinement and imprisonment, with hard labor, for the same length of time, and shall be carried into effect as provided in the preceding section.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That nothing contained in the twenty-fifth section of an act entitled "An act to regulate intercourse with the Indian tribes, and preserve peace on the frontiers," approved 30th of June, 1834, shall be construed to extend or apply to said Indian country any of the laws enacted for the District of Columbia, and that nothing contained in the twentieth section of the said act, which provides for the punishment of offenses therein specified, shall be construed to extend to any Indian committing said offenses in the Indian country, or to any Indian committing any offense who has been punished by the local law of the tribe, or in any case where, by treaty stipulations, the exclusive jurisdiction over such offenses may now or hereafter be secured to said Indian tribes, respectively, and anything in said act inconsistent with this act be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That any white person who shall hereafter set fire, or attempt to set fire, to any house, out-house, cabin, stable, or other building, in said Indian country, to whomsoever belonging; and any Indian who shall set fire to any house, out-house, cabin, stable, or other building, in said Indian country, belonging to or in lawful possession of a white person, in whole or in part, and whether the same be consumed or not, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall be punished by confinement and imprisonment, with hard labor, for not more than twenty-one nor less than two years.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That any white person who shall make an assault upon an Indian, or other person, or any Indian who shall make an assault upon a white person, within said Indian country, with a gun, rifle, sword, pistol, knife, or any other deadly weapon, with intent to kill or maim the person so assaulted, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall, on conviction, be punished with confinement and imprisonment, with hard labor, for not more than five years, nor less than one year.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That in all criminal cases, upon indictment, for offenses committed in said Indian country, prior to the creation of said western district of Arkansas, now pending in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Arkansas, process for witnesses residing or to be found in said western district may issue to the marshal of said eastern district, and be executed by him in any part of said western district; and that the fees of all witnesses so summoned shall be paid by the United States.

Mr. PECKHAM. Is it in order to refer the bill and amendment to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. PECKHAM. I make that motion.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the motion. There are one or two simple amendments to it, to which I am sure there will be no objection. It is very important that the bill should be passed at the earliest possible moment, and I hope we shall pass it at once.

Mr. PECKHAM. If the gentleman will consent to have the bill laid aside for the present, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. GREENWOOD. It will take but a moment to pass the bill. I will explain the amendment in a few words, if the gentleman desires to hear the explanation.

Mr. PECKHAM. I do not. I desire that the matter may be disposed of as soon as possible, and if the gentleman will allow it to pass over informally, or to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I have no objection. Otherwise I shall insist upon my motion to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Of course I do not wish the bill to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. My object was to have the bill put upon its passage, and I still desire that it should be so disposed of; but if the gentleman insists upon his motion, it will be for the House to say what shall be done with it.

Mr. PECKHAM. Does the gentleman object to its being passed over informally?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would rather it should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary than to be passed over informally; but if the gentleman will withdraw the motion, I think I can satisfy him and the House in a moment that the amendment is a perfectly proper one.

Mr. PECKHAM. I ask that the gentleman will adopt one course or the other.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I cannot.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then I insist upon my motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I do not think that the bill will give rise to debate.

The SPEAKER. Motion is made that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The gentleman from Arkansas—

Mr. PECKHAM. I call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late. The gentleman from Arkansas is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will briefly state the reasons which induce me to oppose the motion submitted by the gentleman from New York. I have been asked by the gentlemen of the Committee on the Judiciary whether the bill was before the committee of the Senate; I answered that it had been. The amendments which have been read by the Clerk were made to the bill in the Senate.

The object of the measure is to authorize the district court of the western district of Arkansas to proceed to sentence some thirty or forty convicts, now lying in jail, to the penitentiary, which is situated within the eastern district. They have been confined in jail for some two years, without authority of law in the court to sentence them to undergo the imprisonment which they would have undergone if the law had been complete.

The Senate thought proper to adopt one or two amendments to the criminal laws of the United States, with a view to remedy the defects which were ascertained to exist in the criminal code, and which have grown up in the practice of the western district of Arkansas. One of the defects was this: A case arose where a member of the Creek nation, who had been engaged in selling spirituous liquors in the nation, in violation of its laws, was arrested by the authorities of his own country. The grand jury of the western district of Arkansas thought proper to indict him for the same offense. Thus a conflict of jurisdiction grew up, and the Senate thought proper to make a provision to the effect that, when an individual guilty of an offense of that character, and others similar, had been tried and punished in the Creek or any other nation, such trial and conviction should be a bar to subsequent prosecution in the district court of the United States.

It was also ascertained by the Senate Committee that there was no law in existence which would punish an individual for an assault with intent to murder, where there had been no battery. The district court at Van Buren had decided that there was no law to punish an individual for an assault with an intent to murder, unless there had been an actual battery. Hence the Senate deemed it best to propose an amendment in that respect. Many aggravated cases had arisen; but the district attorney, in consequence of the defect in the criminal law, could not prefer indictments. Another amendment was to provide for the punishment of the crime of arson, or an attempt to commit it, in the nation.

Those are the only amendments which the Senate have attached to the bill. They are simple and plain in their character. I have stated them, that the Committee on the Judiciary may be exactly informed of what is intended to be passed. I trust that the House will refuse to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it will be put on its passage. There is a great and urgent necessity for this law now. As I have already stated, there have been some thirty or forty prisoners in jail for two years without any law to sentence them.

Mr. PECKHAM. If the gentleman will consent to call for the previous question on the passage of the bill, I will withdraw my motion to refer.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I will do so.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then I withdraw my motion to refer.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman having withdrawn his motion to commit, I call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If it be in order, I renew the motion which has been withdrawn, that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put, being upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate was again read.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

LOCATORS OF SWAMP LANDS.

Bill of the Senate "for the relief of purchasers and locators of swamp and overflowed lands," was then taken from the table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LAKE PONTCHARTRAIN.

The following bill, upon the Speaker's table, was then read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

An act to establish a port of delivery at Lakeport, on Lake Pontchartrain, and for other purposes.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS AGAIN.

The bill entitled "An act to organize the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas" coming up in order, was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. CUTTING. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and upon that motion I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] had not yielded the floor. He submitted a motion that the bill be referred to the Committee on Territories, and had a right to be heard upon it.

Mr. CUTTING. The gentleman from Illinois made a motion to refer it to the standing committee of which he is the chairman. I made a motion that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order when the gentleman from New York can obtain the floor for the purpose of making it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from New York arose and made his motion, the Chair partly turned towards the gentleman, but did not recognize him in words as being entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Illinois insists that he had not yielded the floor to the gentleman from New York; and, under the rules, he has a right to be heard.

Mr. CUTTING. I make a point of order, and it is this: That when a motion is made to refer a bill to a standing committee, that a motion which is made at the same time to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is in order.

The SPEAKER. Such a motion is in order when the gentleman shall have obtained the floor to make it; but he cannot take the floor from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Territories, for the purpose of amending it in some particulars; and I wish to say also that the reference of the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union would be killing it by indirection. It is not worth while to disguise the fact, and gentlemen need not pretend to me that they are favorable to the bill, while they wish to place it in that position where it cannot be reached again during this session of Congress. Upon your Calendar there are bills enough to engage the attention of Congress from this time until the beginning of another session. I regard the effort—I state it freely and frankly—to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union as an effort to defeat it altogether. I respect, I am bound to respect, the right of every gentleman upon this floor to cast his vote as he pleases upon every measure that comes before Congress for its consideration. I have no respect for those gentlemen, however, who profess to be for a measure, while they are using every effort by indirection to destroy it. If gentlemen do not desire to vote for the bill let them vote against it, meet the question fairly as it is presented, and place themselves upon the record before the country for or against the bill. Now what are the facts in relation to this matter? What is the amount of business already in the Committee of the Whole that has precedence of this bill? Of the many bills that have been reported from the various committees, from the beginning of the session to this time, some will not and cannot be reached during this session of Congress.

I refer you to a bill reported from the Committee on Territories, which already stands about the tenth, I believe, upon your Calendar for consideration. Now, if this bill goes to the Committee on Territories it will be disposed of as the second or third bill that comes up next for consideration. Let this bill be referred to the Committee on Territories, and then when they have reported it back, if the majority of the House are in favor of the principles which it embodies, after the committee shall have attached to it some amendments which it desires to do, it can be put upon its passage, and then the majority can pass or defeat it. We can go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and discuss the bill and amendments, and then vote upon them in the House.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. Speaker, I now move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and in so doing, I am animated by no sense of disrespect to the chairman of the Committee on Territories, who has moved to refer it to his standing committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. CUTTING. Nor to any of the honorable members that are associated with him. It is, I believe, a matter distinctly understood that that committee has already discussed and elaborated the subject, and have reported a bill; and that, as far as respects any amendments to the Senate bill, they can be offered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with as much facility as by going through the circuitous course of referring the bill to the standing Committee on Territories, of again having it placed on the Speaker's table, and, after much delay, again restoring it to precisely the position in which it is to-day.

As respects the motives which are insinuated by the chairman of the committee against me for making this motion, I desire to have it understood that I have maintained the great principle of allowing to the people of every organized community or territory the right to form for themselves the laws under which they are to live, and which are to operate upon their happiness and prosperity from the outset of the attempt to ingraft the Wilmot proviso upon the Territories, in 1847, up to this time; and I deny that there is a gentleman on this floor, come from what quarter of the Union he may, who more sincerely and more devotedly agrees to that principle than I have hitherto and now do. It is a matter that is plain to every man of practical common sense, that the people of the Territory of Oregon, for instance, are better able to devise with intelligence and discretion the laws under which they are to live, and by which they are to be regulated, than the people of the State of New York or of New Hampshire, or of any other remote country, either directly or through their representatives in their local Legislatures, or in this body, can possibly frame for them. My doctrine is, that good sense and sound principle require that we should leave to those who live in the Territories—as, for example, the people of Oregon, of Washington—to the intelligent occupiers of those remote and distant districts, full liberty to mould their own municipal regulations and their own domestic institutions in their own manner, and in the way which their own experience and knowledge of the country, and of their own necessities require; and there can be no reasonable doubt, except in the view of fanatics or political agitators, that they will form and frame laws for themselves better than any we possibly can suggest for them.

This bill from the Senate commends itself to me for another reason. It is supposed to embody and to have perfected the great and cardinal principle of removing from Congress, and transferring to the people of the Territories, the whole subject of legislating in favor of or against the institution of slavery. This object, if it can be attained, is of paramount and inestimable consequence.

In any aspect of the case this is an important bill. It merits the deep consideration, I may say the most anxious consideration, of every member of this House. There are provisions in it, as I have seen them in detached portions in the Globe—for the bill itself has never been printed, that I am aware of, except recently, as I have been told, in the columns of the Daily Globe—there are provisions in it which require to be modified and amended before, in my opinion, it ought to receive the support of this House. That part of it which restrains the right of suffrage, which takes from the hardy pioneer and the enterprising settler that which the people of Illinois, of Indiana, of Wisconsin, and, I believe, of other western States, have deemed advisable and found to be an enlightened policy, that of allowing the right of suffrage to aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens, and who have taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of the territorial act. In my opinion such persons, settlers in and subduers of a wild and remote region, ought to be entitled not merely to the right to acquire land, but to participate in the councils of their new-born Territory, and to have a voice in a government which touches so nearly their immediate and dearest personal interests. This bill should go to the Committee of the Whole, in order that it may, at all events, in that respect, be amended; for I undertake to say, that the people of the free States will insist upon the right of suffrage in favor of the settlers as a sine qua non, without which this bill ought not, and I think cannot, pass.

But, Mr. Speaker, by whom is it that the right of fully discussing this measure is demanded? Who are they who, after it is disposed of, are to take the brunt of the contest? Are they the people of the South, where apparently all are united in favor of it? or will it be the representatives of the free States, who are hereafter to go before their people and justify their votes upon this occasion? If we are to stem the current of fanaticism upon the fields where the battles are to be fought, shall we not have full scope and ample opportunity to place our views before the people of the North, through the medium of the Committee of the Whole? When we assert to them that the great principles of civil and constitutional rights—the great principles of popular government—are asserted and vindicated by this bill, shall we not have the usual opportunity of examining, discussing, and amending it in the Committee of the Whole?

Doubts have been thrown out whether or not the principle of non-intervention is really embodied in this bill; and whether, by the proviso of Mr. BADGER, which may hereafter become as celebrated as that of Wilmot, the doctrine of intervention by Congress is not found lurking and active.

These are matters which I do not propose to examine or discuss at present; but the mere fact that there are different opinions upon the construction of the bill in this respect, demonstrates the propriety and the indispensable necessity of a close, severe, and thorough examination of its provisions.

The Senate has sent to us a bill whose cardinal principle is enveloped in a multitude of words, with sentences argumentative, sentences explanatory, and with a proviso in the bargain, whose chief merit, its author now supposes, is, that it means nothing in the world. Plain men, who are not astute lawyers, become bewildered in the midst of this multitude of words and accumulation of sentences. They comprehend distinctly that when this territory was ceded to the United States, there were laws supposed to exist, or regulations and customs which originated with the former owners, the Spaniards and French, by which slavery was recognized and protected as an existing and valid institution. These laws and new usages would still have prevailed, but for the eighth section of the act in relation to the admission of Missouri as a State. This section was proposed to be repealed by the Senate, in order to remove any and all legislation by Congress, so as to leave this territory in the same condition as if it had never interfered. If Congress had never interfered, of course the French and Spanish laws would now prevail there.

In this posture of affairs Mr. BADGER proposed an amendment, which was carried, by which it was declared that the system which existed (and but for the intervention of Congress would still have existed) prior to 1820 shall not be revived or put in force! What is this but the abolition by Congress of the Spanish and French law? Is not this congressional interference and congressional legislation against slavery? Thus plain men, who can appreciate a fact, find that if this bill shall pass, laws which were in existence when the territory came into possession of the United States, and which recognized and protected slavery in the Province of Louisiana, are, by the action of Congress, by the BADGER proviso, rendered inoperative and of no force or effect. Plain men see that in 1803, the laws and customs then existing recognized the condition of slavery, whilst in 1854 Congress proposes to declare that they shall not be deemed to be in force. Can it be denied that this is the effect of congressional action? or can it be pretended that the BADGER proviso means nothing?

If we mean to declare the principle of non-intervention, let us do it and carry it out. I ask again how it happens, if this Territory came into our possession with slavery recognized and protected within its limits, that now, in the year 1854, if this bill passes in its present shape, these provisions are obliterated? If it should appear, upon a close and careful examination of the bill, that it does extinguish and obliterate the laws and customs prevailing in it at the time of its cession, why then we have the principle of intervention upon the very face of the bill. If those who deny this power to Congress are content to acquiesce in its exercise, the question may be quieted by the surrender of the principle.

Now, sir, in my opinion, the people of the North understand but little of the real results of this bill; and therefore it is that we have had petitions pouring in upon us of enormous bulk, containing thousands of names; we have had clergymen, separating themselves as a distinct class from the rest of the community, undertaking to denounce this bill. Sir, I will venture to say that not one of these gentlemen, respectable as they may be in their proper sphere and in their appropriate calling, has ever even read the bill which I now move to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. Speaker, I say that, if men at the North will throw aside their fanaticism, their prejudice, and their political aspirations, and will stop for a moment their noisy agitation, and give to this bill a fair and candid examination, they must irresistibly come to the conclusion that it is, in its results, and in the future, the best measure for the North that has ever been tendered. It is the South that will find, in the long run, that, so far from being beneficial to them, it will be, when applied to future acquisitions, the most fatal measure that, as yet, has been proposed, assuming that the BADGER proviso is retained. It is eminently a measure favorable to the North; and, upon a full and fair discussion, in my humble judgment, it can be proved to be so.

But the gentleman from Illinois says that if the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union we shall never be able to reach it. Why, sir, we all know that when we are in Committee of the Whole, by a bare simple majority of votes, every bill upon the Calendar preceding it may be laid aside until we reach it; and surely, if there is not strength enough to command a majority in Committee of the Whole to lay aside other bills for the purpose of taking up this one, it is idle and a loss of time to discuss it elsewhere.

Sir, this has become a grave and serious question. How it happened to become so, is a matter of no consequence for us now to inquire or examine into, but since its introduction into Congress the North would seem to have taken up arms, and to have become excited into a sort of civil insurrection. Nevertheless, the principle of non-intervention by Congress, in the matter of slavery, and the right of the people of the Territories to frame their own laws, are sound and just. Therefore it is that I desire full discussion, and above all, that when we deal with a subject which enlists the sympathies and feelings of men so deeply, we should avoid everything like the appearance of legislative management, or of parliamentary tactics. They do not belong to a case of this magnitude. They disparage it, and detract from its character; they give rise to unjust suspicions of unfair play, and there are enough of them abroad already. I say, therefore, that we must have full, frank, and candid discussion.

We must bring this bill, by amendment, to a proper shape, in the matter to which I have already referred; and gentlemen more immediately interested, must ascertain for themselves whether the BADGER proviso does or does not involve the principle of congressional intervention. On that point I am not prepared to offer a decided opinion; but I must say, that the more I have thought of it, and the more I have reflected on it, in my opinion it does conceal, and contain the principle of intervention by Congress. It does profess to declare, that laws which existed at the time this Territory came into this Union shall not be revived or put in force. If that be so, then the principle of intervention lurks in this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman permit me to make a single suggestion to him?

Mr. CUTTING. With pleasure, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to meet this question fully and fairly. If the gentleman will have the bill made the special order, so that we may be sure to reach it at the same time he has it referred, I am willing to agree to his motion.

Mr. CUTTING. I take the suggestion; but does not my friend know, that in order to change the order of business a two thirds vote is required; and if I make a motion to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it needs but a simple majority; but tack his motion to it, and then it requires two thirds? No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is another question. The gentleman says that this thing requires to be met fairly, frankly, and to be fully discussed. He wants no parliamentary tactics. Neither do I. I ask the gentleman whether he would not have had a fair opportunity to discuss this matter fully if he and his friends had voted to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and took up the bill now before the House?

Mr. CUTTING. To say that I would not have had a fair opportunity would be simply bandying words with the chairman of the Territorial Committee; but I ask him, if we had done so, whether this bill from the Senate would not have still reposed upon the Speaker's table? And I ask, then whether it would not always have been open to any motion that any bill lying upon the Speaker's table is subject to? Whether its lying there, too, is not an unusual and extraordinary act of legislation? Was it ever heard of before that a Senate bill so wide-spreading in its consequences as this should sleep upon the Speaker's table instead of going to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and being there discussed? What need is there for this departure from the accustomed forms of legislation? What is the object to be accomplished?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will answer the gentleman at once. The bill reported from the Committee on Territories is substantially the same as the one upon the table.

Mr. CUTTING. Whether it be, or be not, every gentleman must judge for himself from what he has seen and heard. If it be the idea of the chairman of the Committee on Territories that the bill reported by his committee is substantially the same as that which has undergone repeated amendments in the Senate, then all I can say on that subject is, that there is a vast difference between himself and myself in reference to the construction to be put upon the two bills.

No, Mr. Speaker, let us meet this matter manfully and fairly; and when we come to the final passage of the bill—when we call the yeas and nays—and ascertain who is, and who is not, in

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of inhabitants of Townsend, Massachusetts, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, presented a memorial of a committee appointed at a meeting of citizens of Hancock county, Kentucky, praying that the proposed western armory may be located at Hawesville, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented a memorial of citizens of Memphis, Tennessee, praying the establishment of a Federal district court at that place; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That the memorial of William G. Morehead be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion by Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, it was Ordered, That John Bruce have leave to withdraw his petition and papers, for the purpose of presentation in the House of Representatives.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred resolutions of the Legislature of Illinois, in favor of the admission of sugar, molasses, and railroad iron free of duty, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Burgess B. Long, praying the establishment of a commission to examine claims against the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a petition of citizens of Chicago, Illinois, praying a donation of a plat of ground in that city for the erection thereupon of a chapel, marine school, &c., by the Western Seamen's Friend Society, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. FISH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Charles G. Ridgely, praying that certain allowances may be made to him in the settlement of his accounts at the Navy Department, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of S. R. Addison, a passed assistant surgeon in the Navy, praying to be allowed the difference between the pay of passed assistant surgeon and that of surgeon during the time he performed the duties of surgeon, reported a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

ACTION ON ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. FISH. Mr. President, it is desirable that some early day shall be set apart for the consideration of adverse reports. There are a large number now upon the Calendar, and unless concurred in by the Senate, the Senate will, at a subsequent session, have the same business before them again. If it be the pleasure of the Senate to consider such a motion now, by unanimous consent, I will move that the second Friday in April be set apart for the consideration of adverse reports.

The motion was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

NAVY BIDS.

Mr. GWIN. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution from the House relative to bids for provisions, clothing, and small stores for the use of the Navy, have requested me to report it back, without amendment; and as it is important that it should be acted upon immediately, to ask for its consideration at this time.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, accordingly proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was published in our report of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. PRATT. It occurs to me, Mr. President, that the resolution introduces an entirely new principle in regard to bids to be received by the Government. Now, any person who can give sufficient security for a compliance with a contract is authorized to bid for the supply of any articles which may be advertised for by the Government of the United States. But the principle is altered, and no one, if the resolution passes, will be authorized to bid except the manufacturer of the article advertised for, or a party known to the Government to be engaged in the sale of such articles.

Mr. PETTIT. The regular dealer in the article.

Mr. PRATT. Well, a regular dealer in such articles. I cannot see, if the Government advertises for ten thousand barrels of flour in California or elsewhere, why anybody who may choose to bid for the supply and give security to the Government for the fulfillment of the contract, shall not be, as heretofore, privileged to make the bid. I do not see that the manufacturer of flour, or the regular dealer in flour, is better competent to discharge a contract with the Government than is anybody else who can give equal security. The resolution confines the competition for the supply of the Government to those two classes of people. I think the principle is wrong.

Mr. GWIN. In answer to the Senator from Maryland, I will read a letter from the head of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing to the Secretary of the Navy, which was communicated to the House Committee on Naval Affairs, a copy of which I received this morning, asking the passage of the resolution, and giving the reasons for it:

BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING,
NAVY DEPARTMENT, February 3, 1854.

SIR: I respectfully submit for your consideration the enclosed proposed joint resolution in relation to contracts. The embarrassment experienced by the Bureau in the execution of its duties in consequence of the difficulty of obtaining proper supplies, and in some instances, a positive refusal to furnish any as you are aware, from contractors, imperative requires some changes at least like those imposed. Long experience more forcibly impresses on the conviction of the Bureau that the contract system and that of lowest bids for many articles of provisions of a perishable nature, but necessary to the health and comfort of our seamen, are of no advantage to the Government, and are injurious to the service. It is of paramount importance, both as regards the movements of our vessels and the health of our seamen, that the supply of good provisions should not be left dependent upon the competition of speculators, as is frequently the case under the contract system. Many articles, such as flour, rice, raisins, beans, dried fruit and pickles could be procured by open purchase, under proper regulations, of a better quality, and on equally favorable terms to the Government, as by contract; as experience has shown that contractors will never furnish the best of these articles, but only such as will merely pass inspection. In suggesting a change the Bureau can only be actuated by a sense of duty, as it is evident, that under the present system, its chief is exempted from much trouble and from imputations of improper preference.

As an advertisement for supplies must be made about the middle of March, I respectfully request, if the proposed resolution meets your approval, that you will be pleased to bring the subject to the notice of the Naval Committees of both Houses of Congress, as early as you may think proper.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. SINCLAIR.

Hon. J. C. DOBBIN, Secretary of the Navy.

I will also read a letter on the subject which was addressed to me this morning:

BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING,
NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 23, 1854.

SIR: Agreeable to my promise, I have the honor to inclose a copy of the letter of the Bureau, dated February 3d, 1854, addressed to the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, which accompanied the proposed joint resolution, both of which were approved by him, and sent to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House. The resolution which passed that body on Monday does not repeal the law in relation to "lowest bids," but it simply deprives speculators of the power of controlling all supplies for the Navy, and places regular dealers and manufacturers in the position which no doubt Congress intended, and to which they are in justice entitled.

I beg leave to adduce the article of "blue flannel," very much used in the Navy, as an example, among many others that might be mentioned, of the working of our present system. The contractor, a regular manufacturer, for the last fiscal year furnished a first rate article, and equal to the sample; he was underbid for the present year a fraction by a person who has to make his purchases as he can; and to show the kind of flannel he has endeavored to pass on us, I send a piece of the Government sample and several pieces of such as he has attempted to deliver, that you may judge for yourself.

In regard to that part of the resolution in relation to being authorized to purchase, in certain cases, a superior quality of flour, I beg to remark that all experience demonstrates that the flour supplied by contractors will not do to be sent to the East Indies. Nearly all we send to that station becomes injured on the voyage, and is unfit for use on its arrival. The strictest inspection avails but little. No merchant, as I well know, will incur the risk of sending any other than the Gallego or Hazall flour to Hong Kong, and our commanders and storekeepers on that station have invariably recommended that no other kind should be sent.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
WM. SINCLAIR.
Hon. W. M. GWIN, Chairman Naval Committee,
United States Senate.

Now, sir, the Secretary of the Navy wishes to have the power to confine those who bid for these articles to the actual producer and dealer, and for an obvious reason—for it is a matter of character with those parties to put in such a bid as they can comply with, and furnish a good article. On the subject of flour, I know that this is necessary, because it is impossible to send flour by contract from here to the Pacific coast of the United States without its being more or less injured, unless certain brands are selected, which the Secretary of the Navy has no power to do at this time. The Committee on Naval Affairs examined this question with a great deal of attention this morning, and came to the conclusion that, under the circumstances, it is best to pass the resolution. If it gives too much power to the Secretary of the Navy that can be restricted hereafter. Here are samples of flannel showing conclusively that the present contractor does not furnish an article equal to that furnished last year, as stated in the letter which I have read. Several different kinds have been sent here of a very inferior quality.

Mr. PRATT. The letter which has been read in support of the joint resolution, as it occurs to me, sir, does not give any sound reason for its passage. I would inquire of my honorable friend from California, what is complained of by the Department, in reference to the present system?

It is that under the contract system the Government is imposed on. Now the resolution does not propose to alter the contract system, but it confines the right to contract to certain classes of the community. By what species of logic can my honorable friend argue to the Senate, that under the same system the Government is to be relieved from the difficulties which occur now, by reducing the class of persons who are authorized to make bids?

My honorable friend says, that the dealers in and manufacturers of flour have their characters to support, and consequently they will not bid for the supply of flour or any other article which they manufacture, or are regular dealers in, without supplying the best article. Now I apprehend, Mr. President, that the dealers in flour are the speculators in flour. Every one knows that. They buy flour for the purpose of selling. They are the speculators par excellence in this article above all others. They are the parties who buy to sell again. The regular dealers in flour, therefore, are the speculators; and why these speculators if they have contracts to supply the Government would not supply it in such a way as to make the most money out of it as any other citizen of the United States would is, I admit, beyond my power to conceive.

The Senator is supplied by the Department with two samples of flannel; and he says the contractors have sent flour which would not bear transportation to the East Indies.

The proper officers of the Department are authorized to advertise for such brands as will bear transportation; and the contractor, whether he be a manufacturer or regular dealer in the article must supply, under the contract, the brand that the Secretary requires, so that the Government cannot be injured, because if he does not furnish the brand it is not received.

I can readily see the evil complained of; and if the Senator, or his committee, will go for an entire abolition of this principle of giving the contract to the lowest bidder, if he will authorize the Secretaries of the Navy and War to buy in the markets such supplies as suit the Government, I will not have the slightest objection to it; but the evils complained of will not be remedied by the resolution. They will be the same under it as before; and you take away that competition which is allowed under the existing law.

Mr. GWIN. I have a single remark to make in answer to the Senator from Maryland. If he had noticed the reading of the resolution he would have seen that there was a distinction between the article of flour and other supplies. The Secretary asks for power to purchase such brands of flour as are known to be capable of transportation to the East Indies and to California. He has no such power now; under the present law he cannot advertise for certain brands which are now known to be the only kinds which can be transported to those distant stations without injury. He therefore asks that this power may be given him, so that he can purchase such brands as are capable of transportation.

Mr. PRATT. There can be no objection to that.

Mr. GWIN. That is all that the resolution provides in regard to flour. The main point as to which there should be discrimination in favor of dealers is in the article of clothing, and a few other articles besides flour. I will give an instance: It was stated to me at the Department, this morning, that a ship chandler in New York came forward, and not only contracted for articles in which he dealt, but got a contract for all the clothing and shoes connected with the Navy Department. It is perfectly evident that he will supply such an article as will pass inspection, but not the best article, of course; for he has to go to the dealers in it and purchase it from them, and make his profit. In this way it is that inferior articles are put upon the Department. I speak here from the experience of the head of the Department, and of the head of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, when I say that it is indispensably necessary to the public interest that this resolution should pass. It is an experiment which cannot but be an improvement; and if it does not succeed, I have no doubt that the head of the Department and the head of the Bureau will subsequently ask for a modification. I am sure it is necessary, or I should not ask for its passage.

Mr. SHIELDS. I objected yesterday to the passage of the joint resolution then without reference to the proper committee. Since then I have taken occasion to converse with the Secretary of the Navy on the subject, and I am clearly satisfied in my own mind, from the information which I received from him, that the public service requires some change of this kind. I am satisfied that the contract system as now conducted, is a great abuse to the public service, and that the sufferers from it are the poor seamen, who are sent abroad depending on inferior articles for their supplies. The object of this resolution is to avoid and remedy this evil, and I trust it will accomplish that purpose. But like the honorable Senator from Maryland, I am apprehensive that we shall have to go much further than even this resolution proposes to go; for so far as my information goes, our contract system all round, in the Navy, in the Army, in all the bureaus, even as to the building of vessels, is entirely wrong. It is putting out great public interests to the lowest bidders, and the men who speculate on those interests are certainly injuring the public service. I am this morning in favor of the resolution.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think, sir, that it is a strong recommendation of this resolution—with me, I may say, it is a conclusive one—that it has the approbation and sanction of the gentleman who stands at the head of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing of the Navy Department. He is a man who has had the experience of a long life—a man who is universally acknowledged to be an unexceptionable officer, and to whom all will accord the character of an honest man. After fully considering the subject, he has come to the conclusion that it is necessary for the public service that this change should be made in the contract system, and that this resolution should be passed.

Now, sir, even if I had doubted the propriety of the provisions of the resolution, I should feel strongly bound to defer to authority of so high a character; but the observations which have been made here by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and by my friend from Illinois, are of themselves sufficient, it seems to me, to satisfy us, that such a change as this is required by the public service.

My friend from Maryland must see, from the latter part of the resolution, that his remarks in relation to flour are not applicable, for the resolution positively provides, that whenever it may be deemed necessary for the interests of the Government and the health of the crews of our vessels, the head of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, with the approbation of the Secretary of the Navy, may procure particular brands of flour which are known to keep best on distant stations. The amount of the whole matter is, that the resolution leaves the subject to the discretion and judgment of the proper officer, the Secretary of the Navy. With him I am willing to leave it.

Mr. CASS. I do not much like the idea of making proposals to the public, and confining the acceptance of those proposals to particular classes of the community. It is a new thing, and I do not like the idea; but yet there are very powerful considerations in favor of the resolution, and they have been well stated. It strikes me, however, that the best suggestion is the one which has been made by the Senator from Maryland, that is, to change the resolution so as to let the Secretary of the Navy, or the officers acting under him, go into open market, and buy the articles which are necessary. Why will not that obviate all the difficulty? Let him buy the articles which he wants without issuing proposals, and then confining those proposals to particular classes—thus making this an exceptional case, as it is one. I would be willing to allow him to go wherever the purchases can be made, and to obtain such articles as may be necessary.

Mr. GWIN. This resolution has been presented to the Senate by the Committee on Naval Affairs in the exact form in which it passed the House of Representatives. I am informed by the head of the Bureau that he is required by law to advertise for proposals very soon, and this is a case of pressing necessity. The Committee on Naval Affairs, when considering the resolution this morning, thought that some amendments might properly be made to it, but they were satisfied that if they proposed any, the whole object would be lost. As this is an experiment to be made by the Department, I hope the resolution will pass now, because it is of pressing necessity. The suggestion of the Senator from Michigan will certainly meet with the consideration of the Committee on Naval Affairs hereafter in a general bill.

Mr. PETTIT. As the resolution now stands, I shall feel constrained to vote against it. I am perfectly willing that a joint resolution or a law shall be passed, authorizing the Secretary to make the special contracts which are referred to in this resolution; but I am not willing, in anything which the Government wishes to purchase, from a cannon to a cambric needle, from a potato to a barrel of flour, to say that all my fellow-citizens shall not have an opportunity to bid for and furnish it. Whatever may be the recommendation, or wish, or opinion of the Department on the subject, I shall vote against the resolution, if it be not amended in that particular.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays on the question of ordering it to a third reading.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Brodhead, Butler, Clayton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Hunter, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Rusk, Shields, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Walker, Weller, and Williams—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bayard, Brown, Cass, Douglas, Pettit, Pratt, Stuart, and Wade—9.

So the resolution was ordered to a third reading. It was read a third time, and passed.

FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVERS.

Mr. WALKER. I ask the Senate now to proceed to the consideration of the bill "to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled, under the act of the 8th of August, 1846, for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers."

I will state, that it is a copy of a bill for the benefit of Illinois, which has been passed at the present session. This bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands, and I think we can pass it in a minute without objection.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Governor of Wisconsin to cause to be selected the residue of the lands to which that State is entitled under the provisions of the act referred to, out of any unsold public lands in that State now subject to private entry at $1 25 an acre, and not claimed by pre-emption; the quantity to be ascertained on the principles which governed the final adjustment of the grant to the State of Indiana for the Wabash and Erie canal, under the provisions of the act of Congress of May 9, 1848.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

RAILROADS IN INDIANA AND ILLINOIS.

On motion by Mr. STUART, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill "granting to the States of Indiana and Illinois a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of the Indiana and Illinois Central railway."

The route of the proposed road is from Indianapolis, via Montezuma, in Indiana, to Springfield, in Illinois. The bill makes the usual provisions, which have been inserted in previous similar bills at the present session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

PAY OF THE ARMY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill "to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. PETTIT, to strike out the ninth section, which provides for the appointment of two additional cadets from each State, on the recommendation of the respective Senators.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, before the honorable Senator from Delaware proceeds, permit me to call the attention of the Senate to a recommendation of the Board of Visitors to the West Point Academy, which I find in their report for the last year:

"We are of the opinion that the number of the cadets should be increased, so as to correspond with the number of Senators of the United States, by adding two from each State, and that the recommendation of Senators in each State should have great weight in selecting the cadets from their respective States to make up this increased number."

I have also a letter addressed by Colonel Totten, of the Engineer Department, to the Secretary of War, in 1852, in which he says that the cadet barracks, as they now stand, will accommodate sixty-two cadets in addition to the present legal number, and that such an increase in the number of cadets would not involve any necessary enlargement of the refectory, or any increase in the number of recitation rooms. I will read one more extract; I will read it because it is better expressed than anything that I can say in commendation upon this point. It is from a report of another Board of Visitors to the Military Academy, communicated with the annual report of the Secretary of War:

"When considered in its results that we obtain from this expenditure a body of officers who will compare in scientific attainments, in military skill, in noble bearing, with the officers of any army in the world—men of enlarged patriotism and national feelings—men who diffuse military knowledge through the country; who have executed many of the great works, military and civil, of the country—men who, scattered through the land, in military and civil life, are capable of officering and instructing in good soldiery an army of fifty thousand men at any moment, at the call of their country, thus giving the Union the advantages, without the dangers and expense of a large standing army—when considered thus, the sum sinks into insignificance."

I have read these reports, and made these statements, to show that I am fortified in pressing this bill by the Department of War, and by Secretaries of War, both Whig and Democrat.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, it was for the very purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to the important fact which has just been brought before it by my honorable friend from Illinois that I rose yesterday. The distinguished gentleman who is at the head of the War Department, and whose experience entitles every recommendation of his in reference to the Army to our serious consideration and favorable regard, has most earnestly recommended the provision which is contained in the ninth section of this bill. I do earnestly hope, therefore, for the very reasons assigned by him in his report, that the ninth section may not be stricken from the bill. It commends itself to me particularly, because it contains the electoral principle. It proposes to recognize the Senators of the United States as men entitled to some weight in the recommendations of the officers under this Government. I do not hesitate to say that the recommendations of Senators, who are placed here by permanent appointment for six years, are entitled to quite as much consideration as the recommendations of gentlemen in the other House; but yet, heretofore, every cadet who has been appointed upon the recommendation of a member of Congress has been appointed solely upon the recommendation of a Representative in the other House. Sir, of the two classes, which would be the least apt to be misled in the event of an exciting election approaching—the Senator or the Representative? I submit that, in my judgment, the man who is beyond the reach of an election and its excitements will be more apt to make a proper recommendation, if, indeed, there is to be any distinction made between the two. If we are to say that one can make a better appointment than the other, I prefer the recommendation of the Senator. It is true that this will throw upon Senators an increased responsibility. It will doubtless give gentlemen trouble; but have they the right to avoid that responsibility under the circumstances? If it is for the interest of the country, it is the duty of a Senator to encounter the responsibility.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, if this were a mere question of patronage, I think I should vote for striking out the section. All power is certainly apt to plague the possessor; and among the smaller annoyances, I do not know a more troublesome one than that which besets those who have the bestowment of patronage of this sort. If, therefore, this were solely a question of patronage, I should vote for striking out the section; but I understand that an increase of cadets is desirable, and particularly under the provisions of this bill, which may make it necessary. Heretofore, I believe, one cadet has been appointed from each Congressional district in turn, in the course of four years, which gives two hundred and thirty-three cadets for that term; and besides these, there are some ten appointments at large annually, which are authorized to be made by the President. For one, I should be very much inclined to bestow this patronage of the proposed increase in the number of cadets on the President, instead of giving it to Senators, but for the fact that I must confess myself apprehensive that the manner in which this presidential patronage has been exercised would be extended more or less to the increased number, or be influenced by other considerations, not at all satisfactory to me.

I have noticed the last appointments to the Military Academy made by the President; and though he has only exercised his undoubted right in the selection of those whom he has named, yet I must regret the appointment of so many sons and relatives of military men, as gives to some minds the idea of a sort of hereditary succession in military offices. I believe that nine of the ten young gentlemen just appointed are sons or adopted sons of officers, and the tenth the descendant of a revolutionary officer, appointed for that reason. How many sons of officers have been otherwise appointed I do not know.

It seems to me that, for obvious reasons, the exercise of this patronage by the President is likely to run too much in the direction to which I have alluded, or to be influenced in a very great degree by mere political considerations. I do not think it will be liable to the same objection if the Senate exercise it.

Besides, sir, the Representatives in the other House confine their appointments to their own districts, of course, for they are obliged by law to do so; and they are very often so much pressed by popular and influential persons in their districts that the appointment is made rather from considerations of that sort than because of the merit and promise of the youth who is appointed. It is in many cases the condition and political activity of the parent, rather than the character of the boy, which insures his appointment. I do not know that I claim too much for this body when I say that I think the Senate, not being under the pressure of the same influences, would be able to make appointments perhaps promising and yielding more efficiency to the service. At all events it would be within our competency to do so. I may add, that the increased number of appointments could not well be distributed among the members of the House of Representatives. As these new appointments are to be added, and as I do not know of any better depository of the appointing power than the Senate, I shall vote against striking out the section.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, by striking out the words "upon the recommendation of the respective Senators," instead of striking out the whole section, as he proposes to do. The section would then, in substance, read, that there shall be an increase of the number of cadets equal to the number of Senators, without designating the mode of appointment. Thus the Senate would be freed from the disagreeable necessity of indicating who are to be appointed. If this amendment should prevail, I think that the great object, the great benefit which it is supposed will result from this additional number of cadets, will be attained; and we shall be relieved from the evil consequences of having to exercise this patronage, as it is termed.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is the same as giving to the President the appointment of sixty-two additional cadets.

Mr. PRATT. I do not care where it throws the appointment. Any Senator can designate any other mode of appointment, and it will be agreeable to me. Differing from my honorable friend from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] I am decidedly in favor of increasing the number of cadets. I do not agree with him that any injury could result from having as many of our young men educated at the West Point Academy as it is possible to have, without any more increased expense than their mere pay while they are so engaged. I believe with some gentleman who has expressed a similar opinion, that the graduates of that institution are the best educated men in the country; and that, whether engaged in military or civil life, they become ornaments to the country, and useful to it in every sphere. I am, therefore, altogether in favor of increasing the number of cadets to the utmost capacity of the institution as it now exists. But it is to the exercise of this patronage on the part of the Senate that I object. I agree with my friend from Iowa [Mr. Dodge] that, according to my view, it is not entirely compatible with the theory of our Government that the Senate should ever have the appointing power. As I understand the theory of our Government, appointments are to be made by the President, and his nominations are to be confirmed by the Senate. Here you introduce an entirely different principle, and you make it compulsory on the President to nominate the person whom you recommend; so that you have the appointment and the confirmation in your own hands. The result, I apprehend, will hereafter be this: There will be a set of officers growing up in the Army, appointed by us, by each individual Senator; each will have his particular protege in the Army, to whose course in life he will necessarily look with some degree of pride, and to whom he might, perhaps, be unwilling to see justice meted out as it should be.

I think, in every point of view, it would be injurious to give to Senators this appointment. I am in favor of increasing the number of cadets, but I wish to give the appointment to some other parties than Senators of the United States.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I think some Senators are in favor of retaining this clause in the bill because it confers upon them the appointment of a cadet; and other Senators are opposed to the section for the reason that, if it becomes a law, they will incur the responsibility of having to make an appointment. Now, sir, I am in favor of the section for no such reason; nor am I opposed to it for any such reason. I seek no responsibility—I would avoid none. If it is advisable, if it is necessary, if it is desirable that an additional number of cadets should be appointed, I think that they might be appropriately designated by Senators, with quite as much propriety as they are now designated by members of the House of Representatives.

But, sir, I am opposed to this section, and I am opposed to it for a reason which I think has been very well stated by the Senator from Michigan. I am opposed to it because I am a sincere friend of the Academy at West Point. I believe that that school turns out annually a number amply sufficient, and more than sufficient, to answer all the demands of the Government. I would vote most cheerfully, and I believe I should be acting in the line of my duty in so doing, to restrict, rather than to increase, that number. I do not desire, however, to do even that; but I would let it remain as it is. I think the evidences furnished us during the last war with Mexico have removed a portion of the prejudice which existed in the minds of some of our community against that school. It has furnished us with the best officers, I think, that the world has ever seen. I doubt not that the General-in-Chief, if he could tell us, would say that a better appointed corps of engineers never went with any army in the world as that which we sent to Mexico; and it is to such an efficient corps of engineers that much of the success of our arms is to be attributed.

Now, sir, I trust, indeed I know, that no Senator would do anything which would create a prejudice in the minds of our community against the institution, by increasing the number of scholars there to an amount greater than the wants of the country absolutely require. Believing that such may be the effect of this section, and believing clearly that there are now as many cadets at the Academy as the exigencies of the country require, I shall vote to strike out the section. The Senator from Maryland has moved to amend the amendment so as to strike out only the last part of the section, thus increasing the number, and only removing the responsibility of making the appointments from Senators. I shall vote against that amendment, and in favor of striking out the section, for the reasons which I have stated.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I am decidedly in favor of retaining this section, for the reasons which have been given by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Shields,] and also by my friend from Delaware, [Mr. Clayton,] and for the reasons so emphatically given by the distinguished gentleman who is at the head of the military department of the Government. I believe that what has been said is true, that the country derives in every respect incalculable advantages from the maintenance of the military school at West Point; and I think it enables us, in the language of the Secretary, to derive in effect all the benefits to the country of a large standing army without either the danger or the expense of maintaining one, by diffusing through the whole country military knowledge and skill, which may be at any moment called into requisition when the necessities of the country require it, and be made effectual for the national defense.

I am opposed, Mr. President, to the amendment proposed by my friend from Maryland, [Mr. Pratt,] to strike out that portion of the ninth section which devolves the nomination of these officers on Senators. There is a mistake on this subject. It has been said, that we exercise an influence over the appointment of cadets, in virtue of our advising authority upon nominations. In point of fact, we have no real influence or control, direct or indirect, over the appointment of any officer in the Army. The cadets are, in form, appointed by the head of the War Department; in fact and substance by the respective members of the House of Representatives. The cadetship never comes here for confirmation. As soon as cadets have gone through their course at the academy, and are discharged from that institution, they pass into the Army, under regulations having the force of law; and when they are nominated to us by the President, the President has no more discretion in making the nomination than we have in advising and consenting to it. It is a regular nomination under the authority of law, and the nomination by the President, and the confirmation by the Senate, are mere matters of form; so that, with regard to the strictly regular Army, it is undoubtedly true, as our law stands, that all the officers are practically appointed by the House of Representatives. They are not appointed by that House as a House, but they are severally appointed by the respective members of the House.

I do not stop to inquire whether this system of appointment is right or not. I have heretofore stated in my place, on another occasion, that I thought it was wrong, and I think so now. I think the system is wrong; and though I do not believe that it formally violates the Constitution, I think it tends in a direction which is injurious, and which the Constitution probably intended to prevent by its arrangements in regard to appointments. But, sir, that system is fastened upon us, and the question is now, whether, in the existing state of things, the members of this body, as well as the members of the other House, should not have an influence in these selections? It is a strange thing to say that the President, who is the original appointing power, should have a right to appoint a certain number of cadets, that the members of the House of Representatives shall have power to appoint a certain number of cadets, and that all the officers in the Army shall be taken from the cadets so appointed; and then to say that the Senators shall have no influence in the actual constitution of the Army; because, it is said, we have a formal vote, when a commission is tendered to an officer, whether or not we will advise and consent to his appointment. Sir, we know that we have no right—we cannot justly and honorably refuse to appoint him. He is entitled; and if we were to refuse our assent to such a nomination, it would be a plain violation of duty, and an injury done to a party in refusing him a right which he had acquired by law.

Now, sir, I wish to say a word upon the idea suggested by my friend from Maryland, who first spoke on this subject, [Mr. PEARCE,] and which he did not exactly carry out, as to the propriety of these appointments. The selections made by the members of the House of Representatives are necessarily made from their districts. They are intended to be made, and I believe they are required by law to be made, from their districts. Then the persons in the respective districts, who, for whatever reason, have influence with, or control over the member, receive these appointments. Then the President has a certain number, ten, I think it is, of cadets, to appoint at large; the object being that he may look through the nation, and select those persons, who, either on account of their own merits, or the services of their fathers, may have particular claims upon the country to be provided for. And so there is a class of persons in every State, who may have no local strength in a district, who may not be able to command the influences which prevail upon the member representing the district in which such a meritorious and excellent young man may reside, to appoint him, and who yet may have claims, and very high claims, upon the consideration of the whole State, of which he is a citizen, either through his own promise, or the services which have been rendered by his family and connections.

Now, sir, what we want in order to carry out the system, (whether it was right or wrong when it was originated,) is to give to the members of this body, nominations by which the States at large may be respectively provided for, as now the President looks through the whole nation, and provides for those having claims upon the whole body, and the members of the House of Representatives attend to the claims of individuals in their districts. The system has been adopted, and I think we ought to carry it out; and the only other step we could take with propriety, would be to undo it altogether. If it stands in regard to the House, I think it ought to be extended to the Senate.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I oppose the ninth section of the bill, mainly because it proposes to make an increase which, in my judgment, the country does not need for the legitimate services of the Army, for keeping it up and maintaining it in sufficient force. It is not so much on account of the patronage or responsibility which it throws upon the Senate, as for the reason that I believe the increase is not necessary, and not called for, that I shall vote against it.

I do not entertain a doubt about the constitutionality of this education. It is an arm of the defense of the country. There can be no doubt that the Government has the power to take the first, the incipient steps to prepare the men who are to defend the country for that service; but while that may be done, it ought to be confined to the legitimate objects of defense. It ought, at further, to be confined to the education of as many as shall by necessity officer your Army. It has not been shown here that the present number is incompetent for that purpose; but the argument is, that these young men receive a good education at West Point, and when they graduate do not take commissions, do not remain in the Army, but become very valuable citizens, and important auxiliaries in the construction of railroads, and in other engineering service. All that, I have no doubt, is true. I have no question but that the country derives great benefit and great advantage from the education of these young men there, but that is no apology to me for the education at the public expense of all the young men in the country. That is a matter which should be left to the States.

I have nothing to say against the discipline, the teaching, or the rules of this institution; nor as to the education and accomplishments of the young men who are educated at it. No doubt they are thoroughly bred and thoroughly educated. Undoubtedly they are made thorough engineers, thorough soldiers, and thorough officers. I have no question that the school is as good a one as can exist in this country, or as exists in any other; but I have yet been unable to find a good reason for the education of one class of your officers at the expense of the Government, and the neglect and refusal to educate another class. Now, sir, I mean to reflect no disparagement upon the head of the nation, or any of his immediate counselors, nor upon any of the Senators or any of the Representatives in the other House, nor upon any of the judiciary, nor upon the legal learning of the Attorney General, or the district attorneys, or other officers who are employed by this Government; but I have yet to learn, or yet to be convinced, why it is not of as much importance to the United States, and to the advantage, interest, advancement, and safety of the country generally, to educate one class of officers as another. Why do you not establish a school at which you shall keep a class of young men constantly educating, from whom shall come all your Presidents, all your Secretaries of State, of War, of the Navy, of the Treasury, and of the Interior, and all your Attorneys General and Postmasters General? Why do you not establish a school for the education of your judiciary—your supreme, circuit, and district judges? Why do you not establish a diplomatic school?

I hold it is as important to any country that the persons who bear the responsibility abroad of negotiating delicate questions, of keeping peace, and maintaining the honor of their country, should be educated for that purpose, as it is that A or B shall be educated to know how to wield the sword or the musket.

It is as important, in my judgment, to this country, that you should have a learned corps of diplomatists abroad, as that you should have a learned corps of fencers at home. It is as important that you should have a corps of learned men from whom you are to take your Executives, and a corps learned thoroughly in all the history, and science, and policy not only of your own but of all other Governments, who shall be imbued with the entire propriety and policy of foreign intercourse, to conduct that branch of the Government. It is as important that you should educate a Secretary of State for that purpose, that you should educate a Secretary of the Treasury, who is to control the moneyed destinies of the country, who is to dry them up by awkwardness, or make them flow on evenly and smoothly, fructifying the whole earth by his intelligent and learned and wise policy; that you should educate Senators and members of the other House, by whose voice and whose breath the whole destinies of the country are to be ruled, and from whose hands the laws for the government of the Army are to originate and emanate, as it is to educate your commanders in the field. Sir, I am not able to see why it is that you should educate one class of officers and not educate all.

This argument, I grant, would go to the foundation of this establishment entirely; but this institution has been so long fastened upon the country, and its results have proved so beneficial and honorable, as I hesitate not to say they have, that it would be impossible, and probably impolitic, to attempt now to wipe it out or abrogate it from among the institutions of the country. While I am willing to concede that this school has done much for the military arm of the public service, may I ask would not a school for the education of your judges do as much for that service? If you get it once established, and get all your old judges removed by death, and your new ones educated at a Government law school, how soon will that fasten itself upon the country so that you cannot abrogate it? If you fasten upon the country a school for the education of Senators, may it not be possible there will be a more learned body than the Senate has ever had here? And so with the House of Representatives, and so with the Executive himself.

Then the fact that this institution has rendered service is not a sufficient apology for me for increasing the number of its students. The fact that it has produced an able and learned set of officers for the Army is not a sufficient reason for me to vote for this section as it stands. But, sir, the main argument which is used here is, that we are to educate, at the public expense, a set of engineers, not officers of the Army. This bill provides that the cadets shall be paid $33 a month, and found, to acquire an education to go out to the country in one department of life, as engineers.

Admitting the propriety and necessity of this school, I protest against the attempt to educate, at the public expense, every young man in the country. My whole policy and idea in public life has been to put my fellow-citizens, old and young, men and their sons, rich and poor, upon a political equality, starting at the broad basis of equal rights, letting every one scramble for the prizes of life, which are open to all. Never teach your young men that they are the pets of the Government. Never say to them, "through you and by you are to come all the officers, all the commanders of our armies," and then say to others, "you need not go to the Vermont, or to the Kentucky military school, you need not seek any learning in this branch, for promotion is not yours; you cannot advance unless you go through one particular institution." I would open the door to the just emulation and just ambition of all. If you do this, you will find plenty of military schools starting up all over the country, which will educate your young men, and qualify them for the Army, as you find now that colleges and academies are educating all for the civil walks of life.

In my judgment, you will infuse a greater stimulant to exertion, and a greater ambition for excellence, and par excellence, too, in the young men of the country, if you say to them, "the door is open far you—prepare yourselves for public service in the various departments and walks of life, and the various conditions in which your country may need your services, and when they are needed you will be sure to be appointed, and to receive the proper reward."

Notwithstanding the advantages which it is said we have derived from this school, I believe that if a different policy had been adopted at the beginning, we should to-day have an abler corps of Army officers than we now have. And while I say that it is equally right that gentlemen should be educated from boyhood up for senatorial positions, and for presidential positions, as that young men should be educated for Army officers, yet I am ready to admit, and do solemnly assever, that I believe the Senate is now, and has been abler, than it would have been if a set of pet boys had been educated to take these places; and I believe the same result would have been the case with the Army. But, sir, if one is to be educated at the public expense, and become a favored class, there is no reason why another should not be.

I am opposed to this increase in the number of cadets. If it were a new question, I should be opposed to the school entirely, because I believe there is injustice and inequality in it. I believe it represses the spirit of the ambitious young men of the country who have a turn for military operations. It says to every one of them, "unless you can get patted upon the shoulder by a member of the House of Representatives or a Senator, and receive a governmental education, you can never fit yourselves for the walks of military life." In my judgment, this system was wrong in its beginning; and if I could I would wipe it out now, and begin anew; but I will not vote for its increase or extension.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President—
Mr. MASON. I ask the Senator to yield the floor that I may move to postpone the further consideration of this bill in order that we may have an Executive session. The Senator from South Carolina can have the floor to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. I will not occupy five minutes.

Mr. MASON. But other gentlemen may follow.

Mr. BUTLER. This is quite an important subject; and may be, perhaps, as well disposed of now as at any other time.

Mr. CASS. Let us dispose of it now.

Mr. BUTLER. If my friend from Virginia thinks it proper that we should now have an Executive session I will yield the floor, and allow him to make the motion. I have but a few words to say upon the pending question.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope my friend from Virginia will consent that we may proceed with this bill to-day. I think the vote ought to be taken upon it to-day. I do not believe there will be a long discussion on it. If we postpone it, we shall have the discussion over again to-morrow.

Mr. MASON. This is one of those measures which admit of a discursive debate. Many may desire to participate in the debate, for there seems to be great contrarieties of opinion in the Senate as to the propriety and expediency of the proposed changes recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CASS. I had a conversation with the Secretary of War upon the subject this morning, and perhaps what he said may influence the votes of some gentlemen.

Mr. MASON. The Senator can give it to-morrow.

Mr. SHIELDS. I prefer that we should go on with the bill now. I have received a letter from the Secretary, and I owe it to him, perhaps, to make an explanation.

Mr. BUTLER. If the debate goes on I can soon deliver myself of all that I have to say.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. SHIELDS. I feel it to be my duty to press the bill to a final vote to-day, and therefore I shall ask for a division of the motion, if it be persisted in.

Mr. BUTLER. If it be generally agreed that there is to be no more debating upon the bill, I am perfectly willing, although it will not be just to myself, to take my seat, and allow the honorable Senator from Michigan to make his statement.

Mr. CASS. I only wish to state what I was told by the Secretary of War this morning.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 16, noes 18.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I think my colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary, my friend from Indiana, contrary to his usual caution and clearness, has made his argument in conflict with itself. The predicate of his argument was that Congress having exclusive jurisdiction over all war measures, it became Congress to educate those who were to conduct the operations of war. I do not say that he went so far as to assert that it devolved upon Congress to do so, but he said that as the war power was exclusively vested in Congress, there was a corresponding duty on the part of Congress in time of peace to prepare for war. Notwithstanding this, he afterwards undertook to say, that with the same propriety with which we may educate young men at the Military Academy we could assume jurisdiction over the education of Senators and Judges, but I do not believe he said preachers. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETTIT. No, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not think he went so far as that; but he seemed to suppose that, with the same propriety, we could assume jurisdiction over the education of persons for all departments of Government. But, sir, the Constitution does not give Congress the right to provide for educating a Senator, or a judge, or anybody but one who may be engaged in the military service of the country. The power to educate these young men at West Point is clearly referable to the power to declare war; and without that authority there would be no power.

Mr. PETTIT. I hope the Senator did not understand me as denying the power. I expressly said that there was no question as to the power.

Mr. BUTLER. But you said that if this power be exerted in this manner to educate young men at the Military Academy, why not educate Senators, members of the House of Representatives, and judges? But, sir, that is apart from the subject, and I do not care to pursue it.

I may, perhaps, differ from the opinions which may be entertained by others, when I say that I think this is the most acceptable and equal mode of distributing the patronage of the Federal Government of any of which I know, because it does not attach to the Executive or to the heads of Departments merely; but, by usage and practice, it is so diffused that Representatives and Senators exert this patronage in such a way as to make it equal throughout the whole United States. We have a full Treasury, abundant means in land and money, which are appropriated sometimes to steamboats and other monopolies; to this purpose, and that purpose. Of all the forms in which public money can be appropriated I prefer that a portion of it shall be devoted to the education of young men who are to command our armies. It is an equal mode. Whether these young men go into the Army or not they are always in a condition, when a war is declared, to assume the position which honor and the obligations of the Government impose upon them. And, sir, let me say, to the credit of this class of young men, that when the war with Mexico was declared there was scarcely a young man who graduated at West Point who did not immediately come forward and offer his services to the country; and, what is more remarkable than anything else, in cases where the selection of officers depended upon the volunteers, these young men were selected.

A mere popular favorite could not command the votes of men who were to take a share in the battles of the country; and they almost invariably, when they came to select their officers, selected those who had been educated at West Point. Sir, this is a tribute to the citizen to the one who has been educated to be your soldier. He is your citizen in peace, and he is your intelligent soldier in war. And when gentlemen say to me that there is no occasion for this increase, I answer that it is but expanding the number with a view to meet what I believe will be required. If I am not very much mistaken, there will be—and I fear it—an occasion for this very class of men at no distant day. However much I may admire the gallant volunteers, of whom my friend from Illinois was an ornament—and I have every reason, perhaps, to be proud of the glory of the volunteers—I have never conversed with an intelligent man who served in the Mexican war who did not say that confidence was inspired whenever West Point intelligence indicated the way to fight; and it was that inspiring and directing influence that contributed much to the success of our arms in that brilliant campaign. Sir, the volunteer regiment from my own State of South Carolina was not without laurels; but I have never heard an intelligent man say that it was not committing to blind chance and gallant bravery troops who might have been saved under the care and direction of those possessing a military education.

Sir, I consider this the most acceptable form of distributing this patronage. If the members of the House of Representatives have this power of appointment, I think that, according to our system of Government, the Senators ought to have it; and I, for one, would not shun it. Sir, when I shall pass through life, and arrive at old age, it will be gratifying for me to know that the young men whom I may have selected for this position have fulfilled my expectations, and are willing to stand by the country. I am perfectly satisfied to regard them as proteges; and if they forfeit my confidence let them go; but if they turn out to be clever young men I should want no better monument, no higher tribute, than that I had prepared such to perform the duties properly.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, I can only repeat what I said yesterday, that there is no gentleman here who is more strongly in favor of the Military Academy than I am. I have been in official station in which I have shown my good will to it, and in darker periods than the present. It has won its own way to favor. It has conferred upon young men an education equal to any in the world, and they have won their way to distinction. But, Mr. President, the way to preserve that academy is not to increase, unnecessarily, the number of its students. There is one consideration connected with it which obviates many of the difficulties which have been started. These young men are not to be a part of the Army, they are a part of the Army. The moment they enter every one of them becomes a part of the American Army; and it is just as much in your power to educate them as it is to drill a corporal, or a sergeant, or a common soldier. The moment they enter they belong to the Army. They are liable to go through a certain course, and then, if they deserve it, to be graduated and receive commissions; but, in the mean time, I repeat, they are a portion of the Army, and their education is a matter which the Government may attend to; but in the exercise of this power, the education of young men for the Army, we should have some regard to the necessities of the service.

There are certain important considerations which bear upon this subject. I know that it is said these young men are sent through the country, and become excellent engineers, and that their education is vastly important in that view. This is very true; but it is no reason why you should, under this power of educating young men for the Army, increase the number to be educated, because they may be thereby fitted to enter into other employments through the country. No, sir; you should confine your education to the exigencies of your service; I do not mean rigidly and mathematically, but within a certain limit of discretion; and the simple question is, whether you have reached that point now or not? My honorable friend from Illinois, in whose judgment I have great confidence in all these matters, says, that when the retired list bill shall pass there will be a considerable number of vacancies to be filled. Be it so; but wait until that bill passes. When it passes, it will be time enough to fill the vacancies.

There is another consideration bearing upon the subject, which is this: that independent of the increase provided for by the addition of sixty-two cadets, you have provided in this very bill—(and it is a most excellent provision, and I thank the honorable Senator for it; it will introduce great ameliorations in the Army)—for commissioning those sergeants, and corporals, and other non-commissioned officers, who prove themselves worthy of it. If that provision is honestly and truly carried out, you will have a considerable accession to the number of officers from that source, without any addition to the Military Academy.

The question is not whether it is proper that the Senate should have this patronage. The question is above any consideration of that sort; it is whether this additional number of officers is necessary? Then, when you decide that they are wanted, you come to the question of how they shall be appointed, and I now aver before the Senate that there has not been one tittle of evidence shown that the number of young men at the Military Academy should be increased. There are now, as appears by the Army Register on our tables, fifty-seven supernumerary brevet second lieutenants. What do you want to do with more? You provide in this very bill for an almost indefinite increase of that class of officers by the elevation of every non-commissioned officer as soon as he shows himself fit for promotion. What more do you want?

What reason is given for this increase? What authority is there for it? Why, it is said that the Board of Visitors have recommended it. If you go back, Mr. President, to the annual reports of the Boards of Visitors from the commencement of the institution down to this time, I aver that you will find that if all their suggestions had been carried out you would have had by this time an institution equal to Cambridge and Oxford united, in point of expense. They have made a great many suggestions to which Congress would never agree. They are made by gentlemen on the spot, who look only partially to the considerations connected with the subject, and not to the bearing of their propositions on public opinion, and recommend what they consider to be useful. It is for us to judge of their recommendations.

Now, how is this recommendation fortified? Gentlemen seem to suppose that the War Department has recommended it. This is not so. There has not been a word from the War Department in favor of it. My honorable friend from Illinois has read from a report of the Secretary of War in respect to the buildings, and he said the number of cadets could be increased without increasing the buildings, and that is all. I called upon the Secretary of War this morning, for the simple reason that I have great confidence in his judgment on these questions; and there is hardly a measure to which I would not agree if he and my honorable friend from Illinois together would recommend it. I called to know his ground; and he assured me at once that he had made no such recommendation. He had never been called upon for his opinion. The point upon which he had been called for information he answered distinctly. He said the buildings at the academy were sufficient for an increased number of cadets; but no proposition was made to him as to the propriety of an increased number, and therefore he made no recommendation, and we have no opinion from him on that subject.

Then, I ask again upon what fact is this proposition to increase the number of cadets one fourth, to add sixty-two cadets to the Military Academy, based? Has any man shown that it is necessary for the good of the service? I repeat, it is not a question of patronage; it is not enough to add sixty-two young men to the Military Academy in order that Senators may make the appointments. That will not justify us before the American people. The first question is, do the necessities of the service require this increased number? As I said yesterday, the true way to support the Military Academy, and not to break it down, is to keep it within the rigid rules of economy so far as possible, and not let the people say that sixty-two young men have been added merely in order that Senators may have the nomination of them. No institution can outlive such a proposition. I repeat, there is no member on this floor more anxious than I am to preserve this academy for the interests of the service.

I do not know the exact number of our officers in the Army, but we now pour into it on an average sixty every year from the Military Academy; and I think that number is sufficient to meet all the wants of the service. I am willing that that shall be continued, though I find, by the Army Register, that on the first of January last there were fifty-seven supernumerary brevet second lieutenants. Why should we increase their number so largely? I think my honorable friend from Illinois had better drop this provision for the present, and allow the bill to pass without it.

The bill contains most excellent provisions. I think it is one of the best bills which has ever been introduced into the Senate, and I shall vote with great pleasure for every portion of it, except the last section which the Senator from Indiana has proposed to strike out. Its passage will elevate the rank and file of the Army. It will elevate the non-commissioned officers and will furnish them with stimuli for exertion. It will have a great moral effect. It very properly increases their pay, and will do good in this particular.

It makes one excellent provision, that when on furlough, and not in the line of duty, the officers shall receive no additional pay. I suppose that that provision will keep many an officer at his post who is now from it. I think, on the whole, it is the best bill that has ever been introduced for the Army since I have been in the Senate, and I think the honorable Senator from Illinois for it.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan a question. He seems to have had an interview with the Secretary of War on this subject. I desire to ask him if the Secretary expressed the opinion that this was unnecessary? I, like my honorable friend from Michigan, have great confidence in the opinions of the Secretary, and on any subject which has passed under his investigation, as this clearly has, I should be pleased to know his opinions.

Mr. CASS. I stated to him that I should vote against the proposition, unless I could be assured that the necessity of the service required it. I do not know that he authorized me to say that; but as far as I have gone I had his full authority.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yesterday I was asked whether this was recommended by the Secretary of War. I stated that it was recommended by the Visitors to the West Point Academy, and the Secretary of War approved of that report, and sent it here; and I considered that tantamount to a recommendation.

Mr. CASS. I desire to say, that my object in going to the Secretary of War was to ascertain the grounds for it.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then I will further say that I acted upon that recommendation in certain cases in the bill. I called upon the Secretary of War and had a conversation with him in relation to it, and he assented to its being in the bill. He has not recommended it in his report, but the bill has been examined and reexamined by him and by myself, and by the other members of the committee. He has not positively recommended it in his report or to me, but he assented to its being in. The honorable Senator says there is no necessity for this increase. I stated yesterday what I believed to be a necessity. There are many things which I could have stated that have been hinted at by the honorable Senator from South Carolina. When the proper time comes I will show, or I will attempt to show, that not only ought we to increase the number of our officers, but we ought to increase our Army and our Navy much further than has been contemplated by any man on this floor—not, sir, for war, for I have seen enough of war never to wish to see another, but to keep out of war—to preserve neutrality, a dignified neutrality, a neutrality that the world will respect; and in the present condition of the world does any man suppose that this nation can do that unless it presents itself in an attitude to command the respect of the world? You see the whole world arming—arming in such a way as it never armed before; you see combinations such as you have not seen in the history of countries or of times. Sir, we shall be peculiarly fortunate, providentially fortunate, if, by a little timely, salutary, wise preparation we can place ourselves in a condition that we will not be thrown into this vortex and made a party to this fearful contest that is about to shake the civilized world. Yet you talk about the expense of sixty-two additional cadets, and adding them to the Army; and, sir, I have to beg and supplicate here to be heard when I speak of that poor little starving Army that is broken down. Why? It has no political influence. It is away on the frontier, performing services and enduring sacrifices that no other army of the same number on the face of the globe is enduring and performing at this time.

A bill has passed this body, and gone to the other House—and will pass there, unless, as is always the case here, we consume the session in abstractions, instead of practical subjects—to rid the Army of a number of supernumerated, broken-down officers—not to turn them out, not to cast them adrift, but to provide for them. I stated, and could prove it if I had time, that these sixty-two additional cadets every five years, for it will not amount to more than that, will not increase the number of officers more than is sufficient to officer the Army according to the maximum, legal standard of that Army now. But when the proper time comes—and there is a bill on the Calendar providing for raising three additional regiments of men; and I mean to take that up at an early day, if I can—I shall desire to be heard upon these points.

My honorable friend [Mr. BUTLER] has made a suggestion to me. I am very much gratified to find that the Senator from Michigan is in favor of the bill, for I confess I was beginning to suspect his sincerity in relation to the Army—I am delighted to withdraw that suspicion—for I had always found him the first to rise here and say, well, you are contemplating some change that nobody understands; yet the bills have been lying here the whole session. But I thank him for the kind manner in which he has complimented the committee for this bill, and also the Department, because I am delighted to have it in my power to improve the condition of the Army, while we have a man at the head of that Department in whom I have the most entire confidence.

The honorable Senator from Michigan says, that if we had adopted every recommendation of the Board of Visitors there is no telling what they would have made of this institution. I beg the honorable Senator's pardon. I have read a good many of them. I think them exceedingly wise. I will tell you why. The visitors—in that respect unlike the Secretary—come from every part of the United States. They represent the different sections of the Union—every portion of it. They have no interest, under heaven, but to promote the public good. They go and examine the academy. They ascertain all about it. It is their duty to make recommendations; and I have even more confidence in their recommendations than I have in those of the Department.

As for the idea that this patronage ought not to be exercised by Senators, who represent sovereign States here, I am surprised that Senators should put their objection upon that ground. It is the best distribution that can be made of it, and it is in accordance with your institutions. As the law stands you have the cadets represented by districts, that is by population. Now, we want to have a State representation in the same way, by which your small States will have the same chances that your large States have.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President—
Mr. CASS. I want to say a word to my honorable friend from Illinois, and it is this: Never to suspect one of his colleagues on this floor because he differs from him. There is no ground for his suspicion in this case. I will repeat what I have said: Never suspect one of your fellow members here because he differs from you in opinion.

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not.
Mr. CASS. Why suspect me? I never gave a vote against the Army in my life. You cannot find one; not one.

Mr. SHIELDS. I expressed my pleasure that the Senator was in favor of the bill.

Mr. CASS. The Senator will excuse me. Being an "Old Fogey," I am a little irritable at times. [Laughter.] It is the way with us old folks.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, when this amendment was offered yesterday by the Senator from Indiana, I announced my intention to vote for it. I have listened to the discussion which has ensued upon the subject, and it has only served to strengthen my convictions that the amendment is right, and that the section increasing the number of cadets to correspond with the number of Senators, ought to be stricken from the bill. Sir, in all that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] said eulogistic of the Secretary of War, I fully and cordially concur. I think both from education, practical experience, and administrative talent, that there has perhaps never been at the head of the War Department an officer who was better qualified to discharge its important duties than is the present Secretary. But notwithstanding my entire confidence in him, and respect for his recommendations, I must, whenever a proposition of this character comes up, be allowed to judge of its expediency and propriety for myself. I am pleased to concur with my friends of the Department and of the military committee when I think they are right—not otherwise; and I always retain the privilege of thinking for myself, whatever may be the question upon which I am called to act.

I announced yesterday in my off-hand way, that I thought Senators had quite as much to do with appointments as they ought to have, and that the fact, that it was proposed to give us the nomination of cadets, was its smallest recommendation to me. I stated incidentally, that we were a part of the appointing power, that when cadets were promoted to second lieutenantcies, we were called on, in the discharge of our constitutional duties, to advise and consent to their appointments, and that I thought was as much as we ought to have to do with them. But, sir, I now humbly submit to the Senate, that the spectacle which we present, is not what in all respects I think it should be. If the exigencies of the public service call for a measure of this character, to avoid the imputation of selfishness, which I do not charge upon any one, it should have originated with the people's representatives. The fact that the section confers upon Senators the direct appointment of sixty-two persons, who are thus made officers of the Army, does not look well to me. It has the appearance of a desire to grasp power. Such was my impression as soon as I heard it read, and everything which has since been said in debate has only served to strengthen that conviction. I repeat, the proposition should have come from the immediate representatives of the people, those people who are to pay the taxes that will be requisite to pay the consequent expense of this large addition to the officers, not the rank and file of the Army.

Now, Mr. President, no one has attacked the West Point Military Academy. Every one who has referred to that institution has done so in friendly and complimentary terms. We are not now called on to pass upon the merits of the Military Academy. The question before us is that of increasing its numbers, and to that point should the argument be directed; and surely no one has begun to answer the cogent objections stated by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] who is the well-known, sincere, and able friend both of the Military Academy and of the Army.

Now, Mr. President, I have noticed that whenever there is a proposition to appropriate half a million dollars for the Collins steam line, or any other line, or any other magnificent object of expenditure, we have eulogiums upon steam and its advantages—such as we have to-day had upon West Point and its benefits. It will be time enough for those matters to be brought into the debate when they shall be attacked, or their benefits denied.

Mr. President, the tendency of all our legislation is to excess; immaterial what it is we undertake, we are almost certain to overdo it. The Military Academy is now doing well, and for one, I say, listen to the wise counsel of the experienced Senator from Michigan, and let its organization alone. Increase the pay of its cadets, as that is shown to be necessary, but do not increase their number. The result of the proposed increase, if it should prevail, will, in an eminent degree, be to revive in the minds of the people those prejudices against this institution which existed in the minds of the people anterior to the war with Mexico. The scramble for these sixty-two places of a life tenure, will at once cause the people to examine into its nature and organization, and the principles upon which its appointments are made; and the more they do so, the more, in my judgment, will they become dissatisfied with it. The number which can be appointed will be so few, as compared with the applicants, that discontent will be excited all over the country, which will show itself in a variety of forms, not now imagined, and will ultimately lead to the overthrow of the institution. That will be the effect of it, I fear.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. Pearce] made an attack upon the President of the United States for the manner in which he had exercised the right to designate the "ten" cadets appointed "at large." I think he charged that it was calculated to rear or support a military aristocracy. How differently do different persons view the same act! I regarded the President's course in the selection of the ten cadets, to which that Senator refers, as an act of sheer justice to the sons of persons whose lives have been spent in the service of their country. I happened to be with a member from the other House from Ohio, [Mr. Corwin,] when soon after the commencement of the present session, he waited upon the President to recommend a youth from his district. I had a like duty to perform for a constituent of mine. The President candidly, and at once, informed us that he could not appoint either of the young men whose names we presented to him, and for the reason that he had made up his mind to select the "ten" from among the sons of those officers who had lost their lives in the service of the country. He remarked that the representative from each Congressional district had the selection of a cadet, but that they rarely, if ever, nominated the son of an officer, for the reason that they seldom remained sufficiently long in any place to give them any claims upon the member. He said, he thought the ten appointments were given to him that he might have an opportunity to appoint some of the sons of those officers of the Army who had fallen in battle, and whose poor and widowed mothers were soliciting him to do so, or the sons of officers, who, if living, have from their situation and circumstances no local habitation or political influence. Mr. Corwin and myself at once agreed that he was right, although his decision excluded our constituents. We could not, in our hearts, think that those whom we presented, deserved a preference over the offspring of such men as Worth, Martin, Scott, McIntosh, Hooe, and a host of others who have passed the greater part of their lives on the confines of the Republic, and without the limits of congressional districts or political influences—persons the bare mention of whose names causes the recollection of their heroic deeds to rush back upon the memory of every American—men whose bodies were scared all over upon our battle-fields, from the war of 1812 to that of Mexico. The conduct of the President in providing for the children of some of the officers to whom I allude meets the approbation both of my head and heart.

Mr. PEARCE. I am not willing to have it supposed that I intended to make an attack upon the President. I think that I disclaimed such an intention. I meant to assign a reason why we should not enlarge his patronage in this respect. I had noticed that all his appointments were made from the sons of military or naval officers; and I thought that if the number of cadets were increased by the addition of sixty-two in the course of four years, and the appointments were not given to Senators, but to the Executive, the probability was that there would be too much of that sort of patronage which, at the present time, the President extends to the sons of military men; for he can have no personal knowledge of the merits and capacities of those who may be urged upon him for these places at West Point; he must be governed, either as he is governed now, by reference to the claims, real or supposed, of military men, or by political influence, which will press upon him, as we know it does very often in every department of the public service. He is not to be reproached, because he cannot have the personal information which we shall have, and must be liable either to one or other of the influences which I have mentioned. However, sir, if I said anything which reflects injuriously upon the President in regard to these appointments, I qualify it, and desire it to be understood that I do not censure him for the selections which he has made, but only wish to avoid the extension of the principle of those selections. A few of these cadetries may quite properly be bestowed in consideration of the high military merit of the parent in addition to the fitness of the son, but the great majority should be taken from other walks of life.

I desire to make one other remark, if the Senator will allow me, which I ought to have made before, and which has been called to my attention by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Brown.] The President now appoints ten cadets every year, or forty in four years. The members of the House of Representatives appoint two hundred and thirty-three every four years, so that the patronage of the President is more than one-sixth of that of the House of Representatives. That is a very large proportion to assign to the sons of military men, and it should not be increased.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. There the Senator and I differ entirely. I think that the President did precisely right, and that if it is necessary to increase the number of cadets at the Military Academy, they should be at the disposal of the President, to be given to those boys whose fathers are engaged in the Army, and are thus without, I may say, a local habitation—certainly without political influence with the Representative of any Congressional district. The Senator of course knows with what views and for what purposes he animadverted upon the conduct of the President in this matter. He referred to the fact that appointments had just been made, and had been bestowed, without one exception, upon the class of persons named by him; and differing from him as I do, respecting the propriety of the selections made by the President, I could not allow his remarks to go unanswered.

I will not detain the Senate further on this subject. But there are some other recommendations of the Secretary of War, which I want attended to. I think my friend from Illinois has a bill before us to increase the rank and file of the Army. This is needed to protect the people out in New Mexico, Oregon, California, Iowa and Nebraska, and I shall vote for that bill with great pleasure. My friend from Illinois, I am aware, is laboring efficiently for the good of the public service, and especially that branch which has been confided to him. I will vote for the bill to increase the rank and file of the Army, but not the officers, when we are now turning them off at the rate of two hundred and forty-three every four years.

Mr. SHIELDS. Do I understand my honorable friend to say that he is in favor of this bill, except the section proposed to be stricken out?

Mr. DODGE. I am.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ADAMS. Let the section which is proposed to be stricken out be read.

It was read, as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That in addition to the number of cadets authorized by the existing laws, there shall be appointed two from each State, upon the recommendation of the respective Senators.

Mr. PRATT. The first question will be, I suppose, upon the amendment which I proposed to the amendment.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator from Maryland moved to strike out the last words of the section, "upon the recommendation of the respective Senators." The question will first be upon that.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to say, so that the Senate may understand it, that if the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is agreed to, the effect will be to authorize the appointment of sixty-two additional cadets, and leave the selection to the President, so that he may select them from one State, or two, or three. The selection as it stands gives the small States the same chance as the large ones.

Mr. PRATT. I do not want the amendment to be misunderstood. Its effect will be to leave the appointments without any mode specified for the making of them. It will give rise to a subsequent arrangement, and if none is made the appointments will be left to the President.

Mr. CLAYTON. There appears to be some difficulty in regard to which amendment the question will first be taken upon. If I understand it, the motion first made was to strike out the ninth section. Then a motion was made to strike out the last words of the section. Upon which does the Chair state the question is to be first taken?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the amendment to strike out the last words.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on Mr. PRATT's amendment to the amendment, resulted—yeas 6, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brodhead, Cass, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Pratt, and Sumner—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Brown, Butler, Clayton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Rusk, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, Walker, Weller, Williams, and Wright—32.

So it was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment to strike out the section, it was taken by yeas and nays, and resulted—yeas 13, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Brodhead, Cass, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Hamlin, Norris, Pettit, Pratt, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, and Williams—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Brown, Butler, Clayton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Morton, Pearce, Rusk, Shields, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Wright—25.

No further amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The amendment made yesterday as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and, being read a third time, was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a bill to authorize the school commissioners of the fractional township No. 1, range No. 10 east, in Alabama, to locate one half section of land for school purposes.

HOMESTEAD BILL—EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. WALKER. We have had a special order on the Calendar since Monday last, and each day I have attempted to get it up. It is the bill commonly known as the homestead bill. I do not know what its friends propose, but for my own part, I am willing and anxious, as soon as I can, to take it up and have it acted upon according to the order which the Senate has made. If, however, I can get any expression from the friends of the bill, that they desire its postponement until we can get through with the Executive business, I am willing to coincide with that opinion; but I am unwilling to see it go over, apparently by the neglect of its friends.

Mr. GWIN. I desire to state, in answer to the Senator from Wisconsin—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. WALKER. And we are opposing it.

Mr. GWIN. I want to give a reason why I cannot come to an understanding now in reference to this question. On Monday next I shall move to take up the bill which has been assigned as the special order for that day—the Pacific railroad bill. I am in favor of the homestead bill; and also take some interest in the question pending in Executive session; but I want the Pacific railroad bill disposed of, and shall certainly object to its postponement.

Mr. MASON. It will be the more practical and better way to get through with one subject which is before us, and then take up another.

Mr. WALKER. I do not pretend to measure strength with the Senator from Virginia, as to qualities of practicability; but this much I say, that I claim an equal right with him to rise up and resist his motion, and I do not wish to be flouted for doing so, and I shall not. I have this to say: that if the friends of the homestead bill, which has been made a special order, are willing to be overhauled for this week, and then next week by the Pacific railroad bill, be it so. I have but the voice of one Senator, but that voice I have already raised, and I shall again exercise it, despite of what may be said by any one.

Mr. MASON. If the Senator will indulge me—he certainly misinterprets me if he supposes that I made any remark which was intended in the least degree to reflect upon him; very far from it—I merely suggested that we had better do one thing at a time, and then proceed to another.

Mr. WALKER. It may not have been intended to be disrespectful or unpleasant; but it has become common to say things in a manner which seems disrespectful. But it then becomes a question which shall be the measure taken up. It is a question between the subject desired to be considered in Executive session and the homestead bill. For my part, I prefer the consideration of the homestead bill first. I, therefore, say, that until I can get an expression from the friends of the bill as to what they wish I shall oppose a motion to go into Executive session.

Mr. MASON'S motion was agreed to.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 22, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Chief Engineer of the War Department with reports containing information in regard to works of defense in progress at Fort Point and Alcatrazas Island, in California, which were not forwarded in time to accompany the annual report from that officer respecting fortifications.

On motion by Mr. BISSELL, the communication and accompanying documents were ordered to be laid on the table, and printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the motion made yesterday by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of settlers on lands reserved for railroad purposes was ordered to a third reading; and upon that question the gentleman from South Carolina is entitled to the floor.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a question of privilege. I move to reconsider the vote by which, yesterday, the resolution reported from the Committee on Printing, on the part of the House, was adopted, which directs that one hundred thousand extra copies of the agricultural report of the Patent Office be printed by the printer of this House.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will suspend for a moment, the Chair would inform him that, according to his recollection of the matter, the motion was made yesterday to reconsider that vote, and the motion to reconsider was then laid upon the table, and therefore the gentleman's motion would not be in order.

Mr. BAYLY. Does the Journal show that fact?

The SPEAKER. It does. The motion was made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MURRAY.]

Mr. BAYLY. I beg leave to say, then, that a citizen is deprived thereby of appealing to a tribunal which this House has constituted, and that is the Committee on Printing, in regard to his interests.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed certain private bills of the House, and also a bill and joint resolution of the following title:

S. 160. An act for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Colonel Alexander G. Morgan; and

S. R. 11. A resolution for extending an existing contract for carrying the mail in Alabama; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.]

PUBLIC LANDS TO MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HARRIS, of Mississippi, in pursuance of previous notice, asked, obtained leave, and introduced the following bill; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill granting to the State of Mississippi lands in alternate sections to aid in the construction of a railroad from Brandon, in said State, to Mississippi city, or to a point opposite Ship Island, on the Mississippi coast.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up the joint resolution which has just been brought into the House from the Senate, in reference to extending contracts for carrying the mails in Alabama; and, with the permission of the House, I desire to explain the reasons for the request which I have made.

Mr. HAMILTON. Unless the consideration of the matter referred to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] comes out of the morning hour, I object to taking it up.

Mr. ORR. And if it comes out of the morning hour, I object.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The explanation of the bill will occupy but a few minutes.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object to its consideration at the present time.

Mr. ORR. Has the morning hour commenced?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. ORR. Then I think it is but justice to this House to proceed to the consideration of the business which is pending before it, in order.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to postpone the consideration of that pending business, and to give me the opportunity of explaining the necessity of passing that joint resolution at this time.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] objects. The gentleman from South Carolina is entitled to the floor upon the pending motion to reconsider the bill for the relief of settlers on lands reserved for railroad purposes.

RELIEF OF SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS RESERVED FOR RAILROADS.

Mr. ORR. When I made the motion yesterday to reconsider the vote by which this bill for the relief of settlers on lands reserved for railroad purposes was ordered to a third reading, I had not examined particularly into its provisions. But since that time I have taken occasion to devote some attention to it, and from such investigation, I am more thoroughly satisfied than ever that the bill ought not to pass. The terms of it are in direct conflict with the provisions of laws which we have heretofore passed, granting alternate sections of land to aid in the construction of railroads.

Now, sir, in the bill which was passed, granting these alternate sections to the State of Arkansas, for such purposes, the right of preemptors are specially guarded and protected. Every man who has brought himself within the provisions of the preemption law is entitled to have the lands upon which he has located exempted from sale, either by the company or the Government; his right of preemption is already protected by the bill making the grant to the companies in Arkansas and Missouri, and will in the same way be protected in all future bills.

But this bill proposes to go further than that. It proposes to give the benefit of preemption, not only within the limits of the six miles, but within the limits of the fifteen miles through which the road passes, to every squatter who may choose to locate upon them, whether he has complied with the conditions of the preemption law or not.

And it goes even further than that. It proposes to give him the benefit of that preemption at $1 25 per acre, when the land around him has been raised by the Government to $2 50 per acre. That is the effect of the bill. If gentlemen will examine the matter for a moment, they will see that the operation of the bill will be not only to allow these persons to take the sections which the Government has reserved to itself, but it also allows them to take the sections which have been given to the railroad company, if indeed you can divest the title which has already been conferred on the railroad company.

Again, by the provisions of this railroad bill you allow the railroad company to go outside of the limits of six miles to fifteen miles for the purpose of supplying the deficiency which has been created by your action, in giving this right of preemption where it did not previously exist. And it proposes to confer upon those persons who have failed to comply with the law—who are themselves at fault, and in consequence of whose fault are likely to lose the benefits of preemption—I say it proposes to confer upon these persons the right of preemption at $1 25 per acre. Now, I say that if you propose to give them the right of preemption, you should require them to pay $2 50 per acre upon the reserved sections.

So manifest and so palpable is the justice of the views I am now taking in this case, that at the last Congress, when the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Ficklin,] who found his constituents in precisely the same situation as those of the gentleman from Arkansas now, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Hall,] who found his constituents in the same situation, introduced a bill for their relief; but he did not even ask the House to give them the right of preemption on these reserved sections for less than $2 50 per acre. That bill passed, allowing the persons who had settled upon lands within the six miles in which alternate sections had been given to the railroad, and who had neglected to bring themselves within the provisions of the general preemption law, the right of preemption at $2 50 per acre.

Now, sir, the effect of this bill, in my judgment, is this: Congress goes to work and passes an act donating alternate sections of the public lands to this railroad. The reserved sections are raised in price from $1 25 to $2 50, the object of which is to compensate, by their increased value, the Government for the donation. But now it is proposed to give those persons, though they may not have complied with the law, the right of preemption at $1 25 per acre, thereby depriving the Government of $1 25 upon every acre of this preempted land; and depriving the Government of the benefit of the very consideration which induced the passage of these railroad bills.

Mr. Speaker, I can very well understand how the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] yesterday rose in his place and advocated the passage of this bill. That gentleman has been throughout consistent in his opposition to these bills granting alternate sections to railroads. He has charged again and again upon the floor of this House that those grants were purely gifts to the railroad companies, that the Government will not be compensated for the donation; and the gentleman, by the speech which he made the other day upon an amendment to a bill then under consideration, by his vote upon that amendment, and by his course in reference to this bill, seems determined to make his view of the case prove true, by depriving the Government of the benefit of the $2 50 per acre upon the reserved sections. If it be true that Congress has determined to pursue the policy indicated by this bill; if it be true that we are to allow persons to settle upon these reserved sections which have been raised to $2 50 per acre, at $1 25, I concede the position claimed by the gentleman from Tennessee, that it will be true that the Government will be making a donation without receiving a corresponding advantage.

Sir, I say that the principles of this bill are directly in conflict with the principles upon which all these grants of alternate sections to railroads have been made. And I think that the gentlemen upon this floor who are in favor of that principle, ought not to set an example now of withdrawing from the Government that very land at a reduced price, in opposition to the consideration inducing the grants. I know that they think there is some danger of their bill failing.

It may be that the bills which have been reported will fail; but that some just and liberal policy towards the new States will be adopted by this House and this Congress I have not the slightest doubt. I trust that gentlemen will not, by their votes at least, place those of us in the old States, who have heretofore supported their grants, in a position where the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] and others, who have opposed these grants, desire we shall be placed, and that is, that we make them without a corresponding benefit to the Government.

I therefore hope, Mr. Speaker, that the motion which I have made to reconsider the vote will prevail; and when we shall get back to that point where the bill shall be open to amendment, I will move to amend by providing that those persons who secure their preemptions within the six miles shall pay the minimum price at which the lands have been fixed, to wit, $2 50 per acre.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill, and a very short and, I think, simple one in its provisions. It provides that every settler on public land which has been, or may be withdrawn from market in consequence of proposed railroads, and who had settled thereon prior to such withdrawal, shall be entitled to preemption, at the ordinary minimum price, to the lands settled and cultivated by them; provided that they shall prove up their rights according to such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and pay for the same before the day that may be fixed by the President's proclamation for the restoration of said lands to market.

The bill only provides for those settlers who may have made their location on the public land prior to its withdrawal from market, under any railroad, or proposed railroad grant. It does not secure to an individual within the broad extent of this country, any of the rights of preemption, who shall have gone upon the land after Congress shall have passed a law granting alternate sections to the States in which they lie, for railroad purposes. The man must be there before the lands are withdrawn from sale; and not only that, but he must prove up his right under the provisions of the bill, his right to preemption under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, and shall, in addition thereto, pay the money for the same prior to the return of the lands into the market, under the proclamation of the President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I would now ask what injustice there is to the States and the companies which shall be the beneficiaries of acts of Congress? Are the private rights of individuals—are the rights of settlers to be disregarded, overridden, destroyed? Are they, to use a favorite expression now in vogue, to be crushed out for the benefit of corporations? Will not the settler upon the lands make as good a citizen as if he should come in there afterwards and pay $2 50 an acre for his land?

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will state the provisions of the preemption laws now, and then he will see whether these men who have settled on the public lands are entitled to this kind consideration he speaks of. If they had complied with the provisions of those laws, they would not have been here asking that this bill should be passed. It is their own fault.

Mr. JONES. They may not, when they have gone upon the land in the first instance, have filed their declarations, or complied strictly with the preemption law, and the requirements of that law, but they have a right at any time while upon that land to comply with those requirements, and then its benefits result to them. If one of these men is now upon this land, and has not complied with those regulations, you, sir, living where you do, can go and enter his domicile and turn him out. If I understand the law, he is not protected under it until he does comply with its provisions. I cannot, for one, by my vote, deprive these men of their benefits under that law, in order to benefit a company.

The gentleman from South Carolina does me but justice when he says that I am opposed to these railroad grants. It is true; but Congress has passed some of them, and I fear will pass others. He also does me but justice when he says that the bills will be more acceptable to me if you will retain the alternate sections at $1 25 per acre.

I am as well satisfied as I am of any one thing in this world, that our wild lands in the new country are not worth one cent a thousand acres until labor is applied to them, until they are brought into cultivation and made productive, and yield to the necessities, wants, and comforts of the human family. Sir, I ask you, and this House, and the country, of what value will your railroads be without farmers—without cultivators? You say that your railroads are to give value to these lands. The cultivation of those lands will give ten—yes, one hundred fold more value to them than all the railroads you can make through them; for your railroads will be worse than useless if the lands are not made productive by cultivation, by labor, by settlers.

Then, sir, I repeat, that he who goes into the wilderness with his little family, with but little, if any, of the goods of this world to take with him; who goes into the wilds of your new country and settles your lands; he who is the pioneer, if you charge him not one cent for the land, pays a dearer price in the wear and tear of his constitution, and in the hardships and toil that he is subjected to, incident to the settlement of the country, than the man who comes thirty or forty years after him, when they are blessed with all the means of civilization, with school-houses and churches, with society and all its blessings, and who pays forty, fifty, and a hundred dollars per acre. I, for one, if there is no other upon this floor, will continue to advocate by my voice and by my vote the rights of the settlers on the public lands. I hope that the motion to reconsider will be laid upon the table.

Mr. STRAUB. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to ask him one question? If I understand this bill, it will have a prospective as well as retrospective effect. Is that so?

Mr. JONES. According to my understanding of the bill, if a man goes out and settles upon public lands subject to private entry, and ten years hence you pass a railroad grant, he will have a right to perfect his preemption under it, if he does it before the lands are withdrawn from market.

Mr. STRAUB. It is precisely in the shape as I understand it. Every railroad that is proposed to be built by a little management can become the possessor of every alternate section of land upon the whole line of the road. They certainly can do this, and viewing it in that light, I intend to vote for the reconsideration.

Mr. BISSELL. The passage of this bill will be a precise reversal of the policy which Congress has heretofore pursued in regard to these reserved lands. One of the main grounds upon which these railroad bills have been maintained was, that the Government lost nothing thereby, inasmuch as the reserved sections were doubled in price, indeed, they were often quadrupled in value. Notwithstanding this very large increase in the price of reserved lands, this bill proposes to sell them to a certain class of persons at the old price of $1 25 per acre. And why is this? Why, says the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] that they may have the benefit of the preemption right. By what means do you give them the benefit of the preemption right, and what is that benefit? It is the privilege of purchasing, in preference to anybody else, the land upon which they have lived, at the price at which that land is held when they pay for it, and not at the price at which that land was held when they settled upon it, perhaps ten, fifteen, twenty or twenty-five years ago. No, sir! The preemption right implies no such thing. I presume the right implies that the settler, in preference to any other person, shall be permitted to purchase the land upon which he lives, at the price at which another citizen could be permitted to purchase it. But the gentleman from Tennessee says that the settler is entitled, not only to this preemption right, but that he is entitled to purchase the land at half the price which another citizen must pay for it, by the law making the grant to the railroad because he squatted upon it long ago. I am for carrying out the principles of the preemption law to the fullest extent. I have yet to learn what merit that man has who settles upon Government land, and lives upon it for twenty or thirty years without paying for it. I am willing to give him the benefit of the preemption law. Let him purchase the land in preference to anybody else; but do not let him have it at half the price which the emigrant from the Old World would have to pay for the same tract of land. Now, is it any hardship to require that of him? He has, probably, already made on his farm, without paying taxes for it to the State, and without paying anything at all to the Government for it, ten or twenty times the amount which he is now asked to pay for the land. Is it a hardship, then, to require him to pay the same price for his land that other citizens have to pay, and would be willing to pay?

But the gentleman from Tennessee seems to conclude that the settler has a sort of vested right to purchase the land at the price at which the land was held when he squatted upon it. By what rule is that doctrine maintained?

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to make a remark?

Mr. BISSELL. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES. If I understand, Mr. Speaker, this bill, and the bills which have heretofore been passed for the benefit of railroad companies, the price of the land is not increased to $2 50 per acre until it shall have been first withdrawn from the market at private entry, and shall have been, by the proclamation of the proper Department, offered at public sale; and such lands as shall not be bought at that sale shall then be subject to private entry at $2 50 per acre. Now, suppose this bill required these settlers to perfect their proof to the absolute preemption right, and to pay $1 25 per acre before the land is returned to market at $2 50 per acre?

Mr. BISSELL. But why should they only pay $1 25 an acre, when other citizens must pay $2 50? Is it because they settle on the land before the price is raised to $2 50 an acre? But the price was raised to that when the railroad bills were passed. Was it any merit on the part of the settler to squat upon and occupy the public lands? Was it such a merit, I say, as to entitle him now to the right of purchasing the land at half the price of that in which it is in the market? Ought he to have such a privilege over all other citizens?

But another thing, Mr. Speaker. The land in the State of Illinois which was reserved to the Government in the grant made to the State for the purposes of the Central Railroad Company, is, as this ought to be, subject to preemption at this price of $2 50 per acre. Now will you establish such an inequality in the States of Arkansas or Missouri, by making these reserved lands be held at the price of $1 25 per acre to actual settlers, while in the State of Illinois, and perhaps in other States, the price is fixed at $2 50 per acre?

Mr. COBB. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. BISSELL. With pleasure.

Mr. COBB. The preemption right secured in the bill which passed the last Congress, applied strictly to that class of citizens who had settled on the lands after the increase of the price to $2 50 per acre; that they should have the preference of purchasing at that price merely.

Mr. BISSELL. And it included those who should hereafter settle on the lands so granted to railroad companies, as well as those who had already settled.

Mr. COBB. Most assuredly; but this bill goes back behind all this, and applies to citizens who have settled there before the passage of these railroad bills.

Mr. BISSELL. So does the law that was passed in reference to the public lands in the State of Illinois, to which I have before referred; and I still maintain—and defy any gentleman on this floor to refute my position—that if a man had settled on these lands before the railroad grants were made, he is not thereby entitled to purchase them now at a price less than that which other citizens would have to pay for them. The squatter, in settling upon the land, acquires a preemption right to purchase it in preference to anybody else, at the price fixed on these lands by Congress; but he is not entitled to the preemption right at a less price. Why, there are thousands of persons now on the public lands entitled to their preemption right at the price of $1 25 per acre. But suppose that to-day Congress should pass a law increasing the price of all these public lands to $2 50 per acre, would it be contended that these squatters who had secured their right to the preemption privilege, were entitled to that preemption at the price of $1 25 per acre, notwithstanding such general increase of price? No, sir; those who squat upon the public lands acquire no such right. Yet, if we were to act upon the principle laid down by the gentleman from Tennessee, Congress could not, with respect to such persons, increase the price of the public lands.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois a single question. Suppose that Congress should now pass a law to increase the price of all the public lands to $2 or $2 50 an acre, would not the gentleman vote to secure the settler his preemption lands at $1 25 an acre?

Mr. BISSELL. No, never; as I should thereby be doing great injustice to others, who would have to pay $2 50 per acre.

Mr. JONES. Well, I would.

Mr. BISSELL. To those who have settled upon the public lands, I am in favor of giving the full benefit of the preemption right. What is that preemption right? The right of first purchasing the land. At what price? At the price at which the lands were held thirty years ago? No; but at the price at which they are held when the purchase is made.

Mr. WARREN. I regret exceedingly that this bill has met with so formidable opposition as it has in the persons of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL.] Of course, I can scarcely expect the passage of this bill, although local in its character, over the head of such formidable opposition. But, notwithstanding this, I feel that it is a duty which I owe to myself and to my constituents, to explain the provisions of the bill. I think I can do so satisfactorily to the House, as it is simple in its provisions, and involving no great principles which this Congress is called upon, by virtue of its passage, to thwart. It only proposes to do justice to a meritorious class of citizens, and disturbs no great principle. This is a feature of the bill, which, in my judgment, ought to meet the commendation of gentlemen who are opposed to these grants to aid in the construction of railroads, as well as those who are in favor of them; and I come to that conclusion because I am satisfied that it is a bill just and equitable in all its provisions—one that does no violence to others, while, as I said before, it does but simple justice to a meritorious class of citizens, which class is not unfrequently overlooked by deliberative bodies.

What does this bill ask? Permit me to say that, in the discussion of this bill, and in the statement of those provisions, I am not going to allude to the term "squatter," which the gentleman from Illinois has been pleased to apply to this estimable class of citizens who ask to be relieved.

Mr. BISSELL. I will remark to the gentleman, that it is hardly necessary for me to say that I used the term "squatter" in no disrespectful sense. It is a term which, in the West, is considered perfectly respectful; and if it is not so in Arkansas it is because the "squatters" in that State are a different set of men than those found elsewhere.

Mr. WARREN. We have no such word in our vocabulary to apply to any class of citizens in Arkansas, which seems to be applied in Illinois to the class which this bill is intended to benefit. We know nothing about it.

I propose to speak only of the merits of the bill, and the object intended to be accomplished by it, and we shall thereby see whether it is not fair in its provisions. When I shall have done that, if the House shall see proper to vote down the bill, well and good. I shall not complain, recognizing, as I do, the right of the majority of this House to determine upon all such matters.

This bill proposes what? Not as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STRAUB] supposes, retrospective action. Not at all. It proposes to provide only for persons who are settlers upon lands which have been reserved for railroad purposes, at the time the reservations were made, and not for those who shall become such settlers in the future. It is the first class of persons only who are to be benefited by this bill. Is it those who have been fortunate enough, or unfortunate enough, as the case may be, to settle upon the line of the great Central road in Illinois, or upon the Cairo and Fulton road in Arkansas? Not at all. If gentlemen will refer to the acts of Congress donating public lands to the roads in Illinois and Arkansas, they will see that a special provision was made protecting those who had settled upon the lines of those roads before the grants were made.

But if they will look a little further, they will find that there is a class of persons who had the fortune to live upon the lines of proposed railroads to which Congress has not made grants, but which grants have barely been contemplated. For instance, the Mississippi, Washita, and Red river, and the Shreveport and Vicksburg railroad. There has been no grant of land to either of these roads; nevertheless, by proclamation of the President, the lands upon the lines of the proposed roads have been reserved from sale. Now, how are the citizens who may reside along the lines of these proposed roads, who have had no notice of the intended reservation, to comply with the conditions of the preemption laws? I do not understand, and I apprehend there is not a member of this House who can understand, how these persons, under such circumstances, can avail themselves of the benefit of the existing preemption law.

I apprehend that every gentleman upon this floor understands the mode by which these lands have been reserved from sale. Gentlemen are doubtless aware that they are reserved without consulting or advising the citizens who live adjacent to the proposed roads of the fact. They have been reserved by virtue of the representations of members of this House, or by persons, perhaps, coming from the section of country through which the road is to pass, by the representations at the Department of the Government, under the direction of which a proclamation is made reserving these lands from sale, without either directly or indirectly giving any notice to those who had been fortunate, or unfortunate enough—certainly unfortunate, if this bill does not pass—to live in the vicinity of the road.

Now, sir, these are the circumstances under which this bill comes before the House. I appeal to the gentlemen of the House—I appeal especially to those who are opposed to the policy of granting lands to aid in the construction of railroads, to give this bill a fair construction. I ask them if the older States of the Union, or if the General Government, is to suffer by the passage of this law? Not at all. It is only permitting the settler upon these lands to do what he had the right to do before the President issued his proclamation reserving these lands from sale. It gives him the right of preemption upon these lands, at the rate of $1 25 per acre. I disguise nothing in reference to it. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] says we propose to allow these persons to take the lands raised by order of the Government to $2 50 per acre at $1 25 per acre. The bill does so provide; and if it did not, I would vote against it. Does it do injustice to any one? Not at all. These lands were entered before the proclamation reserving them from sale was issued, when they were in the market at $1 25 per acre, and how can it be doing violence to the General Government by now permitting this class of persons to have the lands at the same price?

Now, sir, I repeat, does this bill do violence to the older States of the Union? Does it do violence to the railroad corporations or companies? Well, sir, if it does, I would still advocate its passage; for I would rather protect the rights of the humble citizens of the country than to attempt to protect the rights of moneyed corporations. That is the doctrine we hold to down in Arkansas. It may not be the doctrine held in other portions of the country, but it is the doctrine which I have always been taught to be a correct one, and one which I shall endeavor to carry out, so far as my own course is concerned, as long as I may be permitted to hold a seat upon this floor. Whenever I see a conflict of rights between a moneyed corporation and an humble citizen, I hold it to be my duty, if I can, to protect the humble citizen, though it may be at the expense of the corporation.

But, Mr. Speaker, although such a course would be right and proper did circumstances exist requiring us to make such a discrimination, yet, so far as this bill is concerned, there is no such conflict of rights, as I humbly conceive.

It is true that Arkansas has not often received favors at the hands of the National Government. She has not often been before the National Congress to ask for such favors. She has heretofore had but one Representative upon this floor, and has not been able to secure the influence here which the more powerful States possess. She has but two representatives here now; but, sir, Arkansas intends to throw off the shackles which have heretofore bound her. I shall ask for that State justice, and full and ample justice, at the hands of the Government. It is true, as I have said, that Arkansas has not often troubled Congress with her importunities. It is true that her Representatives have been a little modest, though that is not an appellation which applies to me in Arkansas; but being a little modest since we came here, we have played mum, and not troubled Congress. We stand here now, and intend to do so in the future, claiming our rights. We shall not only press the bill under consideration, but others.

Mr. ORR. I will ask the gentleman to yield for a minute or two. He seems to be pressing the consideration of this bill on the ground that it is doing justice to Arkansas, and indirectly conveying the idea that those of us who oppose it are disposed to do that State injustice. Now, so far as I am concerned, that imputation would not apply; for, as every member of the Committee on Public Lands is aware, a year ago I reported the very bill which gave Arkansas over two millions of acres of the public land. All I ask my friend from Arkansas is, that the provisions and principles on which that donation was made shall be carried out by his State, and the other railroad interests here, in good faith. That is what I ask; not that I desire to do Arkansas injustice.

The number of Representatives upon this floor, Mr. Speaker, is of little consequence. The bill to which I refer passed when Arkansas had but one Representative, and it had no stronger friend than myself. And I ask that the gentleman will not place me, and those who voted with me for the bill, in a false position, where my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] and others can charge us with giving away the public land. Our argument has been, that we do not give way the public land, but grant it for consideration. I ask that he will save us from such imputation as has been mentioned.

Mr. WARREN. I am specially instructed by the citizens of the State of Arkansas to tender their everlasting acknowledgments to the gentleman from South Carolina, for his favor and support heretofore bestowed. As they believed that one good turn deserves another, and as he had favored them with once, he would do so again. [Laughter.] I tell that gentleman, that not only the Representatives of Arkansas upon this floor, but her people generally, feel that they are under a binding obligation to him for his efforts in behalf of the Cairo and Fulton railroad grant.

I will tell him here, however, that he misconceives what he terms the principle involved in this bill now under consideration. I do hold that there is a principle involved in grants of land to aid in the construction of railroads; and I think there is another principle in the disposition of our public domain—the lands of this General Government. I hold that it has ever been the doctrine of the party to which I belong, as well as the policy of the Government, not to make our landed interest particularly a source of revenue. That is the doctrine which I have been taught, so far as concerns the public domain. We do not look favorably on any disposition of the land of the General Government, with a view only to the production of revenue. I may be mistaken, but the policy which I believe and have insisted on at home, and shall insist on here, is that Congress, in disposing of the public land, should do so with an eye single to its settlement and cultivation. It should be disposed of in a manner to secure speedy settlement and cultivation.

It is true that we do say, in talking about grants of the public land to aid in the construction of railroads, that the donation of alternate sections increases the value of the remaining sections, and that therefore the old States are not injured; but I think the great principle involved in the disposition of the public land is the one to which I have adverted.

I am not inclined to detain the House any longer. The only object I had in rising was to explain the provisions of the bill. I have shown that it is retrospective in its action, and local in its character; that it does not affect detrimentally the interests of the Government, of corporations, or of the old States, while it does protect the peculiar class of citizens for whose benefit it is asked. I now move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, which motion I hope may prevail.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. WARREN. I will withdraw it for my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. SINGLETON. I should not have added a word to what has been said upon this subject but for the fact that the district which I have the honor to represent upon this floor is, perhaps, as much interested in this question, and in the principles involved in this bill, as the district of any other gentleman here.

There are two railroads running through that district, to which I will refer. One is the Mobile and Ohio railroad, to which alternate sections of land upon each side, for a distance of six miles, have already been granted by an act of Congress. This road runs through two of the largest and most populous counties in my district. There is, also, the Southern railroad, now under contract, from the town of Brandon to the Alabama line, which is to constitute a link, as I believe, in future, of the great Pacific railroad—a distance of ninety-nine miles and one third; and upon that road the lands have already been reserved from sale by a proclamation of the President of the United States, with a view of making the same donation, by act of Congress, to that road, as has been made to the Mobile and Ohio road.

Now, sir, upon a calculation, it will be found that six miles on each side of the line of these two railroads embrace about eight hundred miles square of the territory within the State of Mississippi, and about twenty-five hundred sections of land. This area necessarily embraces many of those whom the gentleman from Illinois has thought proper to term "squatters" on the public lands—honest citizens, who have gone there, away from the great thoroughfares, and have settled where they supposed they would be out of the reach of speculators and capitalists; built themselves humble cabins on the public lands with a view, when they should be able to do so, of providing a home for their families.

Mr. ORR. I desire to ask the attention of my friend from Mississippi to an act which was passed on the 2d of August, 1852, which gives to all the settlers in Mississippi along the line of the Mobile and Chicago railroad the right of preemption, provided they pay $2 50 an acre.

Mr. SINGLETON. That is the very thing I am warring upon; that is the very principle that I am opposed to, and I shall come to it in the course of my remarks.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SINGLETON. Certainly, sir.

Mr. SMITH. I wanted to ask the gentleman over the way, [Mr. Jones, of Tennessee,] who is the general guardian of the public Treasury, the question, but as I shall not have an opportunity of doing so, and do not desire to make a speech, I will ask it of the gentleman from Mississippi. If this bill be passed, and these gentlemen—for the term "squatter" is, it seems, offensive to the sensibility of honorable members—these gentlemen—and I doubt not that they are honorable men, for all frontier men are so, of course, as we all know—I say, if this bill grants this privilege, I ask, if every man in the country who has paid the advanced price of $2 50 under former laws, will not come to Congress and demand that the money shall be refunded to him? and if the gentleman is prepared for such consequences?

Mr. SINGLETON. Well, sir, because justice has been withheld from this class of citizens up to this time, it does not follow, in my judgment, that we should continue to withhold that justice. If it is the pleasure of Congress hereafter to refund the money to those who have paid the increased price, it will meet with no opposition from me, for

I do not think, that because you have located a railroad in any section of the country it therefore necessarily follows that the settler on the public lands, who has hewn himself a home amid the wilds of nature, should pay $2 50 an acre for the land upon which he has settled, when he had the solemn assurances of the Government that he might enter it at half that price if he would make such settlement.

But I was remarking, that this area of territory in the State of Mississippi necessarily involves the interests of a great many of these settlers who have not, up to this time, paid for their land.

Now, sir, is there any justice or propriety in the proposition that these men, who have left the haunts of civilization—schools, colleges, and churches—behind them, and settled in an almost unbroken wilderness, should be compelled to pay more than the minimum price for their homestead, because you have located a railroad through the public domain, when the lands had been in market for twenty-five or thirty years, as is the case in eastern Mississippi, and in the purchase of which not even the speculator has been tempted to invest his money? I tell you, the day will come, when any member on this floor, who has favored the donation of large tracts of lands to railroads—when these lands shall have fallen into the hands of speculators and capitalists, without, at the same time, throwing proper restriction around the grant, and guarding the interest of the settler—will call upon the rocks and mountains to hide him from public indignation, because he has forgotten his own citizens, while he has been liberal towards capitalists.

At the same time that I am in favor of being liberal towards those who would construct railroads, I would not forget the humble citizen who has the right to claim the protection of the Government against all comers who would infringe what I believe to be his right. What would the effect of such a policy be, especially in eastern Mississippi, where the lands have been in market from twenty-five to thirty years, and where even the speculator has found no inducement to make investments? In order to construct a railroad through these lands the settlers upon them are required to pay $2 50 per acre, when as yet they have been unable to pay even $1 25, and $400 would be demanded for a quarter section instead of one half that amount. The result of such policy would be to drive these hardy and enterprising men from the lands upon which they have located, and all the little improvements which they have made would redound to the benefit of capitalists and speculators. They would be driven from their homes to seek new ones elsewhere, again to be removed in like manner should a company obtain a grant of land for another road under like circumstances.

I have talked with these settlers myself along the line of the Mobile and Ohio road about these matters, so far as their rights are concerned, and I have seen the tear start in the eye of the honest poor man as he talked of leaving the humble home which he supposed he had secured for himself, of giving up the little field, from which every stick of timber had been removed by his own toil and sweat, and bidding adieu to the roof constructed by his own hands, which, though but indifferent, had given shelter to those most dear to him on earth. But gentlemen say, that if these settlers have failed to enter their quarter sections it is their own fault, and that they should have attended to this matter in time. Who does not know that these humble citizens, living upon these remote and sparsely settled lands, are but little acquainted with public matters transpiring in the country, and especially the legislative enactments at Washington? They rarely leave their homes, unless it is to go to their county towns to perform some public service, such as serving on juries or to vote, and consequently, in many instances, were unacquainted with the fact, that if they fail to enter their lands according to the terms and stipulations of the law, that they will be ousted by a railroad company, authorized by law to construct a road through these lands. I favor this principle of permitting the bona fide settler to enter his quarter section at $1 25 per acre.

At the beginning of the session I introduced a bill asking for a grant of alternate sections of land to the Southern railroad, embracing this same principle. I think it would be cruel and unjust, indeed, that they should be required to pay $2 50 per acre, when the inevitable consequence would be to drive many of them from their homes; for if they could not pay $200 it would but increase their difficulties to demand double that amount.

Mr. BISSELL. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] with what face he and I can argue in this House in future that the Treasury of the United States would be losing nothing by making these railroad grants, because the reserved sections are to be sold at the increased price of $2 50 per acre, if the policy which he now contends for is to be carried out? I would ask the members of this House if, when voting for these railroad bills, and raising the price of the reserved sections of the public lands to $2 50 per acre they supposed that numerous class of citizens who were then living on these lands were to have the preemption right to purchase their lands at the price of $1 25 per acre? No, sir; the object was altogether different. And I feel bound, in defense of those by whom those bills were originated and sustained, to resist any attempt by sideway means, or any other means, after we have passed these grants by the generosity of Congress, to endeavor to undo what we have done so far as the Treasury of the United States is to be affected by the price of these lands.

I do not like these bills coming in after we have got these grants;—first attempting to give the right to one class of citizens to purchase the public lands at $1 25 per acre, next giving to another class of citizens the right to have these reserved lands at $1 25 per acre, and then giving the same privilege to another, until finally the whole grounds on which the support of most gentlemen to these bills rested is swept away, and until the reserved land, like all other land, is gone at the price of $1 25 per acre.

Mr. SINGLETON. I will try now and get through what I intended to say. I did not expect to make any remarks on this subject, but I will respond to the gentleman's [Mr. BISSELL's] inquiry as well as I can. I have had nothing to do with the establishing that great principle which the gentleman speaks of, as this is the first session which I have served in this body. And without pretending to control, or to be controlled by the opinion of others, or to agree, or disagree with what has been done heretofore by Congress, I take my own views in regard to this subject.

It is too late to talk about realizing profit to the Treasury of the United States from these lands, under the system of making donations to railroads. On various occasions the Congress of the United States have made grants of lands for civil and eleemosynary purposes, without any consideration as to the profits which might result therefrom to the Treasury, and indeed, sir, without any equivalent. It is too late to come, in the face of all these facts in the recollection of the House, and say that we ought not now to grant to actual settlers the right to purchase their lands at $1 25 per acre, because they have not entered their lands previous to the making of these grants, which were so constructed as to realize $2 50 per acre on the lands reserved to the State.

Sir, I believe not only in the propriety and justice of granting to actual settlers the preemption right at the rate of $1 25 per acre in the reserved lands, but I would, if I had the power to do so, annex the same condition to all the grants made, no matter for what purpose.

Sir, I take my position on this question definitely and distinctly. I have come to the conclusion long since that the time has arrived when the United States ought to cease to look to its public lands as a source of revenue. When these lands have been sold and money has been raised on them, I am in favor of paying it into the Treasury of the United States, as a matter of revenue, to defray the ordinary expenses of the Government; and under no circumstances would I favor a distribution of the proceeds of the sales of these lands among the States. Were this question of grants to railroad companies a new one, up for the first time, I should take time to reflect upon the proposition, and cannot say what my action would be; but the thing has now grown into a system; and it is too late to inquire into the policy.

While I favor these grants, however, to works which commend themselves to my judgment as being national in their character, I would be careful not to abridge the privileges of private citizens, or deprive them of any just and equitable rights belonging to them, and hence would continue the laws in force for the benefit of preëmptors as though no grant had been made.

They were invited to enter these lands at $1 25 per acre, and they went upon them in good faith, under an implied contract. Now, it is said, upon the part of the Government, that this implied contract is to be broken, the railroad companies are to derive all the benefit of the individual enterprise and industry of our citizens, who, from want of information, or inadvertence, have failed to secure their settlements. If the Congress of the United States wish to aid in building railroads, let them do it upon fair and equitable principles, and not undertake to wrest from this class of the citizens of our country their hard earnings for this purpose. When you drive them away by oppressive legislation, take from them their fields, and give them to those more fortunate, you have departed from principle to tread the road of expediency or interest.

Now, sir, having said thus much in regard to this matter, and having heretofore shown that I entertain these opinions honestly, as demonstrated by the fact that I introduced a bill in the early part of the session, which embraced the very principle now sought to be maintained, I will say no more upon the subject at this time.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the motion to reconsider, made by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] be laid upon the table.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. WARREN. I am fearful that the morning hour will expire before we can take action upon this subject, if I should do so, and therefore I must decline.

The question being upon the motion to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading,

Mr. BALL demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and decided in the affirmative—yeas 101, nays 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Barksdale, Bell, Bennett, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Corwin, Cox, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dent, Dick, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmonds, Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Farley, Flagler, Florence, Giddings, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hiester, Hill, Houston, Hughes, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Knox, Lane, Latham, Lindley, McCulloch, Macy, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Oids, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Thomas Richey, Rogers, Russell, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Shower, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Hendrick B. Wright, and Yates—101.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Belcher, Benson, Bissell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bugg, Carpenter, Chastain, Churchill, Clingman, Craige, Everhart, Faulkner, Fuller, Grey, Haven, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kittredge, Kurtz, Leitcher, Lilly, Lyon, Macdonald, McMullin, McQueen, Matteson, Mauries, Mayall, McEachan, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, Reese, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rufin, Sabin, Sage, Seymour, Shaw, William Smith, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Vail, Walbridge, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, and Zollicoffer—66.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

The question then recurring upon the passage of the bill,

Mr. WARREN demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The main question being, "Shall the bill pass?" it was put, and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. WARREN. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. MILLSON, from the Committee on Rules, presented the following amendment to the rules of the House:

Any member entitled to the floor may, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pending the consideration of any bill or joint resolution, under the rule allowing five-minute speeches, call for the question on any section, paragraph, or amendment then under discussion, and such call shall suspend debate on the same, and if seconded by a majority of the members present, shall bring the committee to a vote on the particular section, paragraph, or amendment indicated, without further amendment or discussion; and if the call is not so seconded, the section, paragraph, or amendment, shall be open to amendment and debate as before.

Mr. MILLSON. I will remark that this is only a partial report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know how this resolution comes before the House?

The SPEAKER. At the commencement of the present session of Congress a resolution was passed creating this Committee on Rules, with authority to report at any time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I desire to inquire of the Chair whether this is a regular report from the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. It is a report offered by the gentleman from Virginia, as a member of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TAYLOR. If it does not come before us regularly at this time as a report of that committee, I object to its reception.

Mr. MILLSON. It is a report from the Committee on Rules, and comes regularly before the House as such.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I desire to inquire of the Chair if the Committee on Rules have the right to report to the House at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is in order for them to report at any time, under an express resolution of the House. The resolution is regularly before the House, as a report from the Committee on Rules, upon which the gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that they had passed the joint resolution of the House (No. 14) relative to bids for provisions, clothing, and small-stores for the use of the Navy.

Also, that they had passed Senate bill (No. 236) granting to the States of Indiana and Illinois a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of the Indiana and Illinois Central railway; and Senate bill (No. 259) to authorize the State of Wisconsin to select the residue of the land to which she is entitled under the act of 8th of August, 1846, for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers.

In which the Senate asked the concurrence of the House.]

Mr. MILLSON. I repeat that the resolution before the House is only a partial report of the Committee on Rules. We have had but one meeting of our committee, at which some alterations of the rules were talked of, but no definite propositions agreed upon. The present rule has reference to a difficulty which the House has often experienced when in Committee of the Whole. Gentlemen will perceive that the object of this resolution is to enable the House, when in Committee of the Whole, to stop unnecessary and illimitable debate upon a particular paragraph or section, or upon a pending amendment; and these are the reasons:

We are frequently annoyed in Committee of the Whole by discussion upon some immaterial subject; and it is wholly out of our power to advance one step, except by a course which the House is always unwilling to pursue—that of suspending all debate whatever upon the whole measure, when discussion may be very useful and necessary in subsequent sections.

For instance, suppose we are in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that one of the general appropriation bills is under consideration. The second and third sections may require some important amendments, and explanations may be necessary to enable the House to see the propriety of amending them; but the probability is, that some amendment will be offered to the first section by some gentleman, and successive amendments to the amendment by some other gentleman.

Now, the committee must remain in this position. They must either go into the House to terminate the discussion, and prevent all amendments to the bill, or they must submit to the continuance of this unprofitable discussion of amendments offered to the first section of the bill. A similar evil sometimes exists in the House when an amendment is made to the first section of a bill under consideration, and a protracted discussion arises. The House may be wearied with the debate, and ready and anxious to vote upon the pending amendment; but the call for the previous question, if seconded, would cut off the opportunity of amending the subsequent sections. Either they must submit to unprofitable discussion on a subject on which they have long made up their minds, or terminate it by seconding the call for the previous question, and ordering the main question to be put, stopping all debate, and precluding all further amendments, some of which may be felt to be necessary. The present resolution has exclusive reference to the Committee of the Whole.

It only provides, then, the House will perceive, that when the Committee of the Whole desire to vote on a pending question, such as an amendment to the first section of the bill, or the first paragraph of the bill, any member may call for the question specifying the subject to which that question shall apply. If the majority of the committee shall second the call, then the committee will be brought to a vote on that question alone, and it will be able to go on with the subsequent parts of the bill, which will be open to discussion and amendment.

Now, sir, I do not disguise the fact that however useful, however necessary such a rule may be, it is one subject to abuse, and ought to be sparingly used. I myself regard the discussions in the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule as the most profitable to the House, and they ought not to be too hastily and too frequently checked. What is intended as medicine ought not to be used as daily food; but the committee may well trust themselves. The evil has been frequently felt. Efforts have sometimes been made heretofore to cure it by suspending the five-minute rule altogether; but it has usually been found that the cure was worse than the disease.

The resolution now introduced has received the unanimous approbation of the members of the Committee on Rules now in the city.

Mr. HAVEN. I should like to ask the gentleman from Virginia what will be the effect of his amendment in one particular? I want to know how extensive the rules is to be under the proposed amendment. Suppose a section of a bill is under consideration, and a gentleman offers an amendment to it, and another gentleman offers an amendment to that amendment, which is as far as we can go? If, then, a member rises in his place and calls the question, I would like to know whether that simply brings the committee to a vote on the amendment to the amendment, and stops there, so that another gentleman may get up and offer another amendment, or whether it brings the committee to vote on the amendment to the amendment, and then the amendment and then the section?

Mr. MILLSON. That had not escaped my attention; and in drawing the resolution, I at first thought of providing, that where the question was called on an amendment, and seconded by a majority of the committee, the vote should be taken on all pending amendments. But, on reflection, I came to the conclusion that it was altogether unnecessary, because being in committee under the five-minute rule—and this proposed rule applies only to that condition of things—we have only to wait ten minutes before a vote must be taken upon an amendment to an amendment. It would, therefore, be idle and unnecessary for any gentleman to call the question on an amendment to an amendment; for, under the existing rules, the question must be taken upon an amendment to an amendment as soon as the member speaking five minutes in opposition to it shall have concluded his remarks. The proposed rule, then, only applies to any member entitled to the floor calling the question on an amendment. It is not to be presumed that any member entitled to the floor will call the question on any other than an amendment in the first degree, for the rules already provide that the question shall be taken on an amendment in the second degree at the expiration of ten minutes.

Mr. HAVEN. After the vote on the amendment in the first degree, would the section be open to further amendment under that rule?

Mr. MILLSON. Unquestionably. When the question was called on an amendment, the vote of the House would be confined to that amendment, and the section or paragraph would be still open to amendment. Under this rule, if it shall be adopted, a member may, at his election, call for the question upon a section, a paragraph, or on the pending amendment. It may be that the committee has not considered the section, though it may have discussed for a long time the pending amendment to that section. The committee might not be willing to second the call for the question upon the whole section, but might be willing to second the call for the question upon the pending amendment. Discretion, however, is allowed to any gentleman to call for the question on the section, the paragraph, or the pending amendment.

Mr. PRESTON, (interrupting.) I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia one question. His proposed amendment to the rules provides that any member entitled to the floor may, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pending the consideration of any bill or joint resolution, under the rule allowing five-minute speeches, call for the question on any section, paragraph, or amendment then under discussion, and that such call shall suspend debate on the same; and if seconded by a majority of the members present, shall bring the committee to a vote on that particular paragraph, section, or amendment, without further amendment or discussion.

Now, suppose the House limits the debate upon a bill to five-minute speeches, and that bill consists of but a single section, does the gentleman mean that that five-minute debate shall be stopped at once by a demand for the question on the first section of the bill, inasmuch as that is all that is within the purview of the proposed rule? That is the construction I put upon the rule, and I ask the gentleman if that is what he intends? If so, all that is necessary to be done is to follow the plan of the English statutes, and put everything in a single section, consider it as a whole, and, by demanding the question, stop five-minute debate and amendments, and pass the bill.

Mr. MILLSON. I will answer the gentleman. The gentleman will remember that most of our appropriation bills contain but a single section, and it is for that reason that the word "paragraph" is inserted in this rule. The appropriation bills are considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union by paragraphs, and not by sections. The bill is read, and the vote is taken by paragraphs, and each paragraph is regarded as an independent section. That has been the invariable rule and practice of this House, and the amendments are made to these paragraphs as sections.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to ask him a question? As I understand the resolution which has just been read, it puts it in the power of any gentleman to call for a vote directly upon any section or paragraph in the bill before the committee. Suppose, then, that a bill is before the committee containing seven or ten sections, and a motion be made by some gentleman to amend the first section, whereupon some one moves to close debate, and a majority determine to close debate, that then you proceed to the second section; and that the same process is gone through there; and that then you proceed to the third section, and so on. I ask if the gentleman's proposition does not put it within the power of a majority of the committee to close all discussion, or nearly all discussion, under the five-minute rule; and whether it is not, in fact, intended to abrogate the five-minute rule, at the pleasure of the committee?

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] asks me if the resolution which I have introduced is not intended as an abrogation of the five-minute rule, at the pleasure of a majority of the committee. Of course it is not so intended. I have already stated to the House, that, while I was aware that the demand for the previous question might be abused, yet that there were evils that ought at the same time to be remedied. There are times when, without some such rule as this, it would be in the power of a very small number seriously to obstruct the public business. If the gentleman asks me if it would be proper in a majority of the committee to suspend discussion upon any one section before it had been properly considered—

Mr. WASHBURN. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to interrupt him again at this point. Let me suppose that a section of a bill is under discussion in the committee, and some gentleman proposes an amendment. The committee observe nothing particularly worthy of attention in that amendment, and are disposed to sustain a motion which is made to terminate debate. There may be half a dozen other gentlemen in the committee who have amendments to offer to the same section which are really of importance, and might, if proposed, be favorably considered; but are they not, by the adoption of such a resolution as the gentleman from Virginia has introduced, cut off from the privilege of offering them in Committee of the Whole, where only amendments can be offered with any chance of being considered or adopted?

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman from Maine, I apprehend, has not carefully read the proposition, and does not see that it is only—

Mr. WASHBURN. Let me explain myself a little more fully, so that the gentleman will understand clearly the point I make. Suppose that a bill being under discussion in Committee of the Whole—the first section having been read—the gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, but it is believed by a majority of the committee that there is not much merit in it, and consequently some one moves that we take the vote upon that section. The vote is accordingly taken, but there are half a dozen other gentlemen who have amendments to offer, which, if suggested, would strike the committee as very important, and which, perhaps, would change their views upon that very section, whereas, by the operation of the vote taken these gentlemen would be precluded from offering them.

Mr. MILLSON. There is a great deal of force and weight in the objection made by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN,] but he will pardon me for suggesting that the resolution I have offered authorizes no such thing. The resolution provides that the vote shall be taken upon the pending proposition—

Mr. WASHBURN. The gentleman who makes the motion will take the vote upon the section or provision.

Mr. MILLSON. If there be an amendment pending the question will apply to that. In no case does the resolution prevent further discussion or amendment of the section, unless some other member entitled to the floor should demand the question on the section; and then it will be for the House to determine whether, in advance of proper discussion, they would second the call.

Mr. BOCK. Is it competent, Mr. Speaker, by the action of a majority of the House, to postpone the consideration of this proposition to amend the rule to a specified time?

The SPEAKER. It will be competent to postpone the consideration of the subject. The rule or resolution of the House under which this report has been made, I will, if the House will allow me, read to the body:

"Resolved, That the rules of the last House of Representatives be adopted as the rules of this House until otherwise ordered: Provided, however, That there shall be appointed a committee of five members to revise said rules, which committee shall have the power to report at any time; and their report shall be acted upon by the House until disposed of, to the exclusion of all other business; anything in the rules hereby temporarily adopted to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor. Does he yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MILLSON. Not now. I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that the rules ought to be very carefully considered by this House, and I have not the slightest objection to the postponement of this question, in order that the House may deliberate on the propriety of adopting the amendment recommended by the committee. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio a moment.

Mr. TAYLOR. I wish to express my ideas in a few words in reference to this change of law proposed, the importance of which, it seems to me, the House is not sufficiently alive to.

Mr. MILLSON, (interrupting.) I yielded the floor to the gentleman for the purpose of allowing him to ask a question, and not to make any observations on the subject.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am entitled to the floor, and will proceed with my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Virginia on the floor?

Mr. MILLSON. Certainly, sir. I have been on the floor since I first rose to bring this matter to the attention of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was under the impression that the gentleman from Virginia had yielded it to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MILLSON. No, sir; except for the purpose of his asking a question.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I make a point of order, whether the gentleman from Virginia, or any other gentleman in this House, can get up and reply six, eight, or ten times to gentlemen, and still retain the floor, to the exclusion of every other proposition. I desire, sir, to express my opinions on this matter.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio appeal against the decision of the Chair?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, sir.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want to make a remark. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me?

Mr. MILLSON. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Committee on Rules, the select committee, is, it will be observed, in the very terms of the resolution, a very important committee. It has the power to make a report, and to check all other legislation. Now, sir, that committee, although it has held but one meeting, has had under consideration some very important modifications of the rules which, perhaps, when they make their report, may result in a complete revolution in many important matters in the system of legislation. This proposition that has been made this morning is by no means intended to be a regular report of that committee, because it is only proposed to reach one of the difficulties which this House sometimes encounters in the transaction of business. I find that it has created great sensation, and I think it would be well that the gentleman from Virginia should withdraw the report, in order that it may be printed; for the committee will have the power, at any time, to present it again.

The purpose of the amendment proposed is simply this, to enable the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, when it is considering bills under the rule limiting discussion to five minutes, to control its own action. Now, what is the condition of things at the present time? We have been here four months, and what have we succeeded in doing in the regular business of legislation, except, after a desperate struggle, to pass the deficiency bill? It is the difficulty that you may discuss for days, and even weeks, one single item in an appropriation bill. To illustrate, you propose forty thousand dollars to be given for the completion of the custom-house at Louisville, Kentucky. Does not every member of this House know that you may move amendments to reduce that sum one, two, or three dollars, and so down, or to increase it in the same way, to an indefinite extent, and that upon such amendments you can keep this House, by five-minute speeches, for five years, if you choose, upon a single bill? Under the rule as it now stands, unless the Chairman assumes a power, which does not belong to him, to refuse to recognize an amendment, we could never have any legislation at all, if the committee see fit to continue to offer amendments. I say that is wrong.

The effect of this amendment, as I understand it—for there has been no regular meeting of the committee but individual consultation—is simply to enable a majority of the Committee of the Whole to control the business of the committee. I do not, Mr. Speaker, propose to discuss it now. I find there are objections raised, and I suggest to my colleague upon the committee, [Mr. MILLSON,] as this thing of a change of the rules is an important matter, and inasmuch as this change, if adopted, will not merely affect the legislation of this Congress, but, in all human probability, of all future Congresses—for we know that when a new Congress is organized the practice always is to adopt the rules of a former Congress until a change is made, whether it would not be prudent to let the matter go over for the present, and allow the proposed amendment to be printed. I prefer, and I think my colleague will agree with me, that such a course should be pursued, and especially because this House, a week or two ago, gave to the Committee on Rules the power to print, in advance, their proposed amendments, in order to enable the members to examine and make up a judgment as to the effect of such amendments. As this particular item of the changes proposed will go into the report of the proceedings of the House in to-morrow's Globe, it will be well to withdraw the report of the committee, in order that members may see the effect of it. The report may again be presented to-morrow, the next day, or any day, as the committee have the power at any time to make a report, though it may check any business pending before the House. There will be nothing lost by a delay of one or two days, and I think it is due to the new members of the House that they should have an opportunity to examine into the bearings of the proposed change, and to understand distinctly upon what they are called to vote.

Mr. MILLSON here obtained the floor.

Mr. McMULLIN. I appeal to my colleague to yield me the floor, to enable me to ask him a single question.

Mr. MILLSON. I will hear any question my colleague has to ask.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire, in the first place, to know whether he proposes to press this resolution to a vote to-day? If so, I wish to express my views in reference to it.

Mr. MILLSON. In reply to my colleague, I will say, that I have no purpose in reference to the matter at all. I suggested, a few minutes ago, that I thought it would be desirable to postpone the consideration of the resolution until some other day; because, as I remarked, the changes it proposes to make are somewhat important, and should not be hastily acted upon by the House. I suppose, if I withdraw the report now, it will be competent for me to submit it again at some future time.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Rules has the right to report at any time.

Mr. MILLSON. The only object I had in submitting it to-day, was simply to call the attention of the House to the subject. It must have its first consideration at some time. I have already said that I do not desire, nor would it be proper, to pass hastily upon the report. There is no gentleman in this House who would be more cautious in guarding the rights of the minority than myself, for I believe there is hardly a member of the House who oftener finds himself in the minority than myself; and therefore there are few persons who are more interested in having the rights of the minority properly guarded than I am.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the gentleman give way for a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? The resolution will be printed in the papers, so that members can have an opportunity of examining it, and it will come up to-morrow as unfinished business. If the gentleman will give way for that purpose, I will make that motion.

Mr. MILLSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is not in order, pending the consideration of the resolution, which is a privileged matter.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The House can go into committee, I presume, by unanimous consent. I hope no objection will be made, but that this course will be taken.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. MILLSON. I move, then, to recommit the resolution to the Committee on Rules; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the motion, and permit me to offer an amendment which I desire should be adopted.

Mr. BAYLY. Is it in order to move to lay the resolution upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to lay it upon the table.

Mr. EWING. I believe no remarks have been made except upon one side of this question. I appeal to gentlemen to allow something to be said in opposition to it, before debate is stopped upon it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] will allow the question to be taken upon the motion of his colleague, and have it referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BAYLY. If I were not absolutely and unqualifiedly opposed to the resolution, I should have no objection to its going back to the committee which reported it; but such are my convictions of its impropriety that I cannot withdraw the motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Would a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be now in order?

The SPEAKER. It would not. It is a peculiar order of the House that we are now acting under. The report of the committee must be considered, to the exclusion of all other business, anything in the rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. It is peremptory.

Mr. WARREN. I would appeal to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] to withdraw his motion that the report of the Committee on Rules be laid upon the table, so that I may offer an amendment, which I am sure will meet with the approbation of the House.

Mr. MILLSON. Having introduced the resolution, I think that it is competent for me to withdraw the call for the previous question, the motion to recommit, and the resolution itself.

The SPEAKER. Still, the motion that the resolution be laid upon the table intervenes.

Mr. BAYLY. And I do not withdraw that motion to lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER. The report of the Committee on Rules is in the possession of the House, and the Chair decides that it is not competent for the particular member of that committee who made it, or the committee itself, to withdraw it.

Mr. MILLSON. My only desire was to prevent the consumption of time.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to—there being, on a division—ayes 107, noes not counted.

So the report of the Committee on Rules was laid upon the table.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LYON. I rise to a question of privilege. I voted yesterday in favor of the motion to commit the Nebraska and Kansas bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but do not find my name this morning on the record. I now ask that it may be placed there.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. WHEELER, and several other MEMBERS. He has the right to do it.

The SPEAKER. As objection has been made, the gentleman can only have his name placed upon the record by a vote of the House.

Mr. WALSH. As the gentleman is particularly anxious to get his name upon the record, I withdraw my objection.

It was then ordered that the name of Mr. LYONS should be placed upon the record as voting in the affirmative.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the vote by which the report from the Committee on Rules was laid upon the table be reconsidered, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. A report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills will be first received.

REPORT FROM COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported back as correctly enrolled the following bills and joint resolutions, which thereupon severally received the signature of the Speaker:

Joint resolution for settling the accounts of A. Boyd Hamilton;

An act for the relief of Gray, McMurdo & Company;

Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury and Light-House Board to determine upon the site, plan, and mode of constructing the light-house on Cohasset Rocks, and for other purposes;

An act to amend an act entitled an act to divide the State of Arkansas into two judicial districts, approved March 3, 1853;

An act for the relief of William Mayo, of the State of Maine;

An act for the relief of the United States troops who were sufferers by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco; and a resolution accepting certain volumes and medals presented by Her Britannic Majesty's Government to the United States.

The question was then taken on Mr. Houston's motion, and it was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 107, noes not counted.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair.)

Mr. MILLSON obtained the floor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the first bill in order on the Calendar was House bill (No. 46) "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855."

Mr. BOCOCK. I desire to ask a question in regard to the order of business. I believe that, under the rules, when a bill is called in its order on the Calendar, any member can object to its consideration, and that thereupon the question must be put to the committee whether that bill shall be considered or not. My object is to get up, if I possibly can do so, the bill to authorize the construction of six steam frigates.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Virginia will suspend for a moment, the rule to which he refers will be read.

The 135th rule was then read, as follows:

"In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar; but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill, a majority of the committee shall decide, without debate, whether it shall be taken up and disposed of, or laid aside; provided that general appropriation bills, and, in time of war, bills for raising men or money, and bills concerning a treaty of peace, shall be preferred to all other bills, at the discretion of the committee; and, when demanded by any member, the question shall be first put in regard to them."

The CHAIRMAN. If objection be made to the consideration of this bill, the first question that will be propounded is: "Will the committee proceed to the consideration of this bill?" If they decide that they will not proceed to its consideration at this time, then the next bill upon the Calendar will be in order, and so on until the committee shall decide what bill they desire to take up and consider.

Mr. MILLSON resumed the floor.

Mr. BOCOCK. Will my colleague yield me the floor for a moment for the purpose of enabling me to understand the position of things with regard to the Calendar? I desire to know how many bills there are upon the Calendar before the bill authorizing the construction of six steam frigates?

The CHAIRMAN. But two.

Mr. BOCOCK. I shall then object to the consideration of this bill and the next at this time.

Mr. ORR. I think that we can dispose of this Indian appropriation bill to-day. It is very important that it should be passed immediately, and I hope that it will not be laid aside.

Mr. HENN. Is it a general appropriation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. MILLSON. I rose a moment since for the purpose of suggesting to the committee the propriety of postponing the Indian appropriation bill, for the purpose of taking up the bill indicated by my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, [Mr. BOCOCK.] I have therefore not the least objection to the suggestion which he has made. I should prefer myself that the House would postpone the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and take up the bill in relation to the construction of steam frigates. If the committee, however, think proper to refuse the request made by my colleague, and agree to take up for consideration the Indian appropriation bill, I shall then avail myself of my right to the floor to submit a few remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must remark that this question is not debatable.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a point of order. I desire to know whether an objection by a single member requires the Chairman to put the question of postponement to the committee upon a general appropriation bill, such as this is?

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair it does.

Mr. ORR. The question is then—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is out of order.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I desire to ask the Chair this question: If the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill is postponed, can we take it up again before we get through with the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a question which the Chair feels called upon to decide; for some other gentleman may occupy the chair at the time that question is made.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I desire to ask a question for information. I wish to know if this Indian appropriation bill does not make an appropriation for the next year?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. BAYLY. The bill which my colleague proposes to take up makes an appropriation for the present year—

Mr. ORR. I protest against the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bayly] being allowed to make remarks showing why the Indian appropriation bill should not be taken up, while I am restrained from making remarks tending to show why the bill should be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bayly] arose and addressed the Chair, he supposed that it was to some point of order. The question now is, whether the committee shall proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 46, being the Indian appropriation bill.

The question was then taken by division, and there were in favor of the motion 109 votes; the noes were not counted.

So the committee decided to take up for consideration the Indian appropriation bill.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the committee, Mr. Chairman, to pursue a usual course, and dispense with the first reading of the bill, and that the reading of it by paragraphs for amendments be commenced. The bill contains some forty pages, and it is not necessary for it to be read through now. I therefore ask that the usual course be pursued, and that the reading of the bill at this stage be dispensed with.

Mr. TAYLOR. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will then proceed to report the bill.

The reading of the bill was commenced.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) I desire to know from the Chair whether the committee has not the power to dispense with the first reading of the bill, and to have it read at once by sections for amendment? It will consume much time, probably an hour, if not more, and is entirely unnecessary, as every gentleman here knows.

The CHAIRMAN. The rules direct that the bill shall be read as a whole first, if required. Rule of the House 127 says:

"On a bill being committed to the Committee of the Whole House, the bill shall be first read throughout by the Clerk, and then again read and debated by clauses."

After the further reading of the bill had been proceeded with for some time,

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, said: As a general thing, I like a strict adherence to the rules, but I will now withdraw my objection to the suspension of the further reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. But another gentleman objected to that course being pursued.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I objected, but I now withdraw that objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Then if no objection is made, the further reading will be dispensed with. No objection was made.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask that the Clerk shall now report the first paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk reported the first paragraph, which is as follows:

For the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, viz:

For the pay of superintendents of Indian affairs, per acts of 5th June, 1850, 27th February, 1851, and 3d March, 1852, $12,500.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not propose to occupy the time of the committee in a regular investigation of this bill, for in truth no investigation of it is necessary. The bill which has been read, and which is now before the committee, is in strict conformity with treaty stipulations between the Government of the United States and the Indian tribes. The appropriations are necessary to be made to fulfill our obligations to the various Indian tribes; and I may be indulged in the expression of a hope that the committee will act upon the bill as promptly as possible, for the reason that, although the appropriations are for the fiscal year commencing on the first of July next, yet a large proportion of them are for the purchase of provisions, tobacco, goods, and various things which require some time on the part of the Department to prepare for the distribution of. It is, therefore, important that the bill should be acted on promptly. There is no contest about anything in it. We are bound to appropriate them all ultimately, and I desire that it may be done as early as the convenience of the committee will allow.

The Committee of Ways and Means have no amendment to propose at present to the bill. The amendments which have been indicated by my friend, [Mr. Orr], who is at the head of the Committee on Indian Affairs, will be explained by him. They are estimates which have never been before the Committee of Ways and Means, and I shall rely upon his explanations.

Mr. ORR obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion pending, but it has been the practice to allow debate on the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. ORR. At the proper time, in the progress of this bill, I shall, by the direction of, and under instructions from the Committee on Indian Affairs, propose various amendments.

Mr. HAVEN. Propose an amendment, so as to be in order.

Mr. ORR. I am in order now.

Mr. HAVEN. It would be better to offer some amendment.

Mr. ORR. I have several amendments, Mr. Chairman, which ought properly to have been placed in the deficiency bill; but, finding that there was an earnest and general desire upon the part of members of the Committee of Ways and Means, as well as a majority of this House, to dispose of the deficiency bill during the sitting of the Committee of the Whole on last Friday, I determined not to present these amendments for the consideration of the committee at that time, fearing that, by so doing, it might lead to the postponement of the bill till another week. The amendments which the Committee on Indian Affairs have prepared are of a very important character. The amount proposed to be appropriated in the amendments by the Indian Committee is in the neighborhood of $350,000, if they should all be adopted.

In the first place, we propose an amendment which appropriates $68,000 to enable the Indian Department to negotiate treaties with the Indian tribes in Oregon, and $45,000 to negotiate treaties with the tribes in the Territory of Washington, making, in the aggregate, the sum of $113,000, for what was heretofore known as the Oregon Territory. It is a fact which has been brought most strikingly and prominently to my consideration since I have had the honor of presiding over the Committee on Indian Affairs since the commencement of this session of Congress, that in the whole history of Oregon and Washington Territories, as well as Utah and New Mexico, there has never been extinguished, by treaty stipulation or otherwise, one foot of Indian title to any or all of that vast territory. In the settlements which have been made in Oregon and Washington Territories, embracing sixty or seventy thousand white persons, the Indians have been driven back from valley to valley, and from plain to plain, until they are now, in many instances, compelled to take refuge and seek homes upon the mountain tops.

Some two years ago treaties were negotiated with some of the tribes living in Oregon, which were sent to the Senate, but no action has as yet been taken upon them by that body, and they sleep there as mementoes of the broken promises of our agents. There are in the Territory of Oregon and Washington some sixty or sixty-five different tribes of Indians, and the whole number is estimated at from thirty to fifty thousand. Some of these Indians have made a little advance in agriculture, and are rudely cultivating the soil. Others of them have large stock of cattle and horses. Missionaries have gone into their midst, and there has not only been an intellectual, but a moral culture diffused among them. These Indian tribes have, in many cases, yielded to the solicitations of white men, in giving up their lands, upon the solemn promise made to them that the Great Father of the Indians, the President of the United States, and the Congress of the United States, would vote them an ample compensation for so doing. Years have rolled by since those promises were made, and they are still unredeemed.

I have it from reliable authority, that the war which broke out last summer between the Rogue river Indians and the whites, would have been prevented, if a timely appropriation had been made and a treaty had been entered into between this Government and these Indians. That war will cost us perhaps $100,000. If the Indians had been dealt justly by, you would have avoided the Cayuse war, which was waged by that tribe of Indians in 1848. You have already paid for the expenses of that war $100,000, and there is a bill now pending before the House proposing to increase the appropriation $75,000. Those two Indian wars alone will have cost the Government a sum little, if any, short of $300,000. The Cayuse tribe numbers something less than one thousand, and the Rogue river tribe is not more numerous. We have practiced even greater injustice to these Indians in the new Territories than we have to the Indians that have inhabited the States, and that have heretofore been removed, as hitherto we have given them some consideration for their lands, and we have paid them something when we have despoiled them of their territory. We have paid, in most cases, the full value for these lands, if the value of the land is to be judged by the use which the Indians made of it; but certainly it was an inadequate compensation, if its value is measured for agricultural purposes.

In Oregon there are many Indians who have cultivated the soil, who have cleared their own land, and erected buildings, but they have been driven back from their settlements, their improvements, their homes.

It is vain and idle, Mr. Chairman, to hope that these people will always continue to submit patiently and quietly to the wrongs which we have been perpetrating upon them. They are feeble, it is true. We have it in our power, with all the men and money at our command, to destroy—to annihilate them. But, occupying the position towards them that we do, great as we are, wealthy as we are, powerful as we are, magnanimity and generosity requires that we should deal liberally towards these red men of the forest.

Now, sir, the appropriations which I propose to insert in this bill will enable the Governors of the Territories of Oregon and Washington to negotiate treaties with such tribes as possess valuable lands which have not yet been taken possession of by the whites, and also to make adequate compensation for the lands that have already been appropriated by our citizens. These appropriations are recommended by the Indian Department. The Committee on Indian Affairs have scrutinized them closely. They believe that the sums recommended are not too large; and we hope that when the committee come to consider the bill, and these amendments that are to be inserted in it, there will be no objection to incorporating them in the general Indian appropriation bill. It is desirable, too, that it should be done speedily, so that negotiations may be carried on during the present summer with these tribes of Indians.

I have an amendment, which I shall offer in its place, appropriating $45,000 to negotiate treaties with Indians in the Territory of Utah. As I stated before, the Indians within the limits of that Territory have been treated in the same manner you have treated the Washington and Oregon Indians. You have despoiled them of their territory; you have taken from them their lands; you have driven them from their homes, humble though those homes may be, and you have paid them not a farthing for the spoliation which you have perpetrated on them. Now, sir, patience with them has worn out. They will no longer be appeased by the promises which our agents are making to them. They will no longer refrain from avenging themselves upon our citizens with all that cruelty which characterizes the Indian tribes. They will not fail to avenge the wrongs which you have done them, unless you place money in the hands of your agents to compensate them for their losses and sacrifices. Besides, sir, being driven off from their lands by the whites emigrating and settling in their country, they are also destroying their game, the principal means which they have of subsistence. Many of them are on the point of starvation. They have, then, a double incentive to wreak their vengeance on the white man, not only because they have been despoiled of their territory, but they are also incited to scenes of bloodshed and violence by the merciless gnawings of hunger.

Mr. PECKHAM. To whom does the gentleman from South Carolina allude, when he says,

"You have despoiled them," "You have driven them off," and so forth?

Mr. ORR. I allude to the citizens of the United States who have gone and settled in those Territories, with the permission of the Government.

Mr. PECKHAM. Has the Government given them permission?

Mr. ORR. The citizens of the United States have not gone there without permission, for you have organized territorial governments there. You have made it legitimate for citizens of the United States to go into the Territories of Utah, New Mexico, Oregon, and California. It is by your action that they have been induced to go there; and I say that the action of the citizens of the United States, with the sanction of the Government, is the act of the Government itself.

Now, sir, I do not know how much credit is to be reposed in the statements which have come to us from the Territory of Utah; but if they are to be credited we are upon the eve of a bloody war with one or more tribes of Indians inhabiting that region of country. In such a war it is not only the Mormons who are to be the sufferers; not merely the people who have gone there and appropriated the vast territory about Salt Lake, but it is the hundreds and thousands of emigrants who annually traverse that country in their migration to and from California and Oregon, who are to be the sufferers from the merciless vengeance of these savages when aroused.

It is suggested to me, and truly, that in all probability the murder of Captain Gunnison and his party, which occurred in Utah, a few months since, was occasioned by these multiplied wrongs which you have perpetrated upon that people. We may well suppose that murder, plunder, and robbery will be resorted to, to procure that subsistence which the forests now fail to yield them as in former times.

Now suppose that a war with one or two of those tribes in Utah should break out. They are formidable, numbering fifteen or twenty thousand each, with perhaps two or three thousand warriors; to how much annoyance would they not subject this Government? how many emigrants would not be stopped upon the road, and how many of your citizens slaughtered? You give the citizens permission to go there, and they have the right to claim that the Government shall protect them.

I shall also offer an amendment, appropriating $30,000 for the purpose of making treaties with the Apaches, Navejos, and Utah Indians of the Territory of New Mexico. These tribes are numerous, and some of them fierce and warlike. It is estimated that the Navejo Indians at this time have in their possession, as captives seized from Mexico, and the country adjacent thereto, and from trains which have been passing through that Territory, more than two hundred and twenty individuals. These two hundred and twenty individuals, held in captivity, are entitled to the protection of this Government. Is it right that this Government should allow her citizens to be seized by the savages in that manner, torn from their homes and families, and subjected to severities infinitely worse than any which excite the horror of some of the northern fanatics on this floor?

This appropriation is the amount which has been estimated by the Department. I doubt myself whether it is sufficient. It will however answer for the present as a beginning, and if our agents are successful other appropriations can hereafter be made. It is true that one treaty has been entered into between the Navejo Indians, and another with the Apaches.

The Government here were made to believe that it was a treaty with all the tribes there, and so binding upon all these nations; while it turns out, upon examination, that they were made with chiefs who were representing only about two hundred Indians; and that it would have required about eighty chiefs equal in dignity, and each representing as many Indians as those with whom the treaty was made, to have negotiated a treaty that would have been binding upon all the tribes. The result was, that it was acknowledged by only one or two of these bands, and that the rest have wholly disregarded it.

I am fearful that if we succeed in making treaties with all these tribes of wild Indians, that they will prove to be insufficient to save our people from robbery, rapine, and murder. But, in my opinion, the experiment ought to be tried before force is resorted to. It may be that if you will make sufficient appropriations for these Indians upon the plains of New Mexico, Utah, and for other tribes between our western frontier settlements and the Rocky Mountains—by making your appropriations sufficiently large to furnish them with provisions sufficient for their subsistence—that you can succeed in arresting the outrages which are constantly being committed upon your emigrant trains. It is worth the experiment, even if it fails. It is better to secure good order and good deportment upon the part of the Indians, peacefully at any cost, rather than to enforce it at the point of the bayonet.

There is another item to be incorporated in the bill which proposes to appropriate $100,000 for defraying the expenses of a council, to be held at Fort Benton, on the Upper Missouri, some time in the course of the coming summer. It is to be held nominally with the Black Feet Indians. It is expected that all the bands of that tribe will be present, and that many other Indians, including the Flat Heads in the Territories of Washington and Oregon, west of the Rocky Mountains. These Black Feet Indians are continually making incursions upon their neighbors in all directions. The Flat Heads have made considerable progress in the cultivation of the soil. They have farms which they cultivate, and on which they raise cattle, horses, and hogs; but the Black Feet Indians make incursions upon them, destroy their crops, and carry off their property.

Governor Stevens, when he went out last summer upon a railroad exploring expedition, and to assume the duties of his office as Governor of Washington Territory, met representatives of most of these tribes, and describes them as fierce and warlike. "Their hand seems to be against every man's, and every man's hand against them." But it is hoped, that by the council which is to be held, such an impression will be made upon their minds as will incline them to a more pacific course of policy towards our citizens who may be traveling through their country.

It is supposed that the appropriations required to defray the expenses of the council will reach $100,000. The number of Indians present will probably be twenty thousand. The council will probably continue from one to two weeks. During all this time this vast number must be fed; and when the cost of the provisions necessary for that purpose is added to the presents to be made, and the cost of transporting presents and provisions, it is most reasonable to assume that $100,000 will not be too large a sum. Governor Stevens, in his estimates, thinks that a smaller sum, some $70,000, would be sufficient. The Department has examined his estimates for the cost of the presents which it is proposed shall be given to the Indians, and they find that when the cost of transportation from New York to St. Louis is added to the other items, the amount required will be far beyond what he has estimated it.

It is designed to send these goods to St. Louis, and thence by steamboat to Fort Benton. To do this it is necessary that the appropriation shall be made speedily. The navigation of the Missouri river is difficult and precarious at all times in low water; and it is wholly impeded when you get above the mouth, perhaps, of the Yellow Stone river; certainly above the mouth of Milk river. To enable the boat, with the goods and provisions to be sent the Indians, to reach its destination, it is necessary that it should leave in April, so as to reach the Yellow Stone river during the annual flood of the Missouri, made by the melting of the snow on the Rocky Mountains. If it be not successful in getting off by the middle of April, or the 1st of May, there is no reasonable hope that it will reach the point designated, and, of course, the whole movement towards holding a council will be defeated.

This council is the more necessary for the reason that, in 1850, a similar one was held at Fort Laramie. The tribes of wild Indians adjacent thereto were collected, presents were made to them, treaties of amity and peace were entered into between them and the Government, and stipulation was made to pay them annuities in goods, presents, and money for ten years. The Blackfeet, and half a dozen other tribes of wild Indians on their borders, have learned of these bounties conferred upon their brethren at Fort Laramie, and they have become more dissatisfied than ever with the white man, because they think that the same liberality should be extended to them which was extended to those of their brethren on the Plains. "Now, sir, this is an experiment also. It may be that it will not result in good. I have myself a very strong hope, a very confident expectation, that it will result favorably. I think that if the appropriation is passed, we will hear of fewer robberies perpetrated upon the vast territories between this and Oregon. You will hear of fewer of our citizens being murdered; and, sir, if we can save the lives of even ten of our citizens, we shall be amply compensated for the expenditure of this $100,000. It may have the effect of humanizing these savages, if I may use the expression. They have had, heretofore, little intercourse with the whites. They are hard to be persuaded of the resources and improvements of the whites. They do not believe the stories told them of railroads and steamboats, and of the great cities built by the white man in the valley of the Mississippi and on the Atlantic slope. They do not place any reliance whatever on such tales; and if our agents go there, if we send our steamboats, and our cannon and pistols, our goods and provisions, presents and gewgaws, it will have a salutary effect in impressing them with the great advantages our friendship can confer, and the great danger which our hostility may expose them to—it may be, to turn their minds to the pursuits of agriculture, rather than the precarious ones of the chase. It is worth the experiment, at all events; and I hope the committee will determine to vote it in when the amendment shall be presented. Governor Stevens recommends it in the strongest terms; and his recommendation is concurred in by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

There are other amendments which I shall propose to the bill, but they are not of the consequence of the one of which I have already spoken. I shall defer their explanation until the five-minute debate shall commence.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As I perceive the gentleman has brought his remarks nearly to their close, I would inquire of him what is the aggregate amount of the appropriations he proposes?

Mr. ORR. I stated that it would be about $350,000.

Mr. JONES. I wish, then, to ask the gentleman if estimates for that amount have been furnished by the Indian Department?

Mr. ORR. The estimates have come through the Secretary of the Interior to the Committee on Indian Affairs, from the Indian bureau.

Mr. JONES. Have they ever been presented to the House?

Mr. ORR. No, sir.

Mr. JONES. Or printed?

Mr. ORR. They have not.

Mr. JONES. Well then, I will say, with the permission of the gentleman from South Carolina, that I think it would be as well for him to submit them to the House and have them printed, so that we may all see them and be able to judge of them. I recollect that during the last Congress this system was commenced of sending large estimates to the committees and not to the House, and afterwards it was charged in some of the newspapers that Congress had appropriated more than the Administration asked for. Now, there will be nothing in the public documents of the session that go out to the country to show that the Administration has asked for this $350,000 of appropriation for the Indians; and the members of this Committee know nothing at all about it save the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is nothing but right and proper—it is but fair and just to the members of the House and to the country, that these estimates should now be submitted to the House, and ordered to be printed, for the use of members.

Mr. ORR. I will state, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, that I think if he will examine the act of 1842 he will find that the heads of Departments have ample power to send estimates to the chairmen of the different committees of this House.

There may be something in the point which the gentleman makes, as to the House not having the information. I have no sort of objection to ask the House, when the committee rises this evening, to have all the letters and estimates that have been communicated to the Committee on Indian Affairs, printed for the use of the House. I have no objection whatever to that, and I suppose there will be no objection to it on the part of any other gentleman.

There is one other point to which I desire to refer, before I take my seat. It is very desirable that this bill should pass promptly. It is very desirable that these funds, at least those contemplated in the amendments which I have indicated, should be put in the hands of the Indian Department, so that they can at once commence their negotiations. It is a long way to Oregon, and Washington, and New Mexico, and Utah. If the bill was to meet with no obstruction, if it was to pass as speedily as possible, the probability is that nearly a month would elapse before it would receive the signature of the President. It has to go to the Senate, and the amendments that may be made there have to be referred to a committee of this House, and be reported and acted on. The process is a tedious one, and if the committee desire that the appropriations to be made shall be of service, they must pass the bill promptly.

I do not know whether I shall be sustained or not in the motion to close debate, which I shall submit to-morrow morning, if I succeed in getting the floor. I desire that whatever debate there may be upon this bill, shall be legitimate. I desire that whatever debate there is shall be upon the merits of the bill and the amendments. I am willing that gentlemen shall consume whatever time may be necessary to discuss thoroughly the provisions of the Indian appropriation bill. But I do not think that in the pressing emergencies that surround us, gentlemen ought to use it to hang general speeches upon. Gentlemen will have an opportunity of speaking most fully and liberally on every question while other bills are under consideration which are not so pressing as this. I shall, therefore, with a view of disposing of this bill, offer a resolution, either this evening, when the committee rises, or to-morrow morning, when the House meets, to close the debate on this bill at three o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] or the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, state how much these appropriations will amount to?

Mr. ORR. I am not able to answer the gentleman's question precisely, as I have not read over the entire bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I can give the gentleman from Ohio the information which he desires. The appropriations in all amount to $999,974, precisely the amount which the Government is bound by its treaties to pay.

Mr. ORR. I desire to say, in reply to gentlemen who say that it is not fair to close debate so suddenly upon this bill, that all the provisions in this bill, as stated by the Committee of Ways and Means, are made in conformity with treaty stipulations, entered into by the Government with the various Indian tribes. You must either repudiate your faith with them, as ratified by these treaties, or make these appropriations. They are the regular appropriations. The only extra appropriations which we ask, beyond the ordinary regular ones, are contained in the amendments which I have indicated.

Mr. MILLSON obtained the floor.

Mr. HUNT. I have never addressed the House elaborately, and I ask it as a matter of courtesy, that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] will give me the floor to make a speech upon the Nebraska bill. Upon this question I occupy the position of one opposed to the South generally; and I think that it is not asking too much at their hands to yield me this courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] as being entitled to the floor. Does the gentleman yield the floor to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. HUNT?]

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman from Louisiana places me in a very embarrassing situation, as I would be exceedingly pleased to gratify him by acceding to his wish. But I have been very anxious for some time to get the floor in Committee of the Whole to make a speech upon another subject than the one now under consideration, as I desired to leave the city, and make a visit home, which has been delayed much longer than I intended. The gentleman from Louisiana will have no difficulty in obtaining the floor to-morrow; and, under the circumstances, I trust that he will excuse me for not yielding him the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Virginia give way for a motion that the Committee rise?

Mr. MILLSON. I will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR. I make the motion, then, that the committee rise.

The question was put, and agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill (No. 46) entitled "A bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1855," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the various estimates which have been sent by the Secretary of the Interior to the Committee on Indian Affairs be printed.

Mr. BOCKOCK. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope that my friend from Virginia will withdraw his objection. It is almost impossible for us to get along with these estimates understandingly unless we have them printed. We want them printed for our own information. I appeal to my friend from Virginia to withdraw his objection.

Mr. BOCKOCK. As I am appealed to, I withdraw my objection.

The question was then put on the motion to have the estimates printed, which was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. Then I will state the reasons why I desire to make that motion; and perhaps the House will indulge me. There is upon the Speaker's table a bill from the Senate making provision for the courts of the United States, and for additional facilities for post office business in the city of Philadelphia. By the act consolidating the different districts into the one municipality, the courts of the United States will be left without—

Mr. SAGE, (interrupting.) Mr. Speaker, what is the question before the House?

Mr. FLORENCE. I have moved to proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table. If the House will indulge me in an explanation—

Several MEMBERS. "Question!" "Question!"

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon, at three o'clock and twenty minutes, p. m., adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 23, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, praying that the post-office in that city may not be removed from its present location; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SUMNER presented the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Bridgewater, Massachusetts, held at the town hall, on the 13th of March, 1854, against the repeal of the Missouri compromise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, resolutions passed at a meeting of the inhabitants of Northampton, Massachusetts, held on the 20th of March, 1854, in opposition to the Nebraska bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Also, the petition and papers of Elizabeth A. W. Gibson, widow of Frederick Gibson, late of the Revenue Service, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in support of the application of G. R. Herrick, for balance of salary due him, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That Captain Nichols have leave to withdraw his papers.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1854, reported it back, with sundry amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. McKean, its Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

Bill for the relief of Gray, McMurdo & Co.;

Bill for the relief of William Mayo, of Belfast, Maine;

Joint resolution for settling the accounts of A. Boyd Hamilton;

Bill for the relief of the troops who were sufferers by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco;

Bill for the relief of Samuel K. Rayburn;

A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury and Light-House Board to determine upon the site, plan, and mode of constructing the light-house on Cohasset Rocks, and for other purposes;

A joint resolution accepting certain volumes and medals presented by her Britannic Majesty's Government to the United States;

Bill to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Arkansas into two judicial districts;"

Which were then signed by the President pro tempore.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill from the Senate for the relief of settlers on lands reserved for railroad purposes.

CLERK TO A COMMITTEE.

On motion by Mr. ALLEN, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Agriculture be authorized to employ a clerk.

Mr. WELLER subsequently moved to reconsider the vote.

CLAIMS OF REVOLUTIONARY OFFICERS.

The bill to provide for the final settlement of the claims of the officers of the Revolutionary Army, and of the widows and orphan children of those who died in the service, was read a second time; and, on the motion of Mr. EVANS, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that the officers of the Army of the Revolution, who were entitled to half pay for life under the resolutions of Congress, of the 21st of October, 1780, the 17th of January, 1781, the 8th of May, 1781, and the 8th of March, 1785, shall be entitled to receive the same, although such officer may have received, in lieu thereof, the commutation of full pay for five years, under the resolution of Congress, of the 22d of March, 1783. It is to be the duty of the proper accounting officer of the Treasury, when applied to for that purpose, by any one who is entitled to receive, or his or her guardian, to ascertain what is due to such officer, from the time he became entitled to half pay until his death, if that occurred before the 3d day of March, 1826, but if he died after that time, then up to that period.

When the amount due to any officer has been ascertained, the Secretary of the Treasury is to pay it, after deducting therefrom the amount received for commutation, under the resolution of the 22d of March, 1783.

Those officers, who are entitled to receive half pay for life, under the resolutions above mentioned, and did not receive the same, or the commutation in lieu thereof, and have not since been provided for by any special act of Congress, are to be paid, on establishing their rights to the satisfaction of the accounting officer of the Treasury by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The half pay for seven years, promised by the resolution of Congress, of August 24, 1780, to the widows and orphan children of those officers, who died in the service, is in like manner to be paid, on proof to the satisfaction of the accounting officer. And the benefit of the resolution, of the 24th of August, 1780, is to be extended to the widow and orphan children of all officers who were killed in battle or died of wounds received in battle, whether such officer belonged to the Continental line, or any volunteer corps called into service under the authority of any State; but no payment is to be made under this section except to those specially described in the resolution of the 24th of August, 1780.

The Secretary of War, under the direction, and with the approbation of the President of the United States, is to prescribe such rules of evidence as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the act.

No interest is to be paid on the sums claimed, and proof is to be furnished of ownership. All sales, transfers, mortgages, or pledges of any such claims, are declared void. This act is not to extend to the case of any officer or his representatives, who have received either half pay for life or commutation in lieu thereof, under any special act of Congress; and all persons who shall receive the benefit of this act are to receive the same in full satisfaction of all claims, under any of the resolutions of Congress before recited, and for all losses alleged to have been sustained by depreciation in the value of the certificates received as commutation, under the resolution of Congress of the 22d of March, 1783.

The act is to continue in force ten years, and all claims not presented with the evidence for their adjudication within that time are to be forever barred, and the decision of the accounting officer is to be final and conclusive.

To a correct understanding of this case, it is necessary to state, that in anticipation of the reform of the army which took place on the 1st of January, 1781, whereby many officers would be displaced, Congress, on October 2, 1781, resolved that the Commander-in-Chief, and the commanding officer of the southern department, direct the officers of each State to meet and agree upon the officers for the regiments, to be raised by their respective States from those who inclined to continue in the service; and where it could not be done by agreement, to be determined by seniority, and make return of those who were to remain, which was to be transmitted to Congress, together with the names of the officers reduced, who were to be allowed half pay for life. The officers who continued in the service to the end of the war were to be entitled to half pay during life, to commence from the time of their reduction. The resolution of October 3, 1780, allowed the reduced officers half pay for seven years, but this was superseded by the resolution above recited. By subsequent resolutions of January 17, 1781, and of May 3, 1781, a similar provision was made for the medical staff and for chaplains.

By a resolution of March 22, 1783, on the application of some of the officers then under the immediate command of General Washington, Congress offered to all those entitled to half pay for life a commutation of five years' full pay, with a proviso that it should be at the option of the lines of the respective States to accept or refuse, and not of the officers individually; and such officers as had retired at different times should collectively, in each State, accept or refuse the same; and the superintendent of finance, as soon as their acceptance should be signified, should take measures for the settlement of their accounts, and issue to them certificates, bearing an interest of six per cent. By the resolution of May 15, 1778, all officers who should continue in the service until the end of the war were promised seven years' half pay, if they should so long live. This provision, by the resolution of August 24, 1780, was extended to the widow of any officer who had or should die in the service, and if there be no widow, then to the orphan children of such officer.

The bill is based upon petitions which may be divided into three classes.

1. The officers who received the commutation under the resolution of March 22, 1783, and now ask that Congress will pay them the half pay for life, deducting what they have received, or pay them the difference between the par value of the certificates and the market value for which their necessities compelled them to sell. This class includes nearly all the petitions.

2. Those who have never received, either the half pay or commutation, and now ask that they may be paid one or the other. There are only ten or twelve of this class.

3. The children of officers who were killed in the service during the war of the Revolution, asking to be paid the seven years' half pay, under the resolution of August 24, 1780. There are two of this class.

The bill embraces all these cases, and leaves the proof to be made before the accounting officers.

The principles of the bill are: That the widow and lineal descendants of any officer who was entitled to receive, under the resolutions of Congress, half pay for life, shall still be entitled, notwithstanding such officer may have received the commutation. The receipt of the commutation in lieu of the life annuity presents a case of election, and in strict law might be a bar to these claims. But the petitioners allege, and there is no doubt of the fact, that there was no fund for the payment of the certificates; that in consequence of this and the large amount which was thrown upon the market, and the necessity the officers were under to sell, the market price of the certificates fell to twelve and a half per cent. Besides this, the mode of accepting or refusing the offer did not leave them individually the right of choosing. Considering all the facts of the case, and that the amounts which the officers actually received have fallen so far below their deserts, and the amount of rewards which were promised, it was thought they should be admitted to their original rights. They are to be paid the half pay for life, deducting the amount of their commutation certificates.

The fourth section of the bill authorizes the payment of the half pay for life to the widow or lineal descendants of all officers entitled thereto, but who have never been paid, upon satisfactory proof of their claim to the proper accounting officer.

The fifth clause provides for the payment in like manner to the widow or children of any officer who died in the service, under the resolution of August 24, 1780.

Among the petitions is one which does not come within the resolution. The father of the petitioner was not in the Continental line, but commanded a volunteer company under the authority of a State at the time he was killed. Considering this a meritorious case, and that after the lapse of seventy years there can be few, if any, cases of a like description, the committee have added to the bill a clause which embraces her case.

The bill provides that payments are to be made only to the surviving widow and lineal descendants of the officers; collateral kindred are excluded. If these were legal debts, then it would be proper they should be paid to the executor or administrator, and be assets for the payment of debts, and the surplus be paid to those who are entitled under the statutes of distribution in the several States. But in most of the cases the legal obligation has been discharged by the payment of the commutation. The allowance of these claims is more of the nature of a benevolence, given in discharge of a great moral obligation. Gratitude for the services of these officers may impose on Congress the extension of its rewards to the several heirs of the deceased officer, but not to his remote collateral kindred. Besides this, considering the migratory character of our people, it will be no easy task to ascertain who are the lineal descendants of one who died forty or fifty years ago, and this difficulty will be greatly increased in tracing collateral descent for two or three generations. Provisions are added to the bill to protect the claimants against the rapacity of speculators, and secure to those who are the objects of its bounty the personal benefit of its provisions. As it is time there should be an end to claims growing out of the war of the Revolution, which terminated seventy years ago, the bill is limited to ten years, after which all the claims provided for by it will be forever barred.

The following is a list of cases referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and which are embraced in the report made July 6, 1853:

First class.—Those who have received the commutation, and are to receive the half pay for life, deducting the commutation on proof: Benjamin Mooers, Simon Summers, Wells Clift, William Beaumont, Joshua Danforth, William Riley, Philip G. Vanwick, James Sawyer, Clement Gosline, Garrat Tunice, Thomas Reed, Samuel Gibbs, Derrick Schuyler, Samuel Lewis, Nicholas Schuyler, Thomas Mounts, James Clinton, Peter Gansvort, Andrew Finck, Peter J. Vosburgh, Lewis Booker, Thomas Buckner, Samuel Cliff, Jedediah Huntington, Henry Hughes, Beverly Roy, 26; and Pierre Ayot, 27.

Second class.—Those who claim half pay or commutation, and are to be allowed half pay for life: J. De Treville, Antoine Paulent, Francis Chaudonet, George Gibson, Louis Gosline, Gerard Wood, Uriah Forrest, Francis Marten, Amable Boiliace, Lewis Marnay, Joseph Bendon, Felix Vinter, and Maria Stephenson.

Third class.—The children of officers who died in the service: Nathan Weeks, Mary Perry, and Jacob Cooper.

Mr. STUART. I would like to learn from the Senator from South Carolina something in regard to the effect of the bill, and whether the attention of the Secretary of the Interior or Treasury, or both, has been called to it. It seems to me to provide not only for some very new, but what appears to be very extensive alterations in the accounts of this description of persons; and I apprehend, from hearing the bill read, that the effect of it may be to bring in a great many claims which have not much real foundation. I presume the Senator can explain the matter.

Mr. EVANS. I can give the Senator all the information which he desires. It will be necessary, however, to go somewhat into detail in order to present all the facts and all the cases for which the bill proposes to provide. Soon after, or even in fact before, the Declaration of Independence, Congress determined to raise an army, to consist of eighty-eight battalions. These were divided among the States in the ratio of their numbers, or in some other way. The whole eighty-eight battalions put together formed what was called the "Continental line." The contingent of each State was called the "State line," and thus the "Continental line" was made up of the Massachusetts line, the Virginia line, and the lines of the other States, making altogether eighty-eight battalions. One great difficulty—and all who have read the correspondence of Washington with Congress cannot but be impressed with it—was the constant fluctuation which was going on, by old officers and old soldiers going out, and new ones coming in. This rendered the army very inefficient, and Washington was constantly pressing upon Congress the fact, that it was of the utmost importance that the army should have some permanent character. In order to accomplish this, Congress, on the 19th of May, 1778—

"Resolved unanimously, That all military officers commissioned by Congress, who now are, or hereafter may be, in the service of these United States, and shall continue therein during the war, and not hold any office of profit under these States, or any of them, shall, after the conclusion of the war, be entitled to receive annually, for the term of seven years, if they live so long, one half of the present pay of such officers."

This was an inducement held out to the officers to remain in the service until the end of the war. It followed, of course, that in the various battles which were fought many of these officers were killed; therefore, as this was intended as a personal compensation, no one else was entitled to receive it. Congress, therefore, in the same spirit, on the 24th August, 1780, passed another resolution:

"That the resolution of the 15th day of May, 1778, granting half pay for seven years to the officers of the Army who should continue in the service to the end of the war, be extended to the widows of those officers who have died or shall hereafter die in the service."

This constitutes one class of these claims, but it is a very small class, for there are only two or three petitions before the committee presented by the children of the officers who were killed in battle, and the bill proposes to provide for them.

We propose to go further, so as to include a class of cases not embraced in the resolution of the Congress of 1780; and there is only one case of the sort which was before the committee—the case of Mrs. Perry, an exceedingly meritorious one, which we thought should be provided for. It is not likely that many others will come, because this class embraces only widows and orphans of the officers, not their descendants. It was a provision intended for them, and for them alone. All that it is proposed to do now is to provide for the few who have not been provided for; and none can come in under the act but those who are seventy-five years of age. For this reason the number will be very small. It is now seventy-five years since the resolution of 1780 was passed, and over seventy years since the end of the war. The provision of the bill in this respect is:

"And that the benefit of the said resolution of the 24th of August, 1780, shall be extended to the widows and orphan children of all officers who were killed in battle, or died of wounds received in battle, whether such officers belonged to the continental line, or any volunteer called into service under the authority of any State; but no payment shall be made under this section, except to those specially described in the said resolution."

To wit, the widows and orphans. This provides for one class.

Well, sir, in the year 1780, in contemplation of a reduction of the Army, Congress adopted this resolution:

"That the Commander-in-Chief and the commanding officer in the southern department, direct the officers of each State to meet and agree on the officers for the regiments to be raised by their respective States, from those who incline to continue in service; and where it cannot be done by agreement, to be determined by seniority." &c.

"The officers so reduced are to be allowed half pay for life."

Then follows another clause:

"That officers who shall continue in the service until the end of the war shall also be entitled to half pay during life, to commence from the time of their reduction."

This was a provision embracing every officer who was reduced or made a supernumerary, and every one who remained in the army until the end of the war. Then, sir, after the last battle was fought, and while the army was encamped, the greater part of it in New York, under the immediate direction of General Washington, some dissatisfaction arose in relation to this annuity of half pay for life. As I understand the history of the times, the formation of the Society of the Cincinnati, consisting of the officers of the army, together with the further fact that they were to be paid half pay for life, excited a strong discontent in the country. The officers of the army, in consequence of that discontent, petitioned Congress to grant them something to be paid immediately, instead of the half pay for life. They considered that by this course their present necessities would be relieved, and at the same time they would escape the odium which was springing up in the country against the provision granting them half pay for life. Then I find that, on the 22d of March, 1783:

"On the report of a committee, together with a memorial of the officers of the army, Congress passed the following resolutions:

"Whereas, the officers of the several lines under the immediate command of his Excellency General Washington, did, by their late memorial, transmitted by their committee, represent to Congress that the half pay granted by sundry resolutions was regarded in an unfavorable light by the citizens of some of these States, who would prefer a compensation for a limited term of years, or by a sum in gross, to an establishment for life; and did, on that account, solicit a commutation of their half pay for an equivalent in one of the two modes above mentioned, in order to remove all subject of dissatisfaction from the minds of their fellow-citizens.

"And whereas, Congress are desirous, as well of gratifying the reasonable expectations of the officers of the army as of removing all objections which may exist in any part of the United States to the principle of the half pay establishment, for which the faith of the United States hath been pledged: persuaded that those objections can only arise from the nature of the compensation, not from any indisposition to compensate those whose services, sacrifices, and sufferings have so just a title to the approbation and rewards of their country: Therefore,

"Resolved, That such officers as are now in service, and shall continue therein to the end of the war, shall be entitled to receive the amount of five years' full pay in money, or securities on interest, at six per cent. per annum, as Congress shall find most convenient, instead of the half pay promised for life by the resolution of the 21st day of October, 1780: the said securities to be such as shall be given to other creditors of the United States: Provided, It be at the option of the lines of the respective States, and not of officers individually in those lines, to accept or refuse the same: And provided, also, That their election shall be signified to Congress through the Commander-in-Chief, from the lines under his immediate command within two months."

"That the same commutation shall extend to the corps not belonging to the lines of particular States, and who are entitled to half pay for life as aforesaid; the acceptance or refusal to be determined by corps, and to be signified in the same manner, and within the same time."

Those who were originally entitled to half pay for life, and who afterwards had the option of accepting, in lieu of it, the commutation of five years' full pay, as they present themselves to the Senate now, consist of two classes. The first class is composed of those who have never received anything, and whose representatives are now petitioning to be allowed that to which their ancestors would have been entitled if they had applied. In relation to these claims I have very little to say. Whenever such a case has been made out, Congress has passed private bills for the relief of the parties; and I find, in the volume of "Revolutionary Claims" which I have before me, about one hundred cases of that description, in which special acts have been passed to provide for those who never received the commutation or the half pay. No explanation, therefore, is necessary in relation to them, because these claims have always been recognized; and the only difficulty has been to make out the proof, and get both Houses of Congress to act upon them at the same time. The large class principally provided for by the bill are those who received the commutation.

I gather, from the means of information which have been in my power, that when the army was disbanded in November, 1783, Congress sent a paymaster for the purpose of discharging all these obligations. The paymaster repaired to the army, carrying with him certificates made out for all the officers; and to each one who was present, and who would receive it, he delivered a certificate for his commutation for five years' full pay, in lieu of the half pay for life.

Some gentlemen seem to think it important to know the number of these persons. I find, in a report made by Mr. Burgess, on the Rhode Island claims, some twenty years ago, that it is stated as a fact, capable of proof, that the army consisted of two thousand four hundred and eighty officers who were entitled to the commutation when it was disbanded. I have made inquiries at the proper office here, and the Third Auditor has informed me that it appears from the books in his office, and from those in the Pension Office, that two thousand two hundred and fifty-six did receive the commutation. Now, adding to that number the one hundred for whom special provision has been made, and the number of applicants before Congress, and you will have over two thousand three hundred. As will appear hereafter, when I come to that part of the case, the proposed provision for this number of persons will amount to a very large sum of money; and with some gentlemen, I believe it will be considered conclusive against the bill that it does appropriate a large amount of money.

But, sir, the question which now arises is, are we not bound to pay? I do not mean to say that in a court of law it would be regarded as a legal obligation. Congress, upon the petition of a portion of the officers, at least, offered to give five years' full pay in lieu of the half pay for life. The offer was accepted. The legal obligation, therefore, was probably discharged by that; but, then, what were the facts in relation to the matter? The officers had the certificates of Government that it owed them so much money; but the Government was insolvent. Under the Confederation Congress had no means of raising money. There was a debt of $100,000,000 which had been contracted during the Revolution. The officers had retired from the army—most of them in a state of poverty and destitution. They had nothing but these certificates. If they had property besides when they went into the army it was desolated by the enemy before the conclusion of the war; and thus they were thrown upon the world with nothing but those certificates, which had no appreciable market value whatever. Most of the petitions before the committee set out, and all who are conversant with the history of the times know the fact very well, that they depreciated finally down to twelve and a half per cent.; so that he to whom the Government promised to give $100 received only $12 50, and a captain's commutation of five years' full pay, amounting to $2,400, had no market value greater than $300; and in the larger portions of the cases, according to the best information I can collect upon the subject, they were sold at that rate.

Now, sir, what was the promise? The promise was, that they should be paid in money; that, in consideration of their remaining in the army until the end of the war, they should receive half pay for life, which was commuted for five years' full pay, to be paid in money, or, at the option of Congress, in certificates bearing six per centum interest, which should have been considered as equivalent to so much money. The contract, the obligation, really was to pay the commutation of five years' full pay in money. Did they receive it? Every man here, who has investigated the matter, knows that they received hardly a tenth part of it. Whose fault was that? Was it their fault? It was not, perhaps, the fault of the Congress of that time, but it was a necessary result from the situation in which we were placed. Congress could not pay them. Although we had achieved our independence; although Great Britain had acknowledged it, what was our situation? Had we any Government? Was there any central Government having power to pay those debts? There was none, sir. Was there any certainty that the discordant materials of which this country consisted at that time, the State governments, would ever coalesce and form a Federal Government, so as to provide for these debts? No, sir; it was very uncertain indeed.

In this state of things, the officers were thrown upon the world with these certificates, which depreciated daily, and had no market value. They received next to nothing for them. In this view, the committee thought—and I shall ever believe they thought correctly—that it would be right to put them back in the condition which they would have occupied, because Congress has not kept in good faith the consideration upon which they agreed to give up their half pay for life. When I say that Congress has not kept the consideration in good faith, I do not mean to say that it has been guilty of any want of good intentions for the performance of the contract, but simply to say that it has not been performed, and they have not received the half pay for life to which they had a legal right. In the State of Virginia, under like circumstances, the officers, upon being allowed to sue the State, recovered the amount, for it was considered that it was a legal obligation. For this legal obligation to pay them half pay for life they have received little or nothing.

Then, ought we not to pay? The committee thought we should. The only question on this point, and that of the greatest difficulty, was, whether we should not exempt them entirely upon proof that they had been obliged to sell these worthless certificates which had been given to them, for ten or twelve cents on the dollar; whether we ought not to allow them the difference between that amount and the par value? But the committee finally came to the conclusion to do this: to put them back upon the same footing which they occupied anterior to the promise of commutation, to give them their half pay for life, and to deduct from it, as a payment pro tanto, the nominal amount which they had received as commutation.

I come now to a statement, which will be considered very important by some gentlemen, and that is, as to the probable amount which will be involved in the passage of this bill. It proposes to allow half pay, and to deduct the commutation. Now, from the examinations which I have been able to make, I am satisfied that, if we take the pay of a captain we shall have a fair average. The pay of a captain was $40 a month, or $480 a year, and five years' full pay of a captain would therefore be $2,400; and every captain received $2,400 nominally as his commutation. Then the next question is, what will be the probable amount to which he will be entitled under this act, if it shall become a law? It is stated, in the report of Mr. Burgess, which I read with a great deal of care, because it seemed to have been drawn up by a very sensible man, that at the time the army was disbanded, it consisted of two thousand four hundred and eighty persons, of the average age of thirty years. I have not examined it myself; but he goes on to say that upon the principle upon which the life insurance companies make their calculations, the probability was that the average length of life of those officers would be twenty years beyond that. Now, if you take twenty years as the average duration of their lives beyond that period, and allow them half pay for life for that time, it will amount to $4,800 to each one, and I assume that that is the average.

According to the Auditor's letter, and the special acts, it appears that two thousand three hundred and seventy have received commutation, or have been provided for by special acts. Perhaps half of these or more will be able to make out their cases. If fifteen hundred should be able to make out their claims, the amount will be $3,600,000. If two thousand should make out their claims, it will be $4,800,000. Those payments would be scattered over a period of some four or five years, perhaps; so that the appropriations to meet the cases for which this bill provides will amount to a million a year for three or four years.

The amount seems large, and so it is. This bill does involve a large sum of money; but if any gentleman will trouble himself to look into the appropriations which have been made for the "second war of independence," as it has been called, the war of 1812, he will find that we have given away in money, in annuities, in pensions, and in lands, four times that amount. But, sir, the fact that it requires a large sum of money to do justice, is no reason why justice should not be done. Are we not giving away every day and almost every hour larger sums to people who have no claims upon us at all, merely because they suppose they have done some good to the country? But, can any man measure the good which the services of the officers of the Revolution conferred upon the country?

I have now, Mr. President, said all that I think it necessary to say upon the merits of the claims; and I come to the limitations imposed by the bill.

The first limitation is that the payments are to be made without interest. It was a question somewhat debated in the committee, as the chairman [Mr. WALKER] very well knows, whether these debts were not of that description that they should be paid with interest. I think that at the last session of Congress a report was made from the same committee, in the case of Mooers, in which interest was allowed; but the committee finally came to the conclusion that these debts should be paid without interest. I take it that that conclusion is right. The general rule is that a Government does not pay interest; and I remember very well that in all the recent cases which have occurred, this rule has been adhered to.

I have had occasion since I have been here at the present session, to look after an appropriation which was made two years ago to the State of South Carolina, for money paid for this Government seventeen years ago in the Florida war. The amount was allowed, but without interest. The claim of a gentleman from my own State last year, whose father was a hostage in the possession of the enemy and whose property was destroyed, was allowed by Congress, but without interest.

On looking into the special acts of Congress, it will be found that from the organization of the Government down to 1833, interest was never allowed by the express words of any act. It is true that in the case of Mrs. Hamilton, in 1814, the Attorney General gave it as his opinion that, although the act did not provide for the payment of interest, yet interest ought to be paid. It was paid; and the Department, for a few years afterwards, paid interest. In 1832 and 1833, there were sixteen cases before Congress, which were provided for, not exactly with interest, but the officers were allowed to be put upon the footing which they would have occupied if they had received their certificates—that is, they were allowed to fund them in the same way in which the certificates were at first funded, and to receive out of the Treasury whatever sum this would amount to. I have not been able to ascertain whether any of the certificates which were given to the revolutionary officers were actually funded in their own names. The best information which I can get on the subject is, that with a very few, perhaps no exceptions, they were bought up by speculators; and when the present Government was established in 1789, and the funding system was adopted, they were funded, but the officers received no benefit from that.

Another reason which influenced the committee in rejecting the allowance of interest was, that these claims had not been heretofore provided for, generally on account of the fault of the claimants themselves, the Government being always presumed to be ready to do justice to its citizens. The last consideration which influenced them on this head was the item of expense. Some gentlemen seem to be struck with a great degree of horror at the enormous amount of money which the passage of this bill will require to be paid. We found that if you were to include interest for seventy years, these claims, instead of amounting to three or four millions of dollars, would be swelled beyond twenty millions, and therefore the committee have not allowed interest.

The second provision in the bill, to which I beg leave to call attention, is that payments shall be made to lineal descendants only. The reason for that I will explain: If the bill provided that the amount should be paid to the legal representatives, (and every lawyer knows that the legal representatives of a man are his executors or administrators,) the result would be that letters of administration would be taken out upon every one of these two thousand three hundred or two thousand four hundred cases; the administrator would receive the money, and the chances are ten to one that it would never be got out of his hands. The claims agents here would administer upon the estates, get the money in their possession, and require those who afterwards came to claim it to prove that they were the heirs-at-law of the original party entitled, which, in very many cases, they would not be able to do. Thus the Government would lose the money, and those whom it was intended to benefit would not receive it. I take it, therefore, that it would not be proper to pay it to the legal representatives.

Then would it be right to pay the money to the heirs-at-law? Who are heirs-at-law? The heirs-at-law of every man are those upon whom the law casts the succession. They may be his children, or they may be remote collateral relations. If you said "heirs-at-law," collaterals would take it. Now, among the petitions which I have examined, and upon which there is a report, was one case in which the claim was made under these circumstances: Some man, whose name I do not remember, was appointed director of the hospital at Philadelphia, in November, 1776. In January afterwards, for some reason, on account of some public discontent, or perhaps some suspicion of his fidelity, he was dismissed, having served but three months. Afterwards, upon investigation, a committee reported that no charges were established against him; and therefore Congress came to a resolution acquitting him from any charges, but he never was employed after that. A petition is now presented by the grand-children of his brother; they make out their claim in this way: that if he had not been dismissed from the service he would have been entitled to so much pay, and at the end of the war, either to half pay for life, or to the commutation of five years' full pay, and this, with interest, would amount to the very moderate sum of $33,000. This is an illustration of the cases which will arise if we provide for heirs-at-law.

In providing only for lineal descendants, it seemed to me that this should be a satisfactory reason: we owe these officers a debt of gratitude. This debt may readily be transferred, and there are reasons why it should be transferred, to their children, because many of their children are now poor, and poor perhaps for the very reason that their fathers spent so long a period in the service of their country. The committee, therefore, came to the conclusion, that there was no propriety in paying this sum to executors or administrators, or to heirs-at-law; and as we owed no debt of gratitude to a man's collateral relations, we thought the provision ought to be restricted to his lineal descendants.

There is another provision in the bill, which perhaps requires some explanation. It provides that nothing shall be paid after 1826. In 1828 Congress passed a law giving to the surviving officers of the Revolution, not half pay, but full pay for life, commencing with the 3d of March, 1826.

For this reason, we have provided, that in adjusting their claims their half pay shall stop at the time their pension commenced. That we thought was right.

Another provision is, that those who have been provided for by special acts shall be excluded from the benefits of this bill. The principle upon which this bill proposes to give to the children of the officers of the Revolution is, that they did not receive that which had been promised to them; but those who came in under special acts received all that was promised them. Many others received mere certificates, which were worth little or nothing; but those for whose relief special acts have been passed have received in money the full amount of all that was ever promised to them.

I believe, Mr. President, that I have now given all the explanation which it is necessary for me to make.

Mr. MASON. It is now one o'clock, and I desire, as I told the honorable Senator who reported this bill, to confer with him upon some of its provisions, and he has kindly assented to this. I move, therefore, to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow, with the view of proceeding to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

MARSHALS AND JUDGES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WELLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be requested to inquire into the expediency of increasing the fees of the marshals of the northern and southern districts of California, and also the salaries of the judges thereof.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 23, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine will state his privileged question.

UNITED STATES COURTS AT PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the gentleman from Maine will first allow me one or two minutes to bring some business before the House which will occupy a very brief space of time.

Mr. FULLER. If I can accommodate the gentleman from Pennsylvania without losing my right to the floor, I will be happy to accede to his request.

Mr. CHANDLER. The gentleman will not lose his right to the floor. He can at any time rise to a privileged question.

Mr. FULLER. Then I will be happy to yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is on your table, Mr. Speaker, a bill from the Senate making provision for a court-house, either to be hired or built, in the city of Philadelphia. I desire to state in relation to this bill, what my colleague [Mr. FLORENCE] would have stated yesterday, perhaps with more emphasis than I shall do now, that the United States court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania will, in a few months, be without any place for the holding of their terms. There can be no writs sued out for returns to the place where they now sit, as the consolidated city requires these rooms. The Senate being deeply impressed with the great importance of this matter, took up the bill which was reported to them, and immediately passed it. I desire, therefore, the unanimous consent of the House to take up that bill from the table, and have it read for the information of the House, that they may see what other provisions are required in it.

Mr. FLORENCE. I hope it will be taken up and immediately put upon its passage.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let us hear the bill read first.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the bill will be taken up and read by its title.

It was read, as follows:

An act to provide a place for the post office in the city of Philadelphia, and for the courts of the United States for the eastern district of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] will allow me for a moment, I will say that the Committee on the Judiciary have had referred to them a general bill, making a similar provision for obtaining a court-house in Boston. I think it is almost in the very words of this bill. Having had various memorials referred to us in reference to the same subject as relates to the city of Philadelphia, and the city of New York also, where the building formerly occupied by the courts was burned a short time since, the committee have instructed me to report an amendment to the bill which has been referred to us, authorizing temporary provision to be made for the United States courts in the three cities of Philadelphia, Boston, and New York; and, at the same time, directing the President to procure sites, either by purchase or otherwise—for it is understood that in the city of New York a site will be provided by that city without expense to the General Government—and to submit plans and estimates for the erection of buildings in those three cities, suited to the purposes for which they are intended.

If it were the will of the House I could present that report at the present time, and the bill could be put upon its passage, either with the amendment, if adopted, or without it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should dislike to interfere with the wishes of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, but it is a matter of absolute necessity that this bill should be passed soon, in order that the proper preparations may be made for the holding of the regular terms of the court. The judges have written to me, pressing upon my attention the importance of this matter, and urging its immediate passage by the House.

Mr. FLORENCE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that it would be better to permit this bill to pass at the present time disconnected with the one which he proposes to report from the Committee on the Judiciary. If I understand the gentleman from Tennessee, this bill will not interfere with the one to which he has referred. It is necessary that some arrangement should be made for the United States courts in Philadelphia at an early day.

The courts, I believe, meet in April, and there are only six weeks, at furthest, to make the necessary preparations. The rooms now occupied for that purpose will have to be vacated on the first of April, and therefore I think it will be very much better to allow this bill to pass, and afterwards the Committee on the Judiciary can avail itself of an early opportunity to present their plan for securing permanent places for the United States courts, and for the post office business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I believe I have the floor, and think I can no longer yield it. I am persuaded that the proposition made by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. STANTON] will have an unfavorable bearing upon the passage of the present bill, the passage of which is so necessary at this time. I move to put the bill upon its passage, and upon that I call the previous question.

Mr. FLORENCE. Did not the gentleman yield me the floor?

Mr. CHANDLER. I did yield for a moment, but I am anxious to get along with the matter as soon as possible.

Mr. STANTON. I beg leave to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is not my intention to throw any obstacle in the way of his bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has called the previous question, and debate is not in order.

Mr. STANTON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his call for a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will withdraw it.

Mr. STANTON. It will be observed that the bill provides for the making a permanent lease, lasting ten years. A similar provision is to be made in a bill for a court-house in Boston.

It is absolutely necessary that something should be done in the three cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, and the Committee on the Judiciary thought it the interest of the United States, rather than to make a lease for ten years, to put up buildings of a proper character—fire-proof buildings—for court-houses and post offices. If this bill should be passed, any provision in it for a permanent lease would certainly be wrong. I think, therefore, we had better make provision at once for permanent buildings for these court-houses and post offices, and the Committee on the Judiciary have instructed me to report an amendment for that purpose.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the necessity there is for some immediate action in this case renders it imperative for me to ask the House to pass this bill as it is; and I therefore insist upon my demand for the previous question.

Upon seconding the demand for the previous question, sixty-nine gentlemen rose in the affirmative.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask for tellers upon the second.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and ROBBINS were appointed.

The House was then divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 45.

So the previous question received a second.

The main question was then ordered to be put. The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. PRESTON. I desire that the third reading of the bill shall be in full. I did not hear, on account of the confusion in the Hall, what its provisions were on the former reading.

The bill was read through.

Mr. PRESTON. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, whether the purchase or lease is conditional?

Mr. CHANDLER. Everything is conditional.

Mr. PRESTON. Let that portion of the bill be again read.

The Clerk read the portion of the bill referred to, as follows:

"By leasing and fitting up the same for a term of years, less than ten years, or by purchase; provided that no purchase shall take place, except conditionally, and dependent upon the making of an appropriation by Congress."

Mr. SAGE. This is a very important measure, and one that it strikes me ought to receive the full consideration of the House. I should have greatly preferred to have seen it come from the Committee on the Judiciary. I move, under all the circumstances, that it be recommitted for this day week.

Mr. PRESTON. I rise to offer a motion which will supersede that submitted by the gentleman. I move that the consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow at two o'clock.

Mr. HOUSTON. As this bill is the beginning of a system of building post offices and court-rooms all over the country, I think that it is best we should mature it. Therefore, in my opinion, it should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that it may be examined and discussed. If it be in order, I submit that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is upon the floor, and has submitted a motion that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow at two o'clock.

Mr. PRESTON. I concur fully in what the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has said. This is the beginning of a system of ownership of post offices and court-houses by the General Government. I am unwilling to vote for it at present, and therefore move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLINGMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. PRESTON. With the gentleman's permission, I will modify my motion. I desire that the bill shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, so that it may be open to amendment; and for that reason I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, in order to place us in a position to do so.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move that that motion be laid upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have the floor, and I do not yield to my friend from Pennsylvania.

I think, with the gentlemen all around me, that this is a matter of some importance, and it is well to let it go to the Committee on the Judiciary, as moved by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SAGE,] or to let it go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as moved by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. PRESTON.]

My object, however, in rising, is to prevent the unnecessary consumption of time by discussion, and I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. ROBBINS. What is the pending motion?

The SPEAKER. The question is first on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The Chair misunderstood me. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to move to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from New York moved to commit it to the Committee on the Judiciary. I moved the previous question on those motions, and not on the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider was, however, submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky, and it will be the first question to be voted on.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I obtained the floor regularly, and I take it for granted that I had a right to move the previous question on the pending motions. Well, the pending motions are to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and to commit it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is also pending.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I am willing that the previous question shall apply to them all, but especially to the motion to commit the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. To the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. CLINGMAN. The House can decide to which committee it shall be referred.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is sustained, the House will be brought first to vote upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading. If that is carried, then on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; and on that motion I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CAMPBELL and VAIL were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes not counted.

So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question now being on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, it was put, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has not exhausted itself yet.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Could the motion to commit be pending in different states? The motion was presented in a different shape; and the bill had been also ordered to a third reading.

The SPEAKER. The motion to commit was only changed in its direction.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me that a motion to reconsider would supersede that motion, and that it would require a new motion to change the direction.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen are disposed to be technical, perhaps that would be the law of the question. The motion to commit was certainly made by two gentlemen upon the floor.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, informing the House that it had passed a bill (S. No. 119,) entitled, an act to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; and asking the concurrence of the House therein.]

Mr. PRESTON. I understand that the previous question was to operate upon my motion to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The previous question, unless by unanimous consent, has now exhausted itself; that is, on the motion to commit the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which has under consideration bills of a similar character.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move the previous question.

Mr. PRESTON. I am perfectly willing to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon referring the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary; and the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to inquire if there is not a motion pending to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. There is no such motion. It must be apparent to gentlemen upon the floor, that, unless the House preserve better order, we shall not understand each other very well in our action here. The Chair stated distinctly that there was not a motion pending to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Ohio seems not to have understood what the Chair said in regard to the state of the question before the House. The gentleman from Ohio demanded the previous question after the motion to commit was made, and that is the only motion pending in regard to the bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understood that the gentleman from Kentucky moved to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and that the previous question would operate on that motion to commit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] first moved to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole, but he changed the motion to that of reconsidering the vote by which the bill had been ordered to a third reading; which became the motion of the gentleman under the rule, and, under the operation of the previous question, cut off the motion to commit.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to commit, and agreed to.

So the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WAREHOUSING SYSTEM.

Mr. FULLER. I rise to a question of reconsideration. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 39, reported back from the Committee on Commerce to this House with a recommendation that it do pass, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

This is a bill "to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes."

I desire upon the question, if it is in order, on the motion to reconsider, to explain the reasons why I make the motion. While I am doing this, if gentlemen will be kind enough to send to their document room and procure Senate bill No. 39, and miscellaneous document of the House No. 15, they will readily see the necessity there is for immediate action upon this bill. I gave notice when I reported the bill back from the Committee on Commerce that I would seek an early opportunity to bring up this question, and to ask the consideration of it by the House.

This bill passed the Senate at a former Congress. It was not acted on by the House for want of time. It passed the Senate again at this session. It has been considered by the Committee on Commerce. The bill has been carefully examined by the head of the Treasury; and I believe its provisions are in conformity with the views of that officer. The bill proposes to change the existing law on the subject of warehousing—the statute of 1846—in two particulars. First, it proposes to abolish the public warehouse, and to substitute in its stead the private bonded warehouse. Secondly, under the law of 1846, the warehouse act, the time for which goods may be stored in warehouses for reexportation is limited to three years, and for domestic consumption to one year. This bill proposes to place goods warehoused for domestic consumption on the same footing with goods warehoused for exportation. The other provisions of the bill are mainly to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to carry into effect the law, which provisions have been copied from the instructions heretofore given by the Treasury Department.

There is a further provision. The sixth section incorporated in the bill, by way of amendment, was recommended by the Committee on Commerce. It provides that goods once withdrawn from one warehouse for transhipment to another warehouse, shall be properly guarded against the commission of frauds upon the revenue; and upon that point, Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the Clerk read from his desk the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of January 28, and the letter of the collector of the port of New Orleans, under date of January 18, explanatory of the sixth section of the bill.

The following letters were accordingly read from the Clerk's desk:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, January 28, 1854.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter, this day received from S. W. Downs, collector of New Orleans, showing the inefficacy of the existing law to secure the possession by the Government, until the duties are paid, of goods transported in bond, and the importance of passing the bills in your hands on that subject. You will perceive that in that district alone there are now dirty transportation entries outstanding from three to six months, on which neither the duties have been paid nor the goods warehoused; and that, in some instances, the goods transported have been actually sold without delivery or payment to the officers of the customs at the place of destination. This requires the prompt remedy.

I am, very respectfully,
JAMES GUTHRIE,
Secretary of the Treasury.
Hon. T. J. D. FULLER,
Chairman Committee on Commerce,
House of Representatives.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW ORLEANS,
COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, January 18, 1854.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that there are at the present time as many as thirty transportation entries from New Orleans this port on which the parties have neither paid the duties nor rewarehoused the goods, though some of the entries bear date from three to six months old. I deem it my duty to call your attention to this fact, for the purpose of suggesting to you the adoption of some remedy against the delay now attending the canceling of the bonds given in the case of these goods, and to compel the parties either to pay the duties or rewarehouse them on their arrival at the port of destination before going into their possession.

Under the present regulations the goods are delivered to the parties withdrawing for transportation upon their executing the necessary bond; but as the collector at the port of destination has no knowledge of their arrival, the owner or consignee takes possession of them, and in most cases sells them before paying the duties.

Whenever the parties have been called upon by me for the payment of duties they have stated that they have been in possession of the goods for some time; and in some instances they have stated that they were not aware that the duties had to be paid here.

As it certainly could never have been intended by the Treasury Department that these goods should go into the possession of the consignees, and be liable to be disposed of before the duties are paid, I would most respectfully suggest, that hereafter goods in transportation should in all cases be produced and deposited with the collector of the port of destination, whether the intention of the consignee or owner is to pay the duties on arrival or rewarehouse; and in default of compliance with this regulation the goods be rendered liable to seizure, with the further penalty of the forfeiture of the bond.

Referring you to Treasury circular No. 34, dated 17th February, 1849, containing general instructions under this head, and soliciting your further instructions in the matter, I have the honor to be your most obedient servant,

S. W. DOWNS, Collector.

Hon. JAMES GUTHRIE,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington City.

Mr. FULLER. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of gentlemen, and particularly of my friends from the West, to a provision contained in this bill. Under the warehousing system, by the increased trade and commerce of the great West, where there are growing up large commercial cities, such as Cincinnati, St. Louis, and other important places in that valley, to which foreign goods are imported in great quantities for domestic consumption. Importations are made in large ships at the present time, with perhaps from a hundred to one hundred and fifty different consignees, by original importers, many of them merchants residing in those cities, who order their goods direct from Europe, rather than obtain them by second-hand purchases from New York importers. I say, under the warehousing system, when those ships arrive at Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, or Boston, the cargoes are taken out and distributed in the original packages to their several points of destination. This provision enables those original importers to put those goods—the amount of duties being first determined at the first accessible custom-house or port—under transportation bond for the ultimate place of destination.

The bill contains a further provision, that if such goods are destroyed while in transitu by the burning of the steamboat upon which they are being conveyed, or by running foul of a snag, or by any other casualty, and so do not complete the voyage, the owner shall not be subjected to the payment of the duties any more than he would be liable to the payment of duties if the goods were destroyed crossing the ocean. It does, therefore, protect the rights, and facilitate the importation of foreign merchandise, by the resident merchants of the great inland cities of the West.

That is one important provision contained in this bill. And, furthermore, it seems to be the desire—as it is very natural it should be—of my friends from that section of the country, that they should have custom-houses and warehouses in their large cities where imports may be stored. Why should they not enjoy the privilege of storing their goods in warehouses in these great cities as well as the importers in the Atlantic cities? Take, for instance, the article of hardware, which enters largely into the consumption of the people of the western country; large stocks are imported, and they must remain on hand for a long time before actual consumption. Sir, a warehouse in the city of St. Louis should occupy the same position as the warehouse of Sheffield, England, from whence goods may be taken on payment of duties to supply the wants of the country.

This bill is intended to perfect and carry out practically the principles of the great warehouse system, to give the merchants and importers at the great inland commercial points the benefits of the system, as was intended by Mr. Walker in his recommendations upon the subject in the year 1846. It will be recollected that it was originally intended that goods for domestic consumption should be placed upon the same footing as those for reexportation; but perhaps public opinion was not then quite up to this point.

Another reason why this bill should be passed is, that goods warehoused for domestic consumption cannot be withdrawn from the warehouse and shipped to California, if three or six months of the limited period has expired before the importer has opportunity for sale. Hence the owners of this merchandise would be deprived of the benefit of the warehouse system, because the time at which he must pay the duty upon them will arrive while they are being transported from one place to another.

Now, sir, if this question should not be finally acted upon this morning, I hope gentlemen will look a little into its details before it comes up again for consideration. Without consuming more time upon the subject, I will simply refer gentlemen to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, in document No. 57, 7th volume Executive Documents, 1848. And I beg also to refer them to another report upon the warehouse system, made by Mr. Simpson, from the Committee on Commerce, the 10th March, 1846. The whole subject, I humbly conceive, is expressed in these two documents.

This bill is intended only to perfect and carry out the details of the system then recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Committee on Commerce, and which in part went into effect under the act of 1846. In this act we have incorporated such provisions merely as time and experience and the proper safeguards of the Treasury seemed to demand. With these verbal explanations of the details of the bill, I will merely ask the House to reconsider the vote they have taken, with a view at a proper time of putting the bill upon its passage.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Maine is not very anxious to press this question to a vote this morning, I will move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FULLER. I would inquire of the Chair whether, if the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, this matter will come up as the first business in order during the morning hour to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. FULLER. Then I do not object to the motion which has been submitted by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ORR. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield me the floor until I can submit a motion to close debate in the Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman can offer his resolution as a privileged question.

On motion by Mr. LATHAM, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal of the petition and papers of G. W. Torrents from the files of the House, that they may be referred to a committee of the Senate.

The SPEAKER then, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Post Office Department, transmitting, in pursuance of a resolution of the House of the 20th instant, a statement of the several sums paid for post office blanks for the last four years, designating the quantity and kind of blanks, the price paid for each, the district for which required, and the time the contract expires.

Mr. HOUSTON. The chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, at whose instance the resolution referred to was adopted by the House, is not in his seat. Therefore, I move that the communication be laid upon the table, and order to be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. ORR. I move that the debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Indian appropriation bill be closed to-morrow at two o'clock, p. m., unless the committee shall sooner come to a conclusion on the same. I have modified the motion somewhat, because there is to be some debate on the merits of the bill. One gentleman has already obtained the floor to speak on a different subject; and that those who desire may speak to the bill proper, I have proposed two o'clock to-morrow. I trust the motion will be adopted.

Mr. PECKHAM. If the motion be adopted, will the Indian appropriation bill take precedence of the private bills to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will not, if the House go into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. PECKHAM. If it does cut off the consideration of the private bills, I shall most respectfully oppose it.

The SPEAKER. The motion, if adopted, will not control the order of business for Fridays and Saturdays. It would be inoperative if the House would not go into the Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 75, noes 56.

So the debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Indian appropriation bill was ordered to be closed to-morrow at two o'clock, p. m.

Mr. PHELPS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion to close debate was adopted, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question was then put on Mr. Jones's motion, and it was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN stated that when the committee last rose it had under consideration House bill No. 46, "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855," and that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] was entitled to the floor.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

Mr. MILLSON remarked that he intended to speak on the subject of the Nebraska bill. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING,] several days since, said there was a sort of civil insurrection in the North, not to secure, but to defeat the passage of the measure. This would indeed be strange if we were not accustomed to observe extraordinary mutations in politics in that quarter. There was nothing in this question which ought to alarm the apprehensions of the North. If he might paraphrase a remark of Fox on the Westminster scrutiny, he would say that this bill did not extend indulgence nor granted bare justice to the South.

We have, he said, before us two bills proposing to organize territorial governments for Nebraska and Kansas; the one reported by his honorable friend from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] and the other recently passed by the Senate. He preferred the bill reported in the House, but, at the same time, he was not disposed to go into ecstasies even over that. He, however, infinitely preferred it to the other. This bill will, probably, be the first considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, if we ever reach either of them, and a proposition made to amend by the insertion of the provision adopted by the Senate, which had become somewhat famous.

He then proceeded to discuss the effects of such an amendment engrafted on this bill.

This was not the first time an effort had been made to organize a territorial government for Nebraska. A bill was introduced for that purpose in 1848. The South stood in opposition to it; that was their natural and normal position in relation to all such territorial bills. He was unwilling to multiply free-soil or free States. We now have five territorial establishments, and it is expected we shall soon have seven. While, however, he was not so sectional or prejudiced as to object to the admission of a State because of its absence of a clause in its Constitution recognizing slavery—for he would vote for the admission of any State which should properly present itself—yet he was not willing to force a hot-bed system of States.

Now it was said the objection of the South was to be removed by repealing the Missouri restriction. This is designed to make the dose palatable. As to the assertion of the great principle of non-intervention as regards slavery in the Territories, this could not be said to be binding upon all so long as slavery is excluded from the Territories of Oregon, Washington, and Minnesota. However, the principle is to be applied to Nebraska and Kansas, because, from the tenor of the debates, it was not expected that slavery would go there.

If the Missouri restriction was right, retain it; if wrong, repeal it. There was no middle ground between right and wrong. Could he be assured that no government would be formed for Nebraska and Kansas for twenty years, he should vote against every bill for that purpose; but for reasons of a sectional and political character, he should be compelled now to give a vote on this question which he would not give under other circumstances.

He then stated his objections to that part of the Senate bill relating to slavery, arguing that injustice was done thereby to the South. There was, he contended, no features of resemblance between the two bills, notwithstanding the remarks to the contrary.

Mr. HUNT followed, and addressed the committee on the same subject. He said that in presenting his sentiments, he would speak in the spirit of a national representative, freely and independently, uninfluenced by sectional prejudices, unmoved by clamor, fear, or aught else, with a mind intent upon the point, and anxious to promote the best interests of the country, to secure its peace and harmony, and to perpetuate the Union of these States.

The bill proposed to repeal the Missouri compromise of 1820. He was opposed to this repeal, as a violation of good faith, as contrary to the true policy of the country, as engendering discord and dissension among the people of the different sections of the country, and putting to hazard the permanency of this blessed and glorious Union.

In order to develop his views clearly, he adverted to the history of the Missouri act of 1820, to prove that it was a compromise, a satisfactory settlement by those who had the authority to make it, for one national advancement, for the peace, the harmony, and the fraternity of our Union. He cited from the records of the Congress which passed this measure to show that it was advocated by leading members of the South, and that it received their support as a southern measure.

He called upon the Representatives from all sections, in the name of their country, to maintain the faith of their forefathers. He contended, that by repealing or suspending one compromise, they would open the door for the overthrow of every other compromise; and, looking to consequences, he feared for the overthrow of that most glorious compromise, the Constitution of the United States. He believed this would be the sentiment of the people upon due reflection; but, whatever might be their sentiment, it was his, and he declared it here without the least regard to any consequences merely personal to himself.

He maintained, in conclusion, that the compromise of 1850 did not repeal the compromise of 1820; and declared that he had no doubt whatever of the power of Congress to legislate for slavery outside of the States and within the Territories.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE replied that two speeches had been made to-day; the one of quasi hostility, the other of open hostility, to the Nebraska-Kansas bill. The gentleman who last addressed the committee [Mr. HUNT] came out openly and boldly, not striking at it under the garb of friendship.

The other day, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] moved that the Senate bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, he (Mr. B.) begged him to withdraw the motion; but the request was refused. He simply wished to warn the friends of the bill, who, from the previous course of the gentleman from New York, may have regarded him as a staunch friend of the measure, that, if they go with the gentleman, they will take part in its destruction. The movement was to kill the bill, and stab it as a pretended friend. Did not the gentleman know that if the bill went to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union they would be able no more to reach it, in the regular course of legislation, than if it had been covered by a mountain? A movement against the bill from an open and avowed enemy is to be respected; but when it comes from a gentleman of our own line, the committee should be apprised of it, and weigh the consequences. It was throwing around the friendly arm, and saying, "How is it with thee, my brother?" while with the other a stab is inflicted.

The vote against sending the Senate bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was a gallant vote. Ninety-five men, taken by surprise, by ambuscade, were defeated on that occasion by only ten votes.

He then proceeded to answer objections which had been made to the bill, saying in the course of his remarks, he did not believe that the repeal of the Missouri restriction would be a violation of public faith.

He said, in the course of his remarks: If you do not pass the bill, you will furnish fuel for political Abolitionists, and add to the flame of those salamanders who can only exist in the fire of strife. If you pass the bill, their occupation will be gone. You will have erected a barrier against which the rampant spirit of fanaticism will strive in vain, and receive its overthrow.

[The above speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. GROW next obtained the floor.

Mr. CUTTING. I do not rise, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield the floor to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GROW. If it is the understanding of the committee that I am to have the floor to-morrow morning, I have no sort of objection to yield it this evening.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I object to any such arrangement.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield the floor for a motion to rise?

Mr. GROW. I will yield it for that purpose. Mr. JONES. Then I move that the committee do now rise. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 46, entitled "A bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1855," and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And thereupon, at four o'clock, p. m., the House adjourned until to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 24, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is private bill day, and no business which is not of that character can be entertained.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to make a motion respecting the motion made by the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] yesterday, as to the appointment of a clerk to the Committee on Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT. That motion was disposed of yesterday.

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; a motion was made by the Senator from California, to reconsider the vote by which the committee was empowered to employ a clerk, but no action was taken upon the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, towards the close of the session yesterday I moved to reconsider the vote by which a clerk was allowed to the Committee on Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that question to be out of order this morning, unless unanimous consent be given.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I ask unanimous consent. There being no objection, the question was entertained.

The PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WELLER. I will, in a very few words, state the reasons why I made the motion. I saw no necessity for the appointment of a clerk to that committee. Ordinarily, of course, I do not choose to interfere with any of the standing committees of the Senate; whenever the chairman of one of these committees shall ask for the appointment of a clerk, taking it for granted that such a clerk is indispensable, I have generally voted for it. But, sir, with the little knowledge which I have of the Committee on Agriculture, I could not see any excuse or pretext for the appointment of a clerk.

It is well known to the Senate, I believe, that that committee has very little business to transact, and ordinarily it does not meet more than two or three times during a session of Congress. Now I am opposed to creating an office for no other purpose than to provide a place for some individual who may desire it. If the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will say that such an officer is necessary, that a clerk is indispensable for the management of the business of that committee, I will be the last Senator on this floor to interpose objection; but until I am satisfied that there is a necessity for the appointment of such an officer, I am unwilling to create such an office. I know, sir, it would be a thankless task to attempt to reform the abuses of this Senate. I should not only destroy what little influence I may have in this body, but I should receive the thanks of no one for attempting to correct the very many abuses that have crept into this body. Now, if the Senator from Rhode Island will say that this office is necessary, that a clerk is indispensable to the management of the onerous duties that are imposed upon that committee, I will at once withdraw the motion to reconsider, and vote for the appointment of a clerk.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, the resolution which I offered yesterday for the appointment of a clerk was not drawn in the usual form, asking for the appointment of a clerk during the session, but only during the time that he may be necessary for transacting the business of the committee. I have no personal favors to grant in selecting the clerk; none whatever. So far from wanting any clerk to assist me in my own concerns I have one at home in my family. It is for the interests of the committee, I think, that a clerk should be employed during the time they have before them propositions which have been referred to them and the consideration of which will require considerable labor with the Agricultural Department, which it cannot be expected that the members of the committee could attend to. The resolution is not drawn as resolutions usually are, for the appointment of a clerk during the session, but for the appointment of a temporary clerk, it may be for two or three weeks. I have worded the resolution particularly to be guarded on that point.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution can be read, if desired.

Mr. WELLER. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture be authorized to employ a clerk.

Mr. WELLER. That is without any limitation or restriction; and the legitimate inference will be that the Committee on Agriculture is authorized to employ a clerk during the remainder of the session. Now, if the honorable Senator from Rhode Island intended to restrict it in the manner to which he has adverted, he ought to have changed the phraseology of the resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. It was not my intention, when I offered the resolution, to have a clerk appointed until the end of the session. I never dreamed of such a thing; what I wished was, to have a clerk employed during the time that the committee may have under consideration the business which is now before them, and which demands that a clerk should be employed.

Mr. WELLER. Then if the resolution is to be adopted it ought certainly to conform in its phraseology to the views expressed by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it ought to be left somewhat to the committee to say how long they may employ a clerk.

Mr. WELLER. Then I suggest that the vote be taken on the motion to reconsider, and let that be agreed to, and then the resolution will be before the Senate, and its phraseology can be changed so as to confine the employment of a clerk to such time as that committee may think proper and necessary for the transaction of the public business.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection to those words being inserted in the resolution.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I was consulted as to the propriety of asking for the appointment of a clerk to that committee. I do not pretend to know whether or not it is very important that we should have a clerk; but, if I am not greatly mistaken, there are other committees who have had clerks allowed to them without opposition, having no more to do than the Committee on Agriculture; and this made me think that it was as proper, perhaps, that we should have a clerk as some other committees. A clerk is allowed to the Committee on Roads and Canals; but whether that committee ever do anything or not I am not very sure. I believe that a majority of this body hold that there is no constitutional power for them to exercise any portion of their duties, yet they have a clerk. The Committee on Retrenchment, also, have a clerk, and a permanent one, I believe. I really do not know how much they have for him to do. The chairman of our committee supposed that we might want a clerk for a short time, but we do not contemplate having one constantly. He had no idea of having one permanently.

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; that was not my intention.

Mr. WADE. We thought it would be convenient for us to have a clerk for a short time, and therefore I consented to the resolution. I cannot but think now that it is as proper, at least, that we should have a clerk as some of the other committees. I consider that we shall have fully as much for him to do as other committees for their clerks.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like this resolution much better if it proposed to give a clerk to each of the committees of this body. I think that each of the committees ought to have a clerk. A clerk may be necessary not only to perform the duties required of him by the committee, but members here have bills and other copying to do, and I think that the members of each committee have enough to do to keep one clerk employed, and profitably employed. Each Senator has that to do which can be done by a clerk, and I think there ought to be a clerk to whom every member of a committee might go when he wanted copying done which was necessary for the public service.

Mr. WADE. I have some recollection of a resolution being adopted, authorizing all the committees to employ a clerk; is it not so?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The resolution to which the Senator refers was confined to the committees having six members. I would like to have the limitation stricken out, so as to have the resolution general in its character.

Mr. MORTON. Being a member of this committee, I beg leave to submit an amendment which might meet the object of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDENT. No amendment is in order until the motion to reconsider is agreed to.

The question being taken, only eight members rose in the affirmative.

Mr. WELLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. WELLER. I expressed my willingness, a moment ago, to vote for the appointment of a clerk for this committee, so long as the public interest and the public business, in the estimation of the chairman of the committee, may require it. The Senate, by the division which has just been taken, has decided that they will allow that committee to employ a clerk, whether the public interest demands it or not. In other words, it seems to be the desire of certain Senators here, not far from me, that that committee should be allowed to employ a clerk merely for the purpose of giving him a compensation, without any reference whatever to the public interest. Now, I am opposed to the creation of sinecures. You have already employed more clerks for the standing committees of the Senate than the public interest, in my judgment, demands. Here is a proposition to give a clerk to the Committee on Agriculture, who, I believe, have not met more than three times for the last three years for the transaction of public business.

I said, sir, at the outset, that if the public business required the employment of this clerk, and the chairman of the committee would say so, I should vote for it. I repeat that; but if the only object is to employ a clerk to attend to the private business of the members, or if it is only to provide a place for some favorite, I am against it. Now, Mr. President, I repeat what I said before, that abuses enough have crawled into this Senate, which if they had attracted, as they should have attracted, the public attention, would have produced a denunciation of those who are engaged in them. I will not go one step beyond what the public interest demands. If the public interest demands the employment of a clerk, temporarily, I have said I shall go for it; but I am utterly opposed to the employment of a clerk by this committee, for the remainder of the session, at three or five dollars a day.

Mr. ALLEN. I expressed my views fully, I believe, before I stated that it was not necessary to employ a clerk during the remainder of the session. I had no idea of such a thing. I do not want this clerk for my private business; for, as I stated before, I have a gentleman in my family who does my writing for me, and has done for several years.

Mr. ADAMS. On the division, I did not vote for the reconsideration for the reason that I take it for granted, that under this resolution, it being in the usual form, the committee will employ a clerk no longer than the public interest requires it. To put a restriction in the resolution unusual and unlike other resolutions for the same purpose I thought unnecessary. I agree with my friend from California, as to the propriety of employing no more persons than are necessary; but I take it for granted that the committee, whenever there is no public necessity for the services of a clerk, will discontinue his services. These are my reasons for not voting for the reconsideration.

Mr. ALLEN. The committee will certainly discharge the clerk as soon as the business which requires his services is performed. I would not ask it as a favor. As I stated before, any private business which I need performed I have made provision for myself. I only ask for this because I think the public business requires it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire to inquire whether it is necessary to reconsider the resolution in order to amend it?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 13, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Butler, Clayton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hunter, Mason, Rusk, Slidell, and Weller—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Clay, Douglas, Fish, Hamlin, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Norris, Pettit, Pratt, Sumner, Wade, Walker, Williams, and Wright—19.

So the motion was not agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MASON. I understand it requires the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of any other business than that of bills upon the Private Calendar. I deem it my duty, notwithstanding, to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Executive business, and therefore make the motion accordingly. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. HUNTER. I desire to state to the Senate that the Committee on Finance have reported the deficiency bill, and we wish to have it considered. I am not disposed to interfere with the Private Calendar to-day, provided we agree to sit to-morrow. If we sit to-morrow we can then dispose of the bill, and not interfere with the private business to-day. I hope that will be the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. PRATT. It is, personally, wholly immaterial to me whether the discussion which was commenced last Friday be continued now or not; but I submit to the Senate that we should be saving time by having the question which is before the Senate decided. There are a number of claims dependent upon the decision of the Senate in regard to the one now being discussed, and I think it really will save time to have it disposed of to-day. I promise the Senate that I shall not occupy anything like the time which my learned friend from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] thought it necessary to occupy on Friday last in arguing the question on the other side. I would prefer, although it is personally indifferent to me, and think it better for the business of the Senate, that we should proceed with the discussion of this question to-day.

Mr. HUNTER. I made the remarks which I submitted, not for the purpose of interposing any difficulty in the way either of the private claims or of the treaty, but to obtain the good offices of the gentleman to defeat a motion to adjourn over, if one be made.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Executive business. Is there objection?

Objection was made.

The PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. McKean, its Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled joint resolution and bill:

A joint resolution relative to bids for provisions, clothing, and small-stores for the use of the Navy;

A bill for the relief of settlers on lands reserved for railroad purposes;

Which then received the signature of the President pro tempore.

A subsequent message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. McKean, its Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had concurred in the bill from the Senate for the relief of George G. Bishop and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased; also, in the bill from the Senate to extend the warehousing system, by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes, with amendments.

On the motion of Mr. HUNTER, the Senate concurred in the amendments of the House to the warehousing bill.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. CLAYTON presented two petitions of citizens of Wilmington and its vicinity, Delaware, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of inhabitants of Westminister, Massachusetts, praying a reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

HODGES AND LANSDALE, AND JOHNSON.

The Senate then, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of Hodges & Lansdale, and the legal representatives of Rinaldo Johnson and of Ann E. Johnson, deceased.

Mr. PRATT. I listened, Mr. President, on Friday last, to use the parliamentary phrase, "with profound attention" to the argument of my distinguished friend from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD]; and I tell the truth, sir, when I say, that his speech contained less than is usual, even in this body, of that description of argument denominated the ad captandum, which is always objectionable, and certainly always out of place here.

My friend stated his propositions broadly and fairly; and I shall endeavor, very briefly, to attempt to show that the principles for which he contended are either untenable or inapplicable to the case now before the Senate. He has frankly stated to the Senate the manner in which he first became acquainted with the subject of this claim, and of the class of claims, to which this belongs; and he has shown the manner in which his feelings became interested in their defeat. He says that when he first came here, he was appointed a member of the Committee of Claims, and as such, this class of claims, growing out of the spoliation committed by the British during the war of 1812, was referred to him; that he examined them thoroughly, that he considered himself as sitting in chancery, as a judge in equity; and having come to adverse conclusions in regard to them, he reported his conclusions to the committee. The committee did not sustain his views; but, on the contrary, reported the bill which is now upon your table; which bill, together with others of the same class, have been heretofore passed by the Senate. The views, therefore, entertained by the Senator were in the first place not accorded with by the committee; and the views of the committee have been sanctioned by the Senate.

Again: My friend says that this is a judicial question. It is true, Mr. President, that it is; and I think that we are sitting here as a quasi appellate tribunal. Under the rules of the body all claims of this character are referred to the appropriate committee, and it becomes their duty to examine the facts, draw deductions of law from these facts, and to report the facts to the Senate. You are aware Mr. President, and every Senator here is fully aware, that whenever these reports are adverse to the claimants there is no discussion, but that the adverse report is universally concurred in. Now, sitting as we do here, in a judicial capacity, I submit to the Senate that every member of the body, unless he chooses to examine for himself individually the claim, is bound to vote with the committee, is bound to concur in the facts as stated by the committee, and in the deductions of law drawn in regard to them. I think, at least, that those who are to judge in reference to the relative claims of these parties, and the obligations of the Government, should feel themselves obliged, unless they intend to support the report of the committee, and vote for the payment of the claims by the Government which they represent, to listen to the argument which can be adduced in support of them.

Before I proceed to discuss the principle upon which the committee have vested the right of these parties to be paid by the Federal Government, I propose to relieve the case of such portions—I admit they are very few—of the speech of my honorable friend, which I think may come properly within that character of argument upon which I have animadverted, and to which his argument is so little subject.

The bill which is now under consideration, Mr. President, is for the payment of tobacco taken from the warehouse at Nottingham, and of tobacco burnt in the warehouse at Magruder's Ferry. It applies exclusively to the tobacco taken from the one, and the tobacco burnt in the other. Now, a very considerable portion of the speech of my friend was taken up in the attempt to show that there was no obligation to pay for tobacco taken or destroyed at Cedar Point. I will read from his remarks, for I do not wish to misrepresent his argument. He says:

"The report then goes on to speak of the testimony as to Cedar Point; and there the testimony of Mr. Jenifer, a former member of Congress, is clear and explicit to show that the British were taking the tobacco out of the warehouses to carry it off, when the militia went down to defend them, and the British burnt the warehouses in order to prevent their being defended by the militia. That is the state of the case."

And then he goes on to read from the report, to show, that under such state of facts there is no obligation to pay. I submit to the candor of my friend, whether it was fair to argue in reference to the obligation of this Government to pay for tobacco taken from the warehouse at Nottingham, and the tobacco burnt at Magruder's Ferry, by a statement in reference to the tobacco at Cedar Point, which is not included in this bill, or, so far as I am aware, in any bill which has been reported from the Committee of Claims?

In the next place, the Senator from Delaware refers to the evidence of the loss in this case. He says:

"The evidence of loss in this case is founded on what are called tobacco notes. They were certificates issued by the inspector of the warehouse, stating that so many hogsheads of tobacco, with certain numbers and marks, had been deposited there, to be delivered to the depositor, 'or his order,' and some of them are 'to bearer.' About one half the notes are 'to bearer,' and the other half 'to order.' Now, as a legal proposition, I submit to any gentleman in this body, whether, when an instrument of that kind, payable to A, B, or order, is presented as evidence of property, you can, if the instrument be undorsed, justly make it a ground of relief to a party who merely comes forward as the holder, without any evidence of a transfer of title?"

Now, Mr. President, my friend certainly must have omitted to read the bill upon which the Senate are required to vote, or he could not have made as an objection to it the fact which he has stated and the argument which he has made, predicated upon those facts in the part of his speech which I have just read. The bill is for the relief of Hodges & Lansdale, and of the legal representatives of Rinaldo Johnson, and of Ann E. Johnson, deceased. It provides:

"That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury shall audit the claims of Hodges & Lansdale, and of the legal representatives of Rinaldo Johnson, and of Ann E. Johnson, for tobacco destroyed by the British in 1814, at the warehouses at Nottingham and Magruder's Ferry, in Prince George's county, Maryland, and from such competent proof as may be exhibited to them, within six months after the passage of this act, ascertain the quantity and value of their tobacco so destroyed, and that the amount so ascertained shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the said Hodges & Lansdale, and the legal representatives of Rinaldo Johnson, and of Ann E. Johnson, deceased."

So that it is to pay those individuals for tobacco actually belonging to them at the two warehouses designated in the bill. Now, Mr. President, my friend will admit that if this bill passes, when the parties go to the Treasury Department for the purpose of having their accounts adjusted, they will be obliged to show that they are entitled to the tobacco notes which they bring forward as the evidence of their ownership of the tobacco; and if any note is payable to order not indorsed, they cannot recover from the Government, under this bill, that tobacco; so that this argument has no application to the facts of the case before the Senate.

The third and last objection of my honorable friend, which, I respectfully submit, has nothing to do with the merits of the case, was made in these words.

"Again, there is another difficulty as to all these cases. In one, the first presentation of the claim was in 1848, and the other in 1850, and no excuse whatever is given for their non presentation at an earlier day; and the parties represent themselves as the holders of these notes, without giving any evidence of how they obtained them. I have examined all these tobacco notes in this case, and I find that not one of them was ever issued to Hodges & Lansdale. They were issued to A, B, and C, and a great variety of names, and they have since come into the possession of these parties—whether for their full value, or upon the chances of speculation, it is impossible for me to say. All I know is, that at the time of its destruction, according to any evidence before the Senate, the property was not theirs."

Sir, if this property was properly destroyed by the enemy because of its use by officers of the Federal Government, and if a consequent obligation upon the part of the Government to pay for it was created, it cannot matter to whom the tobacco belonged at the time it was so used by this Government, and at the time it was destroyed by the troops of the Government of Great Britain. But, in point of fact, the tobacco did, at the time it was taken and destroyed, belong to these parties. Hodges & Lansdale were the largest tobacco buyers within the limits of Maryland. Public warehouses were established by law, in which the tobacco was deposited. The inspectors of the warehouses were appointed by the State Executive; and when a tobacco hoghead was inspected, a note was delivered to the owner of the hoghead. When he sold the tobacco, he passed the right to it by the transfer of the note. The tobacco which was deposited at these warehouses belonged, in point of fact, to these merchants at the period at which it was used by our forces, and destroyed by the enemy.

In an argument such as my friend has made on this occasion, it was a little out of place, I think, to draw into the discussion the idea that you are not to pay these people because they were speculators; because they have not proved that they were the owners of the property at the time it was destroyed. It is out of place, I think, that such a consideration should be advanced in connection with the otherwise very able argument which has been adduced by the honorable Senator.

I have shown, I think, by the report of the committee, the facts of the case; and I submit again, that the facts reported by them must be believed by the Senate, unless each Senator, as a judge, examines for himself and ascertains that they are not correctly stated by the committee. I therefore pass from that portion of the speech of my honorable friend, which I think it would have been better had not to have been made by him. Now allow me to ask the attention of at least such Senators as listened to the honorable gentleman on last Friday, in justice to these parties, to listen to the facts which are ascertained to exist in this case, by the committee of the Senate. After stating the occupancy of the Chesapeake and its tributary, the Patuxent river, by the enemy during the summer of 1814, and after stating that the Patuxent was so occupied until after the burning of the Capitol, the committee go on to say:

"It appears, from the evidence, that two public warehouses had been erected many years before this period, upon the margin of the Patuxent, for the inspection and deposit of the tobacco grown by the citizens of Prince George's county—one at the village of Nottingham, the other at Magruder's Ferry; that these houses were in 1814 filled with hogsheads of tobacco, the property of the planters of that county, or of merchants who had purchased it for shipment; and that the tobacco for which remuneration is now claimed by the petitioner, R. Johnson, had been deposited in the warehouse at Magruder's Ferry, and that the tobacco for which payment is asked by Hodges & Lansdale was deposited in the warehouse at Nottingham. The evidence conclusively establishes the fact that the warehouse at Magruder's Ferry was burned by the British, with all the tobacco it contained, and that all the tobacco in the warehouse at Nottingham was either taken away or burned by the enemy.

"In investigating the right of the petitioners to indemnity from the Federal Government, your committee at once perceive that the petitioners could never have claimed indemnity under the general laws of 1816 and 1817, because the relief designed to be afforded by those acts expressly and exclusively applied to injuries to real property. The act of 1816 provides, 'that any person who, in the time aforesaid, has sustained damages by the destruction of his or her house or building by the enemy, while the same was occupied as a military deposit under the authority of an officer or agent of the United States, shall be allowed and paid the amount of such damage, provided it shall appear that such occupation was the cause of its destruction.'

"Your committee have been unable to recognize the force or propriety of the distinction which makes the United States liable for real property destroyed by the enemy, and which exempts the Government from liability for personal property destroyed under the same circumstances; they are unable to appreciate the justice of a rule which makes the Government liable for a house burned by the enemy, and exempts it from liability for the personal property burned in the house."

Now comes the rule which the committee lay down:

"Your committee are of opinion that the United States should be held liable to reimburse her citizens, whenever private property has been (in accordance with the usages of civilized warfare) destroyed by a public enemy, because of its use for military purposes by the authority of an officer or agent of the Government."

"Your committee believe that the facts, to which they will now very briefly advert, fully establish the right of the petitioners to relief, under the principle here laid down."

The committee then go on to state the facts in reference to the tobacco burnt at Magruder's Ferry. The troops of the United States were stationed behind the warehouse, and it was made a fort from which a considerable engagement was had between the American and the British forces. The American forces continued the battle successfully until their ammunition was exhausted, when they were obliged to retreat; and the enemy, upon their retreat, approached the house and burnt it with the tobacco. In regard to the tobacco at Nottingham, the committee report the fact that, by order of the commanding officer of the American forces, in June, 1814, the tobacco at that warehouse was rolled out, and a breastwork made of it for the protection of our soldiers; that the American cannon were planted behind this breastwork of tobacco; and the enemy were fought and repulsed; and that on their retreat from Washington, in August, 1814, they took away or destroyed the tobacco, because it had been so used. These, sir, are the principles and facts upon which the committee rely for the obligation of the Federal Government to pay these claims.

Now, sir, in what does the committee differ from the honorable Senator from Delaware? The principle announced by him is, that you should be governed exclusively by the laws of 1816 and 1817; that there is no principle of international law, no principle of right or justice, which should make a Government answerable, under any circumstances, for personal property destroyed by a public enemy. That is the first principle which he announces. He differs from the committee in this, that he does not believe personal property can have impressed upon it a character which would justify an enemy in destroying it, or which would oblige the Government of the citizen whose property was destroyed, to pay for it. Afterwards he qualified that proposition, upon an inquiry of the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHERIDAN.] That Senator asked him: "If the American forces had occupied the house of a citizen, who had his furniture in the house, and after a battle fought from the house, the enemy had taken and burned it, with the furniture, whether the Government would not be equally bound to pay for the furniture as for the house?"

The honorable Senator from Delaware said no; that he could not conceive of a case in which the Federal Government would be bound to pay for personal property, unless the troops of the United States had so taken possession of it as to deprive the owner of the power of removal. His principle, therefore, is this: If an enemy land upon our shores, and it is necessary for the protection of our forces, for their comfort, or their convenience, that they should take possession of private property for public use, and they do take possession of my house, from which they fight the enemy, he admits the right of the enemy in such a case to burn the house; but he says that my personal property in that house which you have occupied is not to be paid for unless I can prove that you forbade me to take it away, and prevented me from taking it away.

My friend stated, further—and I admit I was somewhat surprised at it—that he could find no case in which this Government or the Congress of the United States had recognized the principle that there was an obligation to pay, under any circumstances, for personal property destroyed by an enemy, except, under the qualification which he laid down, where our troops had taken possession of it in such a manner as to prevent its removal from houses occupied by them. He referred to but two cases having any bearing upon the question in contest between us, to which I shall presently advert. The proposition of the committee is, that this Government is bound to pay these claims, provided you are convinced, from the facts in evidence, that the personal property of the claimants was used for military purposes by the order of an officer of this Government, and that it was destroyed in consequence of that use. The Senator says his distinction is, that this liability does not exist unless the parties can further show that they were prevented, after this use, from taking the property away, beyond the reach of the enemy. He contends that there is no case to be found in the legislative history of the country which goes against the principle which he has announced. The first case to which he referred was that of Mrs. Swan.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator; but I wish to inform him that that is not my statement. He misapprehends me. I said there was no case which recognized the principle for which he contends. I admitted that, in the application of the principle of relief, there were special laws which I had no doubt I should deem a misapplication of it.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator said in his speech:

"The only ground on which a claim can be made by a citizen on his own Government for remuneration, arising out of the acts of an enemy during a war, is that the Government has imparted to the property by its act a character which justifies its destruction under the rules and usages of warfare recognized by civilized nations. The honorable committee seem to think that this character can be imparted to personal property. I say it cannot."

There is his principle. He afterwards says:

"I come now to the facts of this case. The Senator will find, I think, that compensation for personal property to a party, in consequence of its destruction by the enemy, where it has not been taken possession of by the Government, has in no instance been made. I will not say that, in the multiplicity of special laws which have been passed, the principle of the laws of 1816 and 1817 may not have been misapplied, and that there may not have been some cases in which personal property destroyed has been directed to be paid for by special law, where the correct application of the true principle of relief may well be questioned."

He first states that where personal property has not been taken possession of by the Government, it has not been paid for in any case; and then qualifies the assertion in the manner in which I have read. The first case to which he referred was that of Mrs. Swan, which was for tobacco deposited in one of those warehouses, I do not know which.

Mr. BAYARD. In both.

Mr. PRATT. I wish only to read a short extract from the report in that case, on which he commented, and mainly relied for the support of his position:

"The claim appears to be unsupported by any testimony of a nature to constitute a legal demand upon the Treasury. If the claim had been fully proved—which is, in a word, that the British had destroyed (in the last war) five hogsheads of tobacco belonging to the petitioner—its payment would be at war with the provisions of the acts of 1816 and 1825, and with the precedents established at various times by Congress. Congress has steadily refused to enlarge the provisions of those acts, so as to take in claims for indemnity for destruction of personal property by the public enemy."

So that the committee here go the full length of the Senator from Delaware, that this Government has always refused to extend the principles of the acts of 1816, and 1817, and 1825, so as to make the principle applicable to personal property; and the author of this report and my friend from Delaware both say that the precedents show that the Government has never gone beyond the principles of the acts of 1816 and 1817. The whole argument of the committee, therefore, in this case of Swan, in reference to the tobacco deposited in these warehouses, and destroyed at the time, is what? That there was no legal claim, that there was no claim under the acts of 1816 and 1817, and that the precedents of the Government do not show that we have heretofore gone beyond these acts. What does that amount to? The acts of 1816 and 1817 applied exclusively to real estate, and they were so qualified even in reference to real estate, as to do manifest injustice to the citizens of this country. I can readily imagine that a Government, situated as ours was in 1816, directly after coming out of the war with Great Britain, with her Treasury exhausted, with no credit, when she was borrowing money and receiving but fifty or sixty cents in the dollar, might be less disposed to extend justice as fully as it ought to do in paying the indemnity due to its citizens; and that the same Government, when it became prosperous, as we now are, would be willing to pay its just debts. We have arrived at a time when we find that the public domain of the country is not necessary for the Treasury, but is used in building up—I will not say improperly—a network of internal improvements throughout the country, when we find the Treasury so full that we are trying to exhaust it by every possible means. I say there is a distinction to be drawn between what would be deemed justice on the part of a Government situated as ours was in 1816, and as it is now.

My honorable friend from South Carolina [Mr. EVANS] yesterday had a bill before the Senate to provide for the claims of the officers of the revolutionary army. Suppose our fathers, immediately after the revolutionary war, were in the position which we now occupy, would there have been a representative who would hesitate to support the bill introduced by that honorable Senator? Would there then have been a representative of the people in either branch of the National Legislature who would have dared to refuse to give to the officers of the Revolution what they had lost by receiving their pay in depreciated currency, if the Government at that time, when these claims could be ascertained, had the capacity to pay them?

Then, sir, I say that the restrictions which were thrown around the laws of 1816 and 1817, if they were necessary in view of the inability of the Government at that time, are not necessary now; and if I can show that, according to equity, justice, fairness, and honor, this Government is bound to pay its citizens, I care not whether I can satisfy Senators that it is bound to pay under the law of 1816 or 1817, or any other law; and I am sure that every Senator who will be convinced that, according to equity and justice, the Government owes this money, will be at the same time convinced of the obligation to pay it, notwithstanding those acts. What was the act of 1816? The ninth section of that act provided:

"That any person who in the time aforesaid has sustained damage by the destruction of his or her house or building by the enemy, while the same was occupied as a military deposit under the authority of an officer or agent of the United States, shall be allowed and paid the amount of such damage: Provided, It shall appear that such occupation was the cause of its destruction."

Now what was to concur here in order to create the obligation? There must be the occupation for military purposes by order of an officer of the United States; but besides that, the actual destruction of the property whilst it was so occupied. How often would it occur that the citizen whose property, according to the usages of civilized warfare, was properly destroyed by the enemy, could show that the destruction took place whilst it was occupied by our forces? Where is the distinction between the obligation to pay for property destroyed whilst it was occupied, and the obligation to pay for property which was occupied so as to make it national, so as to confer the right upon the enemy to destroy it? Where is the difference as to the rights of the individual, whether the property was destroyed whilst it was occupied, or in consequence of the occupation? But, again, sir, the proper accounting officers, who had the consideration of the act of 1816, construed even that more broadly than our Government was willing to agree to; and Mr. Madison, by proclamation, suspended the operation of the act of 1816 until the next meeting of Congress, when the act of 1817, supplementary to that of 1816, still more restrictive than the former, was passed.

The report in Swan's case then is, that under these acts of 1816 and 1817, the party had no legal claim for the destruction of her property. Why, sir, the very object of persons coming to Congress for relief is because they have no legal claim. If they had a legal claim, they would go, under the laws of the land, to the Treasury Department, and receive payment for their losses, and there would be no necessity for them to come before Congress from year to year, with the delay which has been incident to every claim of this character, for the purpose of being paid. All these private bills are predicated upon the assumed necessary hypothesis that no legal claim exists. So much for Swan's case.

The only other case to which my learned friend has referred in support of the position assumed by him is the case of Catlett. My friend did not read the report in that case, which stated the principle upon which the Committee on Claims of the Senate asked the Congress of the United States to pass in favor of the claim; but he read from the very able report of the then Second Auditor, Mr. Hagner, adverse to the allowance of the claim, under a special act of Congress, passed for the relief of Mr. Catlett. I will show that this report, which my friend omitted to read, recognizes the principle of the committee in this case, and is identical with it, and that it places that claim upon the same principle that the committee in this case base the obligation of the Government to pay for this tobacco. Then I have, not only by the report in this case, but by the report of the committee in 1835, a recognition, not merely of the principle, but also of the facts out of which grow this obligation sought to be enforced to-day. In that report on the case of Mr. Catlett, the committee say:

"In regard to the chief bulk of his losses, the committee can perceive no safe principle on which they can rest in recommending an allowance. The utmost extent to which the Government can with safety go, in remunerating losses to individuals who have been subjected to injury by the fortunes of war, is, to protect them against its own act and its consequences. Thus, if a house be occupied by the troops of the country for military operations, it thereby is placed on the footing of any other military position, and may be justifiably destroyed by the enemy. So, if private property is used to assist in the defense of the country, or in the prosecution of offensive military operations, it becomes as liable to be destroyed by the enemy as any part of the material of the army; and, if destroyed, the Government is fairly answerable for its value. Keeping this principle in view, the committee can find no sufficient authority to recommend the payment of by far the largest portion of the claim set up by the petitioner. But there are portions of the claim which the committee consider as falling under the principle thus laid down. The petitioner had in store, at Magruder's warehouse, on the Patuxent river, one hundred and fifteen hogheads of tobacco, which, along with the warehouse, appears to have been burnt by the British in June, 1814. He had, also, a small number of hogheads in store at Cedar Point warehouse, which was destroyed in the same way.

"The proof is satisfactory to show that very smart conflicts, between detachments of the enemy and Maryland troops, occurred at both these places; and that at Nottingham warehouse, seven miles distant from Magruder's, where the petitioner had in store one hundred and forty-nine hogheads of tobacco, a breastwork was made of the tobacco for the defense of the American troops. While at Magruder's and Cedar Point, the American troops found shelter under the warehouses, and from thence continued to fire on the enemy until their ammunition was expended. It is also on proof that other warehouses, equally exposed, were left unburned, in consequence, as is believed, of the absence of all military operations in their immediate neighborhood by the troops of the United States. The destruction of the warehouses at Magruder's and Cedar Point, with their contents, and the abduction of the tobacco from Nottingham, seems fairly to be traceable to the principle laid down by the committee; and to this extent they report a bill for his relief."

Thus, Mr. President, you find that, in Catlett's case, the committee do not base the right to relief upon any principle growing out of the acts of 1816 and 1817, but they base it upon the principle that this Government is responsible for its acts and for the consequences of its acts; and that, whenever by its acts, or in consequence of its acts, the property of an individual citizen has been destroyed, the Government is liable to pay for the property so destroyed. That is the principle; but there is a curious fact connected with this case which my friend also omitted to state. The bill, in that case, was reported identically in the language of the one now on the table, that the accounting officers of the Treasury should settle the account upon principles of equity and justice, and pay accordingly. The bill was amended in the Senate by striking out the words "according to the principles of equity and justice," and inserting "in accordance with the acts of 1816 and 1817," so that the bill as passed was not in accordance with the report of the committee. The bill reported by the committee in conformity with the principles laid down by them, was amended, and that amendment placed the right of Mr. Catlett to relief, not upon his being entitled to it in equity and justice, but under the principles of the acts of 1816 and 1817. The very able argument of the then Auditor, Mr. Hagner, which showed his great independence and his entire unwillingness to be subservient to Executive dictation, was not an argument to show that the claim ought not to be paid. He sets out the fact that the acts of 1816 and 1817 had always been construed strictly by the Government; that Mr. Madison had issued his proclamation because the officer having power to construe the first act, that of 1816, had given a wider construction to it than he thought the financial position of the Government would justify; that the Senate, upon the report in Catlett's case, had amended the bill by striking out the provision for a settlement of the claim upon principles of equity and justice, and had inserted a provision requiring it to be settled upon the principles of the acts of 1816 and 1817; and his whole argument is intended to show, not that the claimant was not entitled to be paid upon the principles of justice and equity, but that he should not be paid under the principles of the acts of 1816 and 1817. In opposition to this report of the Auditor, President Tyler, who, when a member of the Senate, had reported the bill to which I have referred, directed the account of Catlett to be made out, and to be paid. The question was submitted to the then Attorney General, Mr. Crittenden, who gave a short opinion, that, under the law as passed, which authorized Catlett's payment only upon such evidence as would establish his claim under the principles of the acts of 1816 and 1817, his claim could be allowed, even under those acts and the evidence which he had adduced.

I agree with the Auditor, that under the acts of 1816 and 1817, Mr. Catlett could not properly be paid, because those acts referred to houses alone, and they were to be paid for only when they were destroyed whilst in the actual occupancy of the Government for military purposes. I cannot see how a law, which contained a provision that the payment should be made when the property was destroyed whilst in the occupancy of the Government, would justify payment for tobacco which was destroyed a month after it had been used for military purposes by the Government.

I submit then, Mr. President, that the report in the case of Swan, where the committee felt themselves obliged to be governed by the principle contained in this report of Mr. Hagner, and where they felt themselves obliged to be governed by the theory started by my distinguished friend, that the Government cannot impart to personal property such a character as would give the enemy the right to destroy it, and as would create a consequent obligation on the part of the Government to pay, shows, and that the very able report of Mr. Hagner also goes to show, that if the bill originally reported in Catlett's case had passed the Senate without amendment, his claim would have been paid without difficulty. Mr. Hagner did not attempt to show that the evidence did not establish a user by the Government of the property for military purposes; but his whole argument was designed to show that the President was wrong in ordering Catlett to be paid, because the law required him to be paid upon the principles of the acts of 1816 and 1817, and the evidence did not bring his claim within those principles. He sets out the testimony. He states that a breastwork was made of the tobacco at Nottingham, and that the battle was fought behind the tobacco. He states that at Magruder's Ferry our forces were repulsed, and the enemy, on the very occasion, approached and burned down the warehouse with the tobacco in it.

I come now, Mr. President, to a class of cases in which I can show, I think, that my honorable friend is entirely wrong in supposing that there is no instance where we have paid for personal property destroyed by an enemy, except where that personal property was taken possession of by our forces, or the owner was prevented by our forces from removing it. As I have stated, the report in Catlett's case evinces the opposite principle. The next case to which I ask the attention of the Senate is that of Colonel James F. Sothoron. He lived upon the margin of this same Patuxent river, in St. Mary's county, Maryland. The house was occupied by our forces, and they also used for some purposes his barn, in which was deposited tobacco. The American forces were driven from the house, and the British destroyed it, or at least injured it, and burnt down the barn with the tobacco in it. Now, I invite attention to a fact in that case variant from the circumstances in the present case, and making this a stronger one than that. Colonel Sothoron petitioned Congress to pay him for the houses destroyed by the enemy. The report was in favor of paying for the houses, and a bill was passed, and he was paid for them. This was in 1836. Then in 1847 he petitioned Congress to be paid for the tobacco which was stored in his warehouse, and which was destroyed in consequence of its being burned. I find that Mr. Johnson, of Maryland, on the 6th of February, 1847, made a report in regard to that case. In that report the committee state:

"As the facts here set forth apply as well to the loss of the personal, as well as of the real estate of the claimant, it became a subject of inquiry with your committee, why indemnity had been allowed for one, and not for the other, and whether the former application had included the personal property. On this point it is in evidence, (see the deposition of W. B. Scott, the agent for the former claim herewith filed, that no claim was then made for indemnity for personal property, in consequence of the advice of a Senator from Maryland, and a Senator from Delaware, who deemed it best to limit the application to the buildings which came clearly within the provisions of the act of 1816. It is impossible, as your committee think, to draw a distinction in equity between the loss of houses and of personal property which they may contain, and they believe that if the petitioner was entitled, as in their opinion he certainly was, to remuneration in the one case, he is so in the other.

The committee reported a bill for his relief, but it did not pass at that session. In 1848 Mr. Bradbury, from the Committee of Claims, made a favorable report upon the same claim. In that report the committee say:

"It is difficult to draw a distinction, in equity, between a claim for loss of buildings and of the personal property they contain; and as the petitioner was entitled, according to the evidence, to remuneration for the loss of the former, he is, as we believe, for that of the latter.

The bill for his relief was then passed by both Houses of Congress, and became a law. My friend from Delaware will admit that here is a distinct avowal on the part of the committee of the Senate, with the action of both branches of Congress corresponding with it, in opposition to the principle which he avows. It had never, as Mr. Reverdy Johnson says in his report, entered into his imagination that there could be, in equity or justice, a distinction drawn between real and personal property; and Mr. Bradbury, in his subsequent report on the same case, makes the same statement.

At the first session of the Seventeenth Congress, William Henderson, of Virginia, presented a claim for the payment of personal property, which was destroyed, with his house, during the war. The committee at that session reported adversely to the allowance of the claim; but both branches of Congress overruled the adverse report, and granted relief to Mr. Henderson, by the passage of a bill paying him as well for the personal as the real property.

The next case to which I would refer on this head is that of Gad Humphreys, which was a Florida case. There the claimant was the owner of certain real property which was taken possession of by our forces for the purpose of defense against the Indians. He was also the owner of twenty-six negroes. It appeared from the evidence, that the day before the occupation of his property he had been offered $650 for each of these negroes. Whilst our forces occupied his house as a fort, it was inconvenient, on account of want of room, that the negroes should remain within its limits, and they went to some outhouses to sleep. An attack was made by the Indians on the house, and the negroes outside of the house were taken away. This Florida claimant came to Congress asking to be paid for the house and for the negroes. On the 22d of May, 1838, Mr. Hubbard, from the Committee on Claims, reported:

"It is furthermore satisfactorily proven that on the night of the 20th June, 1836, during an attack on the fort by a large body of Indians, there were taken and captured from the premises of the petitioner, situated near to and under the guns of the fort, twenty-eight negroes, the property of said petitioner, for which said petitioner had been offered, a few days before their capture, $650 each; and that the capture was occasioned by the necessary occupancy of the houses of said petitioner within the fort by the troops, and the consequent exposure of the negroes, who were compelled to occupy the houses of the petitioner without the fortifications."

"The committee come to the conclusion, that inasmuch as the property of the petitioner was taken and occupied by the troops of the United States as a military post, and, on its abandonment by said troops, destroyed by order of the commander, that the petitioner is therefore entitled to remuneration."

The bill for the relief of Mr. Humphreys did not pass at that session; but I find that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] made a report upon the same case on the 28th of April 1848, from the Senate Committee on Claims, in which he states:

"It further appears that a portion of said property was captured by said Indians, owing to its being exposed in consequence of the occupation of his building by United States troops."

He reported a bill which was passed, paying this man from Florida for his servants, because the United States had used his house as a military post; and it was more convenient that the negroes should go outside; and they were captured by the Indians. They were paid for, and rightly paid for, by the Government of the United States.

There was another case, while the honorable Senator from Delaware was a member of the Committee on Claims—the case of a Mr. Renner, who owned a ropewalk in this District. He manufactured rope of a certain description, rope proper for navy stores. He apprehended that the British would destroy the rope, unless he removed it; but the United States took away the means which he had acquired for the purpose of removing his property. An application was made, first, for the payment of the rope which was proper for the naval service, and which, because of its fitness for that service, according to the usages of civilized warfare, the enemy would be authorized to destroy; and he was paid for it. Then, in 1851, a former Senator from Indiana, now deceased, made a report providing payment for twine which was stored in the same house, and which was also burnt or destroyed, or taken away by the British when they captured Washington.

I could multiply almost an indefinite number of cases in which the Government, by the action of both branches of Congress, has repudiated the principle announced by my honorable friend from Delaware, and has paid, over and over again, upon the principles of equity and justice, where the claimant was entitled to be paid under those principles, when his property was destroyed by reason of the action of the Government.

I desire now to occupy a short time in applying the principles to the evidence in this case. The principle announced by the committee is, that wherever, by the act of the Government, the property of a citizen is justifiably destroyed by the enemy, the Government, per se, is obliged to pay for the property so destroyed, in consequence of its acts. I wish now to apply this principle to the evidence in the case; and first, in reference to the tobacco at Nottingham. Were the forces of the Government of Great Britain justified, according to the usages of civilized warfare, in taking away the tobacco from the warehouses at Nottingham? It will be necessary, in order to examine this question thoroughly, for me to go into some historical detail, in order to show that the enemy were authorized to take this tobacco away, or to destroy it, at their option.

The reports in this and the other cases of this nature show that the fleet of Great Britain occupied the Chesapeake bay and the Patuxent river, one of its tributaries, during the entire summer of 1814. It is an historical fact known to the Senate, that prior to the ascension of the Patuxent river by the flotilla of Commodore Barney, the enemy had never gone up that river. They had supposed, as we believe, that it was not of sufficient depth to be navigable for their vessels of war. After the flotilla of Commodore Barney went up the Patuxent river, they were followed by the fleet of the enemy; and from that period until after the burning of the Capitol, and the retreat of the British army from this city, and their reëmbarkation at Nottingham, the Patuxent was continuously occupied by the enemy.

I submit, that an enemy occupying the waters of a foe is authorized and justified, according to the usages of warfare, in landing for purposes of forage, for the purpose of procuring water, for the purpose of securing any supplies which may be necessary for the comfortable support of their forces. Here was the British fleet, with an army sufficiently numerous to take your Capitol, occupying this river for months. Here were warehouses located directly upon the banks of the river. They were the property of the respective counties; their contents were the property of the citizens. From the houses upon the margin of the river the enemy were fought, day after day, by our troops, and they were almost universally repulsed. There was hardly a house upon the margin of that river which was not used almost daily for the purpose of making an attack upon the enemy, whenever they approached the shore. These warehouses were so used. The tobacco which they contained formed an impervious barrier to any missile which could be shot at our forces. It is the best fortress in the world, for a cannon ball cannot go through a hoghead of tobacco. The tobacco was so used. The evidence in a number of these cases shows that during the whole summer of 1814 the public warehouses upon this river were used, whenever the enemy approached the shore, for the purpose of annoyance.

At Nottingham, when, on the 15th of June, 1814, the British attempted to capture that village, the tobacco was rolled out from the warehouse, and formed into a breastwork, and our cannon were planted behind it. When the eleven barges of the British approached the village, they were fired upon from this breastwork. My friend says that the old general who commanded there tells him now that they were only "scaling" their cannon; but he swore at that day, and so did the other witnesses, that the Americans fired at the enemy and repulsed them.

Mr. BAYARD. At Nottingham? I said that he stated then, as now, that they formed a breastwork.

Mr. PRATT. I refer to the Senator's remark as to scaling cannon.

Mr. BAYARD. He stated to me that that was so.

Mr. PRATT. My friend says that this old general, after the lapse of years which have passed since 1814, now says he was scaling his cannon, and that that frightened the British, and they went away. But, sir, the fact is, he made a breastwork; he planted the American cannon behind it; the enemy were fired upon; and they were repulsed, and they retreated. If they had landed and whipped our forces who were fighting them from behind the tobacco, and had destroyed the tobacco, I presume my honorable friend would admit the obligation of the Government to pay for it; because he could not say that the owners had had sufficient time to remove the tobacco before the enemy approached for the purpose of destroying it.

But, Mr. President, I insist that the correct principle is this: that having used the tobacco from this warehouse for military purposes; having successfully used it in repulsing the enemy, that enemy, when it became necessary, in the proper prosecution of their belligerent rights, after their retreat from the burning of your Capitol; when they found it necessary still to occupy the Patuxent river, and necessary to land for the purpose of receiving their straggling soldiers, were not, according to any principle of civilized warfare, obliged to leave behind them the material with which a fort had been erected, from which they had been fought and whipped, that a similar fort might be again erected, and they be again fought and whipped. I say, then, they were perfectly justified in taking beyond the reach of the American forces this source of annoyance—the tobacco which had been used, and which they knew could be and would be used again by our forces, as soon as they got there for the purpose of annoying them. That is the case in reference to the tobacco at Nottingham.

At Magruder's Ferry, situated some seven miles further down the river, the warehouse is directly upon the water; and the proof is, that upon one occasion the British were attempting to land there with a considerable force; that our little army was drawn up so as to be protected by the warehouse and its contents; that the battle was fought, and continued successfully upon the American side until their ammunition was entirely exhausted, and then our troops were obliged to retreat. The enemy, not on the next day, but immediately after the battle had been fought from this fort, from this tobacco warehouse, containing the very tobacco which these claimants now ask to be paid for, approached, and burnt the warehouse, with the tobacco in it. That is the case of the tobacco at the warehouse at Magruder's Ferry.

Mr. President, I feel that I have now discharged my duty to those citizens whose rights, according to the conviction of my best judgment, are implicated in the decision of the Senate on this bill. Upon a former occasion, however, I incidentally remarked that it was possible that this case might come under the treaty stipulations between the United States and Great Britain. I made that suggestion because I supposed, if I could show that—independently of the justice of the claim upon which the committee base, and upon which alone I base the right of these citizens to be paid—there was, under a treaty stipulation between this country and Great Britain, probable cause for believing that this Government was bound to pay, and that it had in its possession money placed there by Great Britain to pay, it would take away the unwillingness which seems to be exhibited on the part of some to do justice to these individuals on the grounds relied upon by the committee of the Senate. I ask the attention of the Senate for a few minutes, while I attempt to sustain this principle which I formerly incidentally assumed.

Mr. President, the result of the first article of the treaty of Ghent, as ultimately construed by the arbitration of the Emperor of Russia, I will state. I do not intend to read it; but I ask my friend to correct me if I do not state properly. The result was this: that the Government of Great Britain stipulated to pay for the private property, captured at any time during the war, which might be in the possession of the British forces, and within the jurisdiction of the United States at the date of the treaty. Then, if we were claiming under this treaty, what would it have been obligatory upon the claimants to show? First, that the property was taken away, and next, that it was in the possession of the enemy, and within the jurisdiction of the United States at the date of the treaty. These claimants did not prepare their claims, nor do they now ask that they shall be paid upon the basis of that treaty. They have not, therefore, produced proof for the purpose of establishing the latter fact; but if I can show by historical facts within the knowledge of the Senate, not positively, but that, according to all human probability, this property, conceded to have been taken, was in the possession of the forces of Great Britain, and within the jurisdiction of the United States at the date of the treaty, then I show a case in which, inasmuch as the money is now in the Treasury, you at least should not cavil as to whether the principle of relief is applicable to real or personal property; and I think that, without going so minutely into the discussion of such matters, you might afford to pay the claim.

Now for the proof. The battle of Bladensburg was fought, I think, on the 23d of August, 1814, and the Capitol was burnt on the 24th of that month. It was after the retreat from this city that this tobacco was taken away. They are supposed to have commenced their retreat about the 25th or 26th of August, 1814. Then the army which fought the battle of Bladensburg, and Vandal-like, burnt your Capitol, after their retreat from here proceeded to this very point, Nottingham, for the purpose of embarking in their vessels. After the 25th of August, therefore, they remained in the waters of the Chesapeake, or Patuxent, and until they proceeded to Baltimore. General Ross, with the same army which had been victorious here, went to Baltimore from the Patuxent; and we all know that the battle of North Point was fought on the 12th of September, 1814.

What further do we know historically in regard to this transaction? Why, sir, that this same fleet, with the same army, joined by reinforcements from Great Britain, proceeded from the waters of the Chesapeake to attack New Orleans, which resulted in the glorious victory of the 8th of January, 1815. The treaty of Ghent was signed on the 24th of December, 1814. My friend said he had some recollection of the last war. It is very certain that I am right in the facts; and I do not think he can question their correctness.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator is mistaken; and, if I have his permission, I will correct him.

Mr. PRATT. Certainly.

Mr. BAYARD. Great Britain, under the treaty of Ghent, stipulated to restore or pay for such slaves or other private property of the citizens of the United States as were remaining within territory to be restored by her under the treaty. It was "waters or territory" within their jurisdiction. So far as Great Britain was in possession of these waters at the time of the ratification of the treaty, she had no right to carry off the property from there. If she was in the possession of territory then to be restored, she had no right to carry off property from there. The treaty was not ratified until early in 1815—either in March or April of that year; but I have never heard it alleged that, after the month of September, 1814, the British had any possession of any territory on the waters of the Patuxent, or of the waters of the Patuxent themselves, or that they had any force there. Hence, they had no property there; and no property taken from there would come within the terms of the treaty.

Mr. PRATT. I think I stated the principle correctly. I will read from the decision of the Emperor of Russia:

"That the United States of America are entitled to a just indemnification from Great Britain for all private property carried away by the British forces; and as the question regards slaves more especially, for all such slaves as were carried away by the British forces, from the places and territories of which the restitution was stipulated by the treaty, in quitting the said places and territories; that the United States are entitled to consider as having been so carried away all such slaves or other property as may have been transported from the above-mentioned territories on board of the British vessels within the waters of said territories, and which, for this reason, have not been restored."

I have not time to refer to the other portion of the decision; but I think I have stated the principle correctly. But I wish to bring to the notice of my honorable friend and of the Senate this fact, that negroes taken from the waters of the Patuxent were actually paid for under the treaty. That is known to my honorable friend.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know it; but I can easily understand that it might be so. The British were in the possession of the lower part of the Chesapeake, and they might have had negroes there at the time of the ratification of the treaty; and they would be under an obligation to restore them, because they were occupying places which they were compelled to restore under the treaty. I believe they had Kent Island in their possession, and the lower waters of the Chesapeake. If they had negroes in their vessels at that time, and a claimant proved that his negroes were on board, he would be entitled to recover, because the waters which their fleets occupied were as much within their possession as the land upon which their troops stood, and therefore, were waters or places to be restored under the treaty of Ghent. But that, of course, did not apply to waters or territory not in their possession.

Mr. PRATT. They did pay for negroes taken away from this very point—Nottingham. The contest between the British and the American negotiators was this: It was contended on the part of Great Britain that those negroes had gone away voluntarily, and were not to be paid for, and hence the necessity of referring the matter to the arbitration of the Emperor of Russia. I was proceeding to show that, according to the decision of the Emperor of Russia, wherever property which had been captured at any time during the war was in the possession of the British at the date of the treaty, it was to be surrendered or paid for.

Mr. BAYARD. Will the honorable Senator allow me to read from the decision? He only read part of it; I will read the other part, to show what I mean, in order that there may be no difference between us. He read so much of the discussion as applies in favor of the United States. I will read the counter decision. The Emperor says:

"If there should have been any American slaves or property carried away from territories of which the first article of the treaty of Ghent did not stipulate the restitution to the United States, the United States have no claim to indemnification for such slaves or property."

That was his decision; and, in view of that, I said that if the restitution of the waters of the Patuxent, or any other territory on those waters, was not stipulated for by the treaty of Ghent, the property carried away from there, and there at the time the treaty was ratified, would not come within its terms.

Mr. PRATT. I think the honorable Senator admitted, a while ago, that they had possession of the mouth of the Chesapeake at that time?

Mr. BAYARD. I believe they had.

Mr. PRATT. And therefore he thinks, though he does not know the fact, that they might have paid for negroes, taken from Nottingham, and other points on the Patuxent river, because the Patuxent being a tributary of the Chesapeake, and they having command of the mouth of the Chesapeake, had necessarily the command of the Patuxent. I will read from Niles's Register, for the purpose of showing that the British fleet and army, which were engaged in the battle of North Point, on the 12th of September, were the same fleet and the same army which, together with reinforcements from Great Britain, went to New Orleans, and were there on the 12th of December, and on the 24th of December, 1814, the time the treaty was decided; and, consequently, if I be right in the first proposition, it will follow that they were bound to pay. I find, in the seventh volume of Niles's Register, page 316, this statement:

"The fleet that we had in New Orleans was the same that we had in the Chesapeake last September, and Admiral Cochrane, disappointed of dining in Baltimore, is reported to have said he would eat his Christmas dinner in New Orleans, and stay there some time. We trust the knight will be drubbed."

He then goes on to state certain facts corroborative of what I have suggested.

It turned out, that after the first arbitration of the Emperor of Russia the two Governments could not agree as to the value of the property which was admitted to have been taken off, and the obligation, [under the decision of the Emperor,] on the part of Great Britain, to pay. That resulted in another convention between the two Governments, by which Great Britain agreed to pay, and the United States agreed to receive, $1,204,960, as a full indemnity for all the claims of the citizens of the United States growing out of that treaty. Now, I understand that that fund is unexhausted at the Treasury; a part of it is still there. The case which I supposed I had made for the equitable consideration of the Senate—an argument, as I thought, to show why they should not view so nicely the question as to the relative obligation to pay for personal and real property—I desired to suggest that here was a case in which Great Britain had paid money for specific purposes—to compensate for property taken off during the war of 1812; that it has remained continuously in the Treasury for a great number of years, or has been used by the Government. That here is property which was taken away. It was taken away from a place which, according to my judgment, under the treaty, bound them to pay for it. Although there is no positive proof that this property was in the possession of the enemy, and within the jurisdiction of the United States at the date of the treaty, yet I think I have shown sufficient, from the historical facts of the case, to bring up to the mind of every Senator a desire to do justice to those parties who were intended to be relieved by the Government of Great Britain by the payment of this money.

I regret, Mr. President, that I have taken so much time in the discussion of this bill. I have taken longer than I supposed I would; but having now gone through the subject, I leave it, and shall submit, with proper deference, to the decision of the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, justice to myself requires that some portion of the argument of my honorable friend from Maryland should be noticed by me. He seems to suppose that, in the remarks which I addressed to the Senate on Friday last in reference to this bill, I used arguments which he has chosen to designate as ad captandum arguments, or as of that character. Sir, I had hoped that, in my career here, I should never be open to an objection of that kind. If I could recognize in any of the specifications which the honorable Senator makes any ground for sustaining that position which he has taken, I should be perfectly willing to retract any remark made by me having such an aspect.

The honorable Senator intimates, in the remarks which he made in connection with my allegation of the mode in which I first became acquainted with these cases for the purpose of examination, that my feelings became interested in regard to them. Allow me to say, that I do not suppose that I, more than any other man, am free from human imperfection and the danger of bias arising from pride of opinion; and I presume that is the only feeling which could possibly be supposed to actuate me in the case. I have endeavored to keep myself clear of that. I certainly arrived at my conclusions without having any previously formed opinions of the merits of the case; and, indeed, without any knowledge of the subject, until I came to apply myself to it for the purpose of investigation.

But, on the other hand, sir, may I not ask whether the honorable Senator from Maryland may not be under somewhat more bias in reference to a case which enlists his feelings for his immediate constituents, and in which he probably heard the story of the claim repeated to him, and the grounds of loss told him long before he brought his mind, as a judge, to a judicial investigation of the facts on which he had to determine as a public man?

Mr. President, the honorable Senator further told us that this bill passed the Senate at a former session of Congress, and was sanctioned by them. I concede that it passed the Senate, and passed it after I had made up my opinion against it; but it so happened, by some negligence of mine, if you will, or by accident, that all these tobacco bills were called up on those days when I was absent from the Senate, and I never had an opportunity to be heard upon them, and they were passed without any discussion of the principle involved in them.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator says that the practice of the Senate, where an adverse report is made upon a bill, is to concur in it as a matter of course, and the bill is not passed. If, by the practice of the Senate, a claim once rejected was considered as finally rejected, this case perhaps would never have been before us. The allegation of the honorable Senator is probably strictly correct, that in the particular case, and at the particular session at which an adverse report is made upon a bill, that report is seldom if ever controverted on the state of facts as then presented. But look over your Senate list of claims; look back at your records, and what do you find to be the fact? Sir, where a decision upon a claim is favorable, and the bill passes, the party gets the money, and of course the decision being against the United States, is final and the money is gone. But where a claim is rejected on one, two, or three adverse reports for session after session, it finally slips through. It is brought forward eight, ten, or twelve, and sometimes even twenty years after the first adverse report, and presented with some merely cumulative evidence, some slight variation in the proof of facts in which a reasonable man would not see the least materiality; and when all memory of the precedent action of Congress has passed from the minds of men, the same claim, without reference to former adjudications, is reported upon favorably, and a bill passes both Houses allowing the claim. Any gentleman who will take the trouble to examine the Senate list of claims, which has only been published within the last five or six years, will be able to trace the course of legislation, and satisfy himself, that so far from there being in general any denial of justice to private claimants, if their claims are sometimes reported upon adversely in this body and postponed, yet they are rarely defeated. The same claims, if only persistently pursued, are always ultimately allowed, unless they happen to be so very large in amount that some gentlemen become alarmed in consequence of the amount, and not on account of the objectionable principle involved. You will find that to be the history of all these claims; and I say, further, as the result of my examination of a great number of claims which I have had to look at in reference to the investigation of this and other cases, that, in my opinion, a large majority of the claims which are brought before Congress for adjudication and allowance are either utterly baseless as claims upon the Government, or are so exaggerated in amount, that, as against an individual, the same claims would be pronounced extortion. Sir, there is a singular characteristic in the moral nature of man, that where, as between man and man, sympathy may be indulged on both sides, the feeling will probably go with the justice of the case; but when you come to a claim upon the Government it is looked upon as a nonentity; it has no sympathies in its favor; and even among moral men, among good men, many who, as between individuals, would decide rightly, look upon the public, and the Government representing the public, as a goose to be plucked. Instead of censure being passed upon the man who, by management and skillful arrangement of his proofs, obtains from the Treasury money which, if obtained in a similar mode from an individual, would be condemned as a fraud, that man is applauded and admired for his sagacity who most adroitly plucks the greatest quantity of feathers from the public goose. Sir, this is unfortunately too true. It is because this wrong tone of sentiment does exist; it is because the examination of facts in reference to what are called claims upon the Government is so loosely conducted in the Senate and in Congress generally, (far less loosely, I admit, in the House of Representatives than in this body,) that, although the party may fail to-day from happening to have some one member on a committee who will take the trouble to examine the case, he has only to let his claim lie over for six or eight or ten years, and if he has the tact to get a favorable committee, or one favorable member, he will have a report in his favor, and the bill may be passed. If a bill be once recommended by one committee, all subsequent committees always follow like sheep in the pathway of the first report, and recommend and adopt the same bill. That is the course here, founded on an ex parte examination, in which the individual is represented by prepared testimony of the loosest character on the one side, and on the other the Government, representing the great public of the United States, is totally unrepresented. No testimony is presented on its behalf; and there is little investigation in reference to the merits of the claim, as regards its rights.

It is because I have seen so much of this, that I have been anxious and desirous to see some proper tribunal constituted for passing upon these claims upon the Government. Where a claim is just, I admit it ought to be paid, and paid promptly; but I do consider these special laws for the relief of individual parties as indicating the progress of corruption in this Government to an extent alarming in its character; and as long as I remain on this floor I shall, as far as is consistent with my other duties, always oppose every case which strikes me as not being a proper case for relief by the Government. I will cheerfully and gladly, at any time, vote for a bill which provides a proper tribunal to give speedy and immediate relief to every man having a claim upon the Government, under those principles of law and equity which ought to govern the relations of the citizen and the Government. When such a tribunal is constituted, you will have something like decisions on general principles and general rules, which ought always to regulate and determine the relative rights of the citizen and the Government, in the same way that they regulate and determine rights and obligations as between man and man. What a monstrous course of things is it now? As regards an individual, if any man should propose that the Congress of the United States should legislate specially, as between the rights of individuals and on ex parte statements, and proofs should determine that one man should pay money to another, the common sense of justice, and common intelligence of every Senator, would reject it instantly. And where is the difference between such a course of action applied to individuals and applied to the Government? Sir, the mode of passing these special acts is wrong. The tribunal is an inappropriate one; and all the evils which exist in this case, and all others, arise out of this system of special laws connected with private claims against the Government, instead of making provisions by which they may be appropriately decided by a judicial tribunal, after due investigation, and upon proper evidence.

I have made these remarks in order to show that, so far from an adverse report being any bar to relief, it, in fact, by the course of practice in this body, becomes a mere nullity. It operates for the session, and rejects the claim for that session; but it does not reject the claim finally. The party has only to persist, to adhere, to have his case so well managed by some agent that he will let it lie by for six or eight years, during which time the whole body will be changed, and he will finally get a more favorable presentation of the facts, by a committee losing sight of the previous unfavorable report; and his bill will be passed. I will give an illustration by reference to a case which occurred at the first session, when I was a member of this body, where a claim was reported unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs. There had been, sixteen or eighteen years previously, a thorough investigation of the claim by the Navy Department, and by a committee of the Senate, and it was rejected. On the same evidence, in the year 1848, the case was brought up in the House. The previous investigation was lost sight of; the whole history of the case was forgotten; and on the same evidence which was presented previously, and without effect, a favorable report was made. The committee of the Senate afterwards adopted the report of the committee of the House, and the claim came before the Senate for allowance.

In reading cursorily that report, (at that time I used to take the labor, which I do not mean to do again, of reading every report made upon a private claim,) I thought the principle upon which it rested was unsound; and that the testimony did not sustain the case as reported by the committee. This induced me to look into it. I did so; and by referring to the Senate list of claims, I found the anterior proceedings. I brought those matters before the Senate. The question was fully and ably discussed in favor of the claim by the honorable Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY,] but the Senate indefinitely postponed the consideration of the bill against the report of the committee. I only mention that case as one illustration of, I think I might say, the hundreds of cases which, if any gentleman will take the trouble to examine the Senate list of claims, he will be astonished to find, have been persistently presented, after adverse report upon adverse report, at intervals of five, ten, or twenty years, and frequently have been ultimately passed, although they may have been so repeatedly rejected.

Well, sir, the Government stands in a very defenseless and unjust position in this respect. If the claimant's bill passes, he gets his money, and there is an end of the matter. If his claim is rejected at first, ten chances to one it is finally allowed; for as to the practice under the rule, of withdrawing papers on an allegation that there is new proof discovered, if you will take the trouble to look into it, you will find that the new proof is generally nothing more than merely slightly cumulative testimony, and amounts to nothing which would justify a rehearing of the case with any intelligent man; and very often, too, a case is again referred and reported upon favorably on precisely the same proof on which it was originally rejected, because the texture of the committee may happen to be different.

The honorable Senator further supposes that I used an unfair argument in representing that Mr. Jenifer's testimony as to the tobacco at the Cedar Point warehouse showed that the British were taking tobacco there when the militia went down to attack them; because he said the statement had no application to the case now before the Senate, as the tobacco claimed was in Magruder's and Nottingham warehouses. I stated in my opening, and I believe the papers prove it—and though the report of the committee does not show it, the tobacco notes do—that a small portion of the tobacco for which payment is claimed here was stored at the Cedar Point warehouse. But, sir, I used the testimony of Mr. Jenifer to show the animus or intention of the British in the destruction or carrying away of the tobacco. I used it to show that an act done in and about the same time when there was no resistance, no occupation, indicated the intention of the British to cause the destruction of the tobacco, irrespective of its occupation by our troops there or elsewhere, much more strongly than the mere opinion of two witnesses—(and that is all the evidence as to the cause of destruction furnished by the claimants in this case)—that it was destroyed in consequence of its occupation by the troops of the United States. That fact was to be proved. I used Mr. Jenifer's testimony, and the proceedings at Alexandria for the same purpose, to show that where there was no occupation, no defense, the British had removed or destroyed tobacco. I used the proceedings at Alexandria to show that they avowed officially the general intent to take away all merchandise capable of exportation, without regard to whether it was defended or occupied by the troops of the United States. Is not that a fair mode of using testimony in order to repel what has been attempted to be proved on the other side in this case, solely by the opinion of two witnesses, that the destruction was in consequence of the occupation by the troops of the Government, when, in fact, there was occupation at all?

I hope, therefore, I have relieved myself from the charge of using this as an ad captandum argument. I meant it to be a real one. I think it both a just and fair argument. I think it is a far stronger and more natural inference, than that by which the witnesses in their own minds arrived at the opinion that, because some tobacco warehouses were not destroyed, therefore it must be assumed that these which were destroyed where there was some fighting, were destroyed in consequence of their being defended. I think their opinion is a non sequitur, and that my argument establishes the position for which I meant to contend. The testimony of Mr. Jenifer was one of a series of facts connected together, by which I intended to show that the British did not destroy this tobacco in consequence of its occupation or use by the United States as a fortification, or its availability for such purposes, but because they meant to plunder flour, cotton, tobacco, and all other exportable articles, as was subsequently their official avowal in the proceedings at Alexandria.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator further says that I should not have made the objection which I suggested in regard to these tobacco notes being payable to order, and that I would not have made it if I had noticed the provisions of the bill. I had noticed the provisions of the bill, and I made the objection as to the want of title to those notes for this reason: this is an old claim, and I had seen in Callet's case, that when you pass a bill here, you do not know what proof will be admitted under it; and I thought that, as these claimants produced in evidence before the committee of the Senate these notes, drawn to order, as constituting one half of the alleged ground of claim, it was right to say that that portion of evidence in the case showed no claim at all on the part of the claimants, unless sustained by other proof that those notes had been rightfully transferred to them.

But, sir, the honorable Senator says that my other objection, arising out of the lapse of time, and the fact that those notes may have been obtained for speculative purposes, is an objection which is not founded in fact; and he seems to think it is unjust to the parties. I did not say, I cannot say, when they obtained them; but I said that, according to the evidence in the case, they were not the owners of this property at the time of its destruction. It is unnecessary to deny that they were the owners at that time. I know not how that fact may really be. But I always take it for granted, in an ex parte case, that where the party can prove a fact which he should essentially and rightfully prove for the purpose of success, he will prove it, and should be held to the proof of it. I suppose that if Hodges & Lansdale were in business at that time, and then owned the notes, they would have given you sworn extracts from their books, showing when and at what time they purchased the notes. In the absence of such testimony, all that I said was that the claim, as it appears before the Senaté, might be a speculative claim, in which the real owners of the property which had been destroyed had sold the notes for a mere song. I supposed so, because there were no extracts from the books of the parties, and no affidavits to prove when or how they became the owners of the property.

Again, the honorable Senator classes this argument, which I addressed to the Senate on the ground that these might be speculative claims, as one among those which he designates as ad captandum. I think not so. I did not intimate, and do not contend for a moment, that if this claim comes within the principles on which you should give relief to the original owner, and a party presents himself to you here and proves that the original owner's right of property has been transferred to him, you ought not to relieve him as much as the original owner. I concede, fully and freely, that you are as much bound to relieve the assignee as the original owner; but he must first prove his case. When he brings his claim before you and omits that proof, and when I look back to what the honorable Senator from Maryland entirely omitted to advert to in his remarks, that as early as 1818, even under the restricted laws of 1816 and 1817, frauds had become so great that the Government refused to continue those acts beyond the time when they were to expire by their original limitation, I say that an argument of this kind, connected with what may be a speculative claim, which is not shown to be otherwise by the party who makes it, and who might have so shown if it were otherwise, addresses itself to the sound consideration of the Senate, in weighing the testimony in support of a stale demand.

I will not attempt to go into the different arguments used by the honorable Senator from Maryland in reply to those which I urged. I will barely notice one or two of the cases which he has cited, as contrary to my views. First, as to the treaty of Ghent. Without going at all into the question whether, from the nature of this case, it comes within the treaty of Ghent, this answer is conclusive: The committee did not bring it within it; the evidence does not bring it within it. There was a tribunal established for the purpose of making a fair allowance to every person who came within the terms of that treaty. Is it not reasonable to suppose that every person who had a just claim went before the Board of Commissioners, established his claim, and received the money? Is it reasonable now, because there may happen to be a residuum of that fund left in the Treasury, to ask you to allow this claim, although there is no proof, or only what the honorable Senator calls historical testimony, to sustain it? If the honorable Senator will present a petition on behalf of Hodges & Lansdale, and, with the petition, a bill authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to investigate the facts of the case, and to determine whether it comes within the treaty of Ghent, and the decision of the Emperor of Russia, under that treaty, and, in the event of a favorable decision, to pay to the parties in liquidation of their claim any balance which may remain in the Treasury unappropriated of the fund received from Great Britain, I am perfectly willing to vote for such a bill. I should be disposed to waive the lapse of time as a bar to the claimants, though certainly it is through their own negligence that they have not come forward before; and it is but reasonable to presume, as to all claims which did not come before the commission which was sitting, with full authority to allow the claims of all persons who had just demands under the treaty, that there must have been some radical defect in their proof. But the report of the committee does not raise such a question. There is no evidence to support the claim on this ground. The committee do not pretend to bring the claim within the treaty of Ghent; nor does the bill authorize its payment out of the fund remaining under that treaty.

The next position of the honorable Senator which requires notice relates to Mr. Ramsey's report. I have read that report to the Senate, and it is not necessary for me to restate its arguments. But there is a view taken of the effect of its reasoning by the honorable Senator which I think deserves notice at my hands.

The honorable Senator assumes that the reasoning of the Auditor, and the reasoning of the committee in Mr. Ramsey's report, made in 1845, only go to show that the case of Catlett (and therefore this case, for both are identical) is not within the principles of the laws of 1816 and 1817, but that they impliedly admit, as he contends, that this claim would be payable on the principles of equity and justice. Is that so? I supposed that when the committee of the House of Representatives, in 1845, had before them the claim of Mrs. Swan, one of two results was certain; they reported against it, because it did not come within the principles of the laws of 1816 and 1817. If there had been any principle of equity and justice which, in their opinion, would have justified the allowance, does the honorable Senator suppose that the committee would not have recognized that principle? If it had been proper to extend those laws so as to grant relief to Mrs. Swan, I presume such would have been the recommendation of the committee. As there was no such recommendation, I think I may safely say that the committee of the House, in 1845, intended to report, not only that the case of Mrs. Swan, which is identical with this, did not come within the principles of the laws of 1816 and 1817, but also that those principles were correct, and that the party not coming within them ought not to be relieved on any loose notions of equity. That is the result of their report, and that is the result of any case which rejects a claim of a similar character.

But the honorable Senator alleged (I think under a great misapprehension) that the reason why these restrictions as to relief were adopted in the years 1816 and 1817 arose out of the fact that the Government was then embarrassed in its circumstances, and that its pecuniary embarrassments necessarily required a stricter adherence to restrictive principles in the rejection of claims than is now necessary. The honorable Senator is mistaken in point of fact. He will find, I think, on examination, that during the years 1817 and 1818, instead of United States stocks selling for sixty cents to the dollar, they stood at a premium of from ten to twelve per cent. for six per cent. stocks. No doubt during the war there had been difficulties; but after the war, the credit of the Government immediately recovered, and in 1817 (and my recollection goes back sufficiently to cover it) the stocks of the Government were at a premium of from ten to fifteen per cent. But, independently of that fact, there cannot be found the report of a committee at that time which places the refusal of relief on the ground of the then state of the Treasury; and, therefore, it will not do to assume that these claims were rejected because the state of the Treasury would not allow their payment, when the grounds taken at the time were totally distinct, and such as I endeavored to develop in my former remarks.

The honorable Senator referred to the limitation imposed by the act of 1816, that compensation should be confined to property destroyed whilst in actual possession of the troops of the United States; and he thought that, under this limitation, damages for which the Government would be responsible would not often occur. Sir, Congress, in passing that act, had reference to the exigencies of war, the attacks and repulses which take place, the injuries to private property which happen when a large district is in possession of the enemy; and considered upon what precarious and unreliable testimony the value of the property, the mode of defense, and the extent of occupation always must rest. Congress, on the ground of the precarious character of such testimony, and the danger of fraud and misrepresentation, required, by the laws of 1816 and 1817, that the officer in command should be examined, if alive, in order to prove the fact that the order was given, and that no supplemental, no subsidiary proof should be taken, unless his non-examination was accounted for. This, I think, was a very necessary rule, and one founded upon the plainest principles of propriety.

Again: the honorable Senator is mistaken in supposing that Mr. Madison suspended the operation of the law of 1816, or the action of the Commissioner. He suspended the awards of the Commissioner, not the taking of testimony. The parties could go on and take testimony, but the awards of the Commissioner, which were to be final, were suspended by the President until further legislation by Congress.

Nor, sir, was the act of 1817, as the honorable Senator supposes, more restrictive than the act of 1816. It was more definite. It was meant to guard against a loose construction. It rather extended the former act than otherwise, because the law of 1816 only provided for relief in case of houses occupied as places of military deposit; and the act of 1817 allowed relief where the property was occupied as a military deposit or as barracks. The difference was, that under the amended law of 1817 it required the specific order of the officer, and under the act of 1816 it was simply required that it should be done under the authority of an officer.

The honorable Senator read a portion of the report of the committee of the Senate in the case of Catlett as counter to my views. That report was made by a gentleman, then a member of this body, who afterwards became President of the United States. If I had time now to discuss the principles embodied in that report, and could task the patience of the Senate by investigating them, I think I could demonstrate their indefinite and illusory character. This much is certain: that the bill which he reported to the Senate, founded upon the principles contained in his report, was rejected by the body. The Senate struck out the provision allowing the claim to be settled "upon principles of equity and justice"—words so loosely used when applied to the settlement of claims against the Government—and introduced words requiring that it should be settled upon the principles of the laws of 1816 and 1817. In so doing they repudiated the principles announced in that report. But, sir, it appears, that when the decision of the auditor under their bill was before the Senate in 1839, and investigated by the committee, that committee asked to be discharged, and were discharged, from the further consideration of the subject; thus evincing an approval of the course and opinion of the auditor, and proving that the auditor, in the opinion of the committee of the Senate, had carried out the law which had been passed as Congress meant it should be carried out. The same inference must also be drawn from Mr. Ramsey's report.

The honorable Senator has also stated and relied upon some cases in which relief has been granted contrary to the principle for which I contend, as regards personal property destroyed by an enemy. I do not deny for a moment, I did not before, that there were special cases where the principles of the laws of 1816 and 1817 had been misapplied, and relief had been granted in opposition to those principles. I admit it now; but I contended that Congress had adhered to the principles of those laws, and for that purpose I cited reports to show, that when a proposition had been made as late as 1832 to extend those laws, the committee reported against it upon a general investigation of the principles. Then, have I not a right to say that Congress has adhered to that general principle? and have I not a right to qualify the statement in the mode which I have suggested—that it may be true, and I have no doubt is always true, that, establish what principle you may in a general law, a case may creep through Congress where the facts are not within the application of principles which Congress has previously recognized?

I apply these remarks to the case of Mr. Sothron, which I have read several times. I consider that case clearly a violation of the acts of 1816 and 1817. I do not think the evidence brings it within them; but certainly it is a much stronger case than this, because there were facts connected with it which might, under all the circumstances, have raised a doubt as to whether the party had time and opportunity to remove his property. The occupation of the property for barracks was clearly proved. The same man owned the realty and the personality, and both were destroyed at the same time. In this case no individual has ever claimed for the destruction of the warehouses. Whether owned by the county or by the State, as the Senator suggests, or by an individual, no claim was ever made on the Government for the real estate, and you are now asked to pay for personal property situated in the real estate, because the real estate was destroyed by the enemy in consequence of its occupation by the United States when that real estate has never been claimed or paid for. If a claim had been made, and could have been proved, the real estate would undoubtedly have been paid for, because it comes clearly within the acts of 1815 and 1817, if it was occupied for military purposes and destroyed justifiably in consequence of such occupation.

Compensation for the real estate has never been claimed by any one; and yet you are asked to pay for the personality on the testimony of two solitary witnesses, one of whom, and he the material one, I have endeavored to show, has detracted from his own credibility by the want of fairness and accuracy in his mode of statement. I refer to Mr. Baden. The testimony of General Biscoe does not sustain the present case at all.

It is true that in Mr. Sotheron's case, in 1847, the committee assumed the ground that they could not draw any distinction between personal and real property; but did they give you any argument? None whatever. They merely say that they can see no distinction. I have endeavored to point out the distinction which I think exists, and it is for the Senate to determine on its soundness. I adhere to the opinion that it does exist; and most certainly I have the laws of 1816 and 1817 to sustain me; and Congress, as then constituted, and the committees who then made their reports, made them adverse to the inclusion of personal property.

But the honorable Senator cites the case of Henderson, on Monday's Point, a part of the report in which I read, which was originally rejected, but at a subsequent Congress passed. To what extent that claim was allowed the honorable Senator does not tell us. He brings no report of a committee to controvert the principles of the laws of 1816 and 1817, but he shows that this and a few other bills have passed in special cases. I admit that special acts have been passed, which are a misapplication of the principle; but that principle has never been deliberately rejected by Congress, and in every case in which it has been proposed to extend those laws upon the broad ground of principle the proposition has been rejected.

The honorable Senator also referred to the case of Gad Humphrey, in which Indians had destroyed certain property. That is a case in which the claimant was clearly entitled to relief; and I have enunciated no principle which would militate against his right to relief in such a case. The Government troops took possession of the man's real estate, for their own use, as a fortification, and for no other purpose. They drove out his negroes, who were in consequence of that act carried away by a savage enemy. There was no opportunity to remove them to a place of safety. In such a case, of course, the Government was responsible. Nor do I deny the right of relief in the case of the proprietor of the rope-walk, which the Senator mentioned, if he proved his facts by reliable evidence. The Government in that case took from the party the means of removing his property—the teams with which he was removing to a place of safety. If a man can prove that the Government prevented the removal, it is the same thing as though they had taken possession of the property, and it thus comes fully within my principle. It is not because the enemy were justified in the destruction, but because the property was subjected to exposure and consequent destruction, by the act of the Government appropriating it, or preventing the owner's rightful control over it in removal to a place of safety; and clearly, if the Government takes possession for its own use of the means of removing the property, it restricts the owner in the free use of his property, and is the direct cause of the injury, which otherwise would not have been sustained. There is no such case made out here. I do not deny the principle applicable to either of the two cases to which I have just referred. I do not deny that they were proper cases for relief; but their principles do not attach upon the present case.

The honorable Senator admits that the property must be justifiably destroyed by the enemy, in order to make the Government responsible. He admits that it must be destroyed in consequence of use by the United States; and he endeavors to make out that the property of the claimants was so used. I said before, and I adhere to the declaration, that the destruction of this tobacco, as well as the other devastation by the British in the waters of the Patuxent, was not justified by the usages of civilized warfare. These tobacco warehouses were situated generally on the banks of the streams, and the enemy had their vessels in those streams. Now, does the fact that the Government of the United States turned out if you please, a portion, not all, of the tobacco at Nottingham, for the purpose of making a breastwork, and that the troops scaled off, or fired off cannon, justify the destruction of all? Or, in other words, because tobacco had been used in one particular instance for the purpose of defense, could the enemy treat tobacco as an article coming within the term "munitions of war," and so destroy it?

Mr. PRATT. I spoke of this tobacco.

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir; this particular tobacco. The particular tobacco used at Nottingham was not, from any proof here, the tobacco for which the claimants ask compensation; only a small portion, according to the statement, (how much is not mentioned,) was turned out for the purpose of erecting a temporary breastwork at Nottingham. It was not destroyed in that position; there is no proof or pretense of that sort. I admit unhesitatingly, that if it had been formed into a breastwork, and the British had landed, they would have had a right to destroy the breastwork; but I deny that they had a right to destroy other tobacco warehouses because the tobacco might probably be used as breastworks, any more than because General Jackson used cotton bales at New Orleans, they would have had a right, under the rules of civilized warfare, to destroy cotton whenever they came across it. The particular cotton or the tobacco which made the fortress might be justly the subject of destruction and of compensation if destroyed while there. But I deny that an enemy can carry the principle further and say, that because you use a particular private house for the purpose of defense, that justifies its destruction at any subsequent period. Sir, I illustrated this before by reference to our own soldiers in Mexico. I thought the principle clear enough, that while the contest was going on at Monterey, for instance, and the enemy were firing on them from their houses, if they found it necessary to make their way through private houses in order to dislodge the enemy, it was perfectly justifiable; but when the defense ceased, and the conflict was over, if the American troops had destroyed all the houses which had been used for defense, or from which shots had been fired, they would have been barbarians, instead of being American soldiers. They would have done precisely what the British did during the war of 1812, and would have violated the principles and usages of civilized warfare.

Then, sir, I am at issue with the honorable Senator from Maryland, as to the right of the British to destroy this property under the circumstances, because in one or two cases—and there are but two—it was thrown into the semblance of a breastwork. I do not consider that the warehouse at Magruder's, and the tobacco in it, received the character of a fortress, from the fact that the militia got behind it at the time the British boats were coming up to take away the tobacco. The Senator says the British took the tobacco in consequence of its defense by the troops. I say they came there to take it, and the militia went down to defend it.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator will permit me to say that there is not one tittle of evidence to support that assertion. He has confounded Cedar Point with Magruder's Ferry.

Mr. BAYARD. I admit that there is no direct evidence in the case as to this point. All the evidence we have upon it from the claimants, is the opinion of James Baden and Mr. Selby; they are of opinion the British destroyed the tobacco in consequence of its use and occupation by our troops; but they do not prove any use or occupation at all. They prove that the militia got behind the warehouse, and fired until their ammunition was exhausted, and then retreated. Is that any occupation? But they only swear to their opinion, and I endeavored to countervail that testimony by showing, that in regard to another warehouse—that at Cedar Point—Mr. Jenifer proved that the British were taking off the tobacco before the militia went down to defend it, and that they repulsed the militia, and then destroyed or carried off the tobacco. I have shown, also, that at Alexandria, where there was no defense, they carried it off. From these general facts, I drew the inference that the only reasonable presumption was, that the British were approaching this warehouse for the purpose of taking away the tobacco; and the mere inability of the American troops to defend it did not justify its destruction according to the usages of civilized warfare, because the Government had impressed upon it no public character.

Will the honorable Senator contend that because in the midst of a war, whether in a city or in the country, the troops, in an engagement, get behind a house and fire from that house, the enemy, after the contest is over, would be justified in destroying the house because it had been capable of being used for temporary protection from their fire? If that principle be true, of course you have no right to defend your property at all; and in every case an enemy is justified in devastating and burning down every house which he comes across, because it may be that American troops could get behind the house to defend themselves.

Then, as to the value of tobacco as a fortification, I think it rests more in the fancy of my honorable friend than in reality. There are but two cases in all these proofs which I have been able to find where any attempt was made to use it as a fortification. I should think it was rather a dangerous fortification and a clumsy one, for if they threw up tobacco as a breastwork, and used cannon, it would be difficult to arrange port holes in hogheads. And if cannon were used on both sides, the splinters from the hogheads would be rather dangerous accompaniments. It may be, that if the tobacco could be taken out of the hogheads and used alone it would be cannon proof, and that is the case with other materials. It is the case with cotton; but that does not justify the destruction of cotton, except where it is used as a fortification, or embankment, or breastwork by an enemy. You might as well say, that because men are the means by which war is actually carried on you could put every prisoner of war to death and refuse to ransom him, because if he were released he might subsequently carry arms against you. The principle would be as justifiable in the one case as in the other. Without men you cannot carry on war; without tobacco you may, and the necessity would exist to a much stronger extent, and it would be much more justifiable to destroy every prisoner of war than adopt the principle, that an article of property may be destroyed, though not in use for military purposes, merely because a similar article may have been used in one particular case, and at one particular time, under the pressure of emergency for temporary defense.

I submit, on the whole, Mr. President, that my principles have not been controverted; and that, though I admit that relief has been granted in cases where it ought not to have been, there is no case to be found in which relief has been allowed by the Congress of the United States to a party, as the claimant of personal property, irrespective of his ownership of the real property. The case of Mr. Sotheron is an excepted case, in which, if I were justified in detaining the Senate, I could show plausible grounds why the committee might suppose relief should be granted, though I confess I differ from them. I think it is a misfortune that so late as 1848 or 1850, when that claim was allowed, Congress should have departed, even in the one case, from the principles to which they adhered from 1816 down to that time; and a still greater misfortune if now they should open the door, after the lapse of forty years, to let in claims to a large extent not only in this neighborhood, but all along your northern frontier, for you cannot grant relief in the one case and refuse it in the other. The application now before you is one of the fruits of the special legislation in that case.

You will have evidence enough coming before you; you will have cases enough coming before you; you may pass this bill, and you may pass some others; and I, though no prophet, will venture to tell you, that if you do pass them you will, before four years are over, be obliged, at least, to refuse relief in cases more clearly proved, and more substantially coming within the principles of these laws than this case. You cannot rebut them; for it is an easy task to manufacture, without possibility of detection, ex parte testimony, founded upon the perversions of human memory, as to events which occurred so long ago, and when there has been a period of time within which hearsay has ripened into conviction, and individuals, without intending to swear to what is false, do unquestionably swear to what, if it were now capable of investigation, could be proved not to be the fact. But all this is no attack upon the integrity of men. It comes simply to this: that the events of war excite the imagination; that in the course of time age excuses, while it accounts for, the lapses of human memory, and the confusion of incidents to which those lapses give rise; and it is from that circumstance that we are obliged to guard against claims sustained by the testimony of witnesses given under such influences, long years after the occurrences have taken place.

On motion by Mr. WELLER, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, an additional member was added to the Committee on Enrolled Bills; and Mr. NORRIS was appointed.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 24, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. LILLY, by unanimous consent, presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey relative to the public domain; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present the proceedings of two meetings of the citizens of New Haven, Connecticut, against the Nebraska bill.

Mr. EDGERTON. I object.

Mr. HAMILTON. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. SKELTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey in favor of cheap ocean postage.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object, and call for the regular order of business.

Mr. FULLER. What is the regular order? Is it not the consideration of the motion to reconsider which I called up yesterday?

The SPEAKER. Some question might arise whether or not, although a privileged question, the motion to reconsider would take precedence of private bills, this being a day set apart for the consideration of private bills, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. FULLER. If no gentleman wishes further to debate the motion to reconsider, I intend to call for a vote upon it, if it is in order to call it up now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the practice has been to give precedence to a motion to reconsider, even upon private bill days.

Mr. EDGERTON. Does it not require a vote of two thirds to take up any business to-day except private bills?

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to reconsider, which, according to the rules, shall be put at the request of any one member at any time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I believe this is "objection day" on the Private Calendar, and if I am not mistaken, no bills have been reported and placed on the Calendar since last "objection day."

The SPEAKER. There are several private bills on the Speaker's table, if it is the disposition of the House to go to private business.

Mr. EDGERTON. I do not propose to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. JONES. I was going to suggest that if the gentleman does not desire to go into Committee on the Private Calendar, the debate on the Indian appropriation bill is to close to-day at two o'clock, and it would therefore be as well to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union at once.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would suggest that the business upon the Speaker's table can be disposed of in a very few minutes.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. When that is disposed of, I will make the motion I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] insists upon his motion to reconsider, as the Chair understands.

Mr. FULLER. I do insist upon my motion.

The SPEAKER. The bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes," was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. A motion is now made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FULLER] to reconsider the vote by which it was so referred.

Mr. FULLER. That is my motion; and if the motion to reconsider is carried, I intend to ask, first, a vote of the House upon the amendments, and then upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon reconsidering the motion by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken, and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The amendments were then read, severally considered, and agreed to, as follows:

In line 37 to strike out the word "joint," and insert the words "separate and distinct."

On page 6 to insert the following:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe the form of the bond to be given for the transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise, from a port in one collection district to a port in another collection district in the United States, as provided in the preceding section; also, the time for such delivery; and for a failure to transport and deliver, within the time limited, any such bonded goods, wares, and merchandise, to the collector at the designated port, an additional duty of one hundred per cent. shall be levied and collected, which additional duty shall be secured by such bond, or said goods, wares, and merchandise may be seized and forfeited for such failure, and any steam or other vessel, or vehicle, transporting such bonded goods, wares, and merchandise, the master, owner, or conductor of which shall fail to deliver the same to the collector at the designated port, shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture.

In line 5, page 7, strike out the word "hereafter."

In lines 8 and 9 of the same page insert the words "after the 1st day of July, 1855."

In lines 6 and 7, on page 8, insert the words "or private."

In lines 9 and 10, on the same page, insert the words "or while in transportation under bond from the port of entry to any other port in the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The bill was then, according to order, read the third time.

Mr. FULLER. I now move that the bill be put upon its passage.

The question was taken and agreed to; and the bill was passed.

Mr. FULLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF A PATENT.

Senate bill No. 151, entitled "An act for the relief of George G. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased," was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time by its title.

The SPEAKER. If no other disposition be ordered of this bill, it will be referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. HILL. I move that the bill be now put upon its passage.

The bill was then read from the Clerk's desk in extenso. It provides for the renewal, revival, and extension for fourteen years of a patent for the construction of cloth without spinning or weaving.

Mr. HILL. It is unnecessary, Mr. Speaker, to refer this bill to the Committee on Patents, inasmuch as I believe that that committee has already, at an early part of the session, had under consideration the petition of the persons whom this bill proposes to relieve, and reported favorably upon it. They reported a bill similar in its provisions, or rather identically the same, as the bill now on the table. That bill, so reported from the Committee on Patents, is on the Private Calendar, and has already been under consideration. I presume that if the House will pass a bill for the extension of the patent in question it will do so this morning.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to refer this subject to the Committee on Patents, who have already had it under consideration, and made a favorable report upon it. I will repeat what I before said, for the information of the House, that this bill is in relation to the extension of a patent for the construction of cloth without spinning or weaving. It is an important subject for the American community, and the Committee on Patents believed that the extension sought should be granted. I would say, also, for the information of the House, that this bill is similar in its character, and I believe is, word for word, the same, to that heretofore reported by one or other House of Congress. The matter has been frequently before different committees of both Houses of Congress, and it has invariably met with the favorable action of such committees—never with their unfavorable action. It has passed the Senate, now the second time, I believe, and was lost among the orders of the day here. It has passed this House, also, twice, and was lost in the unfinished business of the Senate.

I therefore move that the bill be put upon its third reading; and upon that motion I move the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HILL] will not press the matter to a vote under the previous question, without giving anybody an opportunity to say a word about it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would ask the Chair what the question is?

The SPEAKER. It is upon the demand of the gentleman from Kentucky for the previous question upon a bill of the Senate, extending a patent to a certain company in New York, for making cloth without weaving, &c.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I know the object of the bill, but I wish to know the names of the parties.

The SPEAKER. The bill is for the relief of George G. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I now understand it. That bill is wrong in its principle, and ought not to be sustained by this House. I can show to the House, and may do so, if necessary, at the proper time, that it ought not to receive their support. There is no good excuse for asking the extension of the patent, which the bill proposes.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been demanded, and discussion is not in order until that call is withdrawn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question, and I hope he will withdraw his demand.

Mr. HILL. I withdraw it.

Mr. JONES. If I understand this bill, it proposes to extend a patent which was originally granted for fourteen years, and which has since been extended, under the laws of Congress, for seven years longer.

Mr. HILL. That is the history of the case.

Mr. JONES. That makes twenty-one years for which, under the general laws, the patentees in this case have had the benefits of the patent.

For one, I doubt the propriety, if not the constitutionality of Congress, passing a special act for the benefit of a particular case. The Constitution provides that Congress shall have power "to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing, for limited times, to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries."

That vests in Congress, clearly and evidently, the power to prescribe, by general laws, how the benefits shall be secured to authors and inventors of their productions, and not to give Congress the power, in every isolated case, to go through the forms and expenses of legislating for an individual.

Sir, if general laws do not now give to authors and inventors a sufficient length of time to secure the benefit of their productions, in the name of common sense, let us change the general law, and authorize the Commissioner of Patents to extend the patent, when, in his opinion and judgment, the circumstances should require and justify that course; and thereby take this whole subject of the extension of patents from before the Congress of the United States. I think that is the proper course to be pursued, and then we shall by legislating—not for particular cases, or in conferring special favors—by general laws, without any special case in view to be benefited by it, and thus give all a fair opportunity of securing equal benefits from their labors.

I think this bill should go to the Committee of the Whole House. It is a private bill, and I make the motion so to refer it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not wish to occupy the attention of the House more than a moment at this time. I will content myself by simply saying that I have looked with some care into the merits of this case. It is the most plausible, in my opinion, of all the patent cases upon our docket; and yet I do not think it ought to receive the favorable consideration of the House. When the House shall feel disposed to enter upon its consideration, I may call their attention to one or two considerations connected with this matter, unless some one else shall see proper to do so.

NEW SERIES...No. 47.

I will only say now, that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is right. I am willing that the bill should be considered; and, although I have less objection to it than to many other bills for the extension of patents, yet I am satisfied that it ought not to pass. To discuss it at this time would be premature.

I understand, also, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania over the way [Mr. Grow] has the floor in Committee of the Whole upon the Indian appropriation bill, the general debate upon which closes at two o'clock to-day; and I would throw no obstruction in the way of going into Committee.

I trust this bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be there discussed. I call the previous question upon the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.]

If there are a majority in favor of the bill, they can pass it; but I think it ought to be referred.

Mr. HILL. I have not yet yielded the floor; and I do not yield it for the purpose of enabling the gentleman from North Carolina to move the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will withdraw the demand if the gentleman wishes to speak upon the subject.

Mr. HILL. It seems to me that the objections gentlemen have urged against the passage of this bill would have been obviated without any further explanation, if they had read the reports which have been made upon this subject heretofore; for we have done nothing more than to adopt the report which was made by the Committee on Patents during the Thirty-Second Congress in regard to it.

In reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, I have only to say, that if he will examine the reports which have been made upon the subject, he will see that if there be any proposition of this description to be indulged by the American Congress, it must be this one. These individuals first obtained a patent in 1826 for a very important process invented by them for manufacturing cloth without spinning or weaving; but so defective was their machinery, that they were unable to make their cloth salable to any considerable extent. They could not make it wide enough to command a favorable sale. And until 1846 their profits were nothing at all; and more than that, they sustained immense loss from the fact that the imperfect character of their machinery made it impossible to manufacture cloth of a character suitable for general use. They continued, however, to go on and improve that machinery until 1849, when they had so far perfected it as to enable them to make cloth of greater width, the sales of which were sufficient to defray the expenses of manufacture. And since 1852 they have manufactured cloth fifty, and, I believe, fifty-four inches wide—not perhaps of such a texture and finish as some gentlemen upon this floor would select for their own personal wearing apparel, but they have manufactured broadcloth as durable and nearly as fine as ordinary broadcloth, and of such a character as to be a very desirable article in market.

Since 1850 they have been making a little profit from the manufacture of the article; but, as I have before remarked, and as is shown by abundant proof, they had theretofore sustained immense losses from their experiments in perfecting their machinery; and now they have brought it to such a degree of perfection that they manufacture broadcloth for twenty-five or thirty per cent. less than the ordinary article, and much superior in durability, without spinning or weaving.

I present it, therefore, to the consideration of gentlemen of this House, whether it is not a matter of vast importance to the consumers of broadcloth in the country to be enabled to procure a superior article for twenty-five or thirty per cent. less than the price of ordinary cloth?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to interrupt the gentleman for the purpose of asking him a question. I want to know whether the Commissioner of Patents has examined this subject; and if so, whether he has already extended the patent as far as he has the power to do, or whether he has refused to extend it further?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. He has extended it twenty-one years, which is as long as he has the power to extend it.

Mr. HILL. The Commissioner of Patents has no power to extend it further. I can only repeat, what I have already said, that it is but a matter of justice for Congress to extend this patent, to enable the patentees to reimburse themselves for the immense losses they have sustained in perfecting their machinery. I look upon the matter as a great national affair. It is certainly a thing of great importance, that the price of so necessary an article as broadcloth should be reduced twenty-five or thirty per cent. less than that made by spinning and weaving.

Mr. INGERSOLL. This is a matter in which the interests of my constituents are involved. The report made by the Committee on Patents gives all the facts of the case, and I am sure will convince members that the bill ought to pass; and therefore I would ask that it be read. It is brief, and will occupy but a few minutes in its reading.

Mr. HILL. Let the Clerk read the report.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I want to see whether I correctly understand the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky. I understand him to say that the first patent was granted in 1826.

Mr. HILL. No, sir; but in 1836.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then it will run out in 1857. Under the last renewal there yet remain three years before the patent will expire.

Mr. HILL. I do not recollect the precise period at which the patent expires.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The patent was renewed in 1850, as will be perceived by reference to the report of the committee, and will expire in 1857. From 1850 up to this time the patentees, according to what has been said by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. HILL,] have been making large profits. I would like to know what these profits are, and how much they will be in 1857? Further, I would like to know how far it is proposed the patent shall be extended? Is it for fourteen years, or longer?

Mr. McNAIR. I understand that, at the present time, the expenditures of the patentees in the enterprise are $17,000 more than the receipts.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I understand differently.

Mr. HILL. It is my understanding that the small profits which they have made does not at all compensate them for the immense losses which they have sustained. The report embraces all the facts of the case, as has been remarked by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. INGERSOLL,] and I ask that it be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk then read the report.

Mr. HILL. The report just read was made in the Senate at the last session of Congress. The bill upon your table was fully and ably discussed in that body, when upon its passage. It passed finally, with but one dissenting voice. I am opposed to the bill being referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. We already have a similar bill reported from the Committee on Patents, which is now upon the Private Calendar, and if it goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union it will remain there during the balance of the session, and will be lost among the unfinished business, at the close of the session. I hope, therefore, that the bill will not be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but that it will be passed. I move the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he will not withdraw his demand for the previous question, as I promise to renew it. I will not occupy over ten minutes time.

Mr. HILL. I would be willing to oblige the gentleman, but gentlemen all around me are insisting upon a vote, and I cannot therefore withdraw my demand for the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move then to lay the bill upon the table, and upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I demand tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The question first in order is upon referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken; and the House refused to commit the bill.

The bill was then ordered to, and received its third reading.

Mr. HILL. I now move that the bill be put upon its passage; and upon that motion I ask the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time. I suppose that that motion is in order. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DEAN, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from North Carolina is not in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will remind the Chair that at this very session I brought to the notice of the Chair a decision on a similar point. The point made was this: The Chair will recollect it, for I made the same point myself some time since. I called the attention of the Chair to a decision, that upon a motion to reconsider, the previous question was exhausted. "You, Mr. Speaker, then decided that it was so."

The SPEAKER. That is true. The Chair makes no point of that sort. But it is also true that the demand for the previous question on the passage of the bill succeeded. And although it may be—and the Chair thinks it is—competent to reconsider the vote by which a bill is ordered to a third reading, yet the Chair thinks that a motion to reconsider is not debatable.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My object was to speak briefly on the subject.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the reverse of that decision was held in the Congress of which Mr. Cobb was Speaker. I recollect one case of the kind distinctly, where it was decided that it was in order to debate a motion to reconsider after the previous question was called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the motion is not debatable; and the only way to reach a point wherein it would be debatable, is on a motion to reconsider the vote, after the succeeding of the previous question. That is the decision of the Chair, and the Chair thinks it is a proper one under the rule.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question then recurring on the passage of the bill—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered—26 seconding the call, and 104 opposing it.

The roll was then called; and there were—yeas 107, nays 52; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Banks, Belcher, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dickinson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Elliott, Etheridge, Everhart, Failey, Franklin, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Harrison, Hendricks, Hill, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lilly, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, Matteson, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Furryear, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seymour, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hestor L. Stevens, Straub, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollinger—107.

YAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ashe, Barksdale, Bock, Brooks, Gaskie, Chastain, Churchwell, Clingman, Craige, Curtis, Dent, Eastman, Ellison, Fenton, Goode, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kuriz, Lane, Lyon, Macdonald, McQueen, Smith Miller, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Olds, Packer, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pringle, Ready, Rufin, Shaw, William Smith, Walker, Walley, Walsh, and Witte—52.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was just passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ORR. I move that the rules be now suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The debate on the Indian appropriation bill closes at two o'clock, and it is now within one hour of that time.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. ORR. For what purpose?

Mr. WARREN. I want to get leave to withdraw certain papers from the files of the House. The SPEAKER. What is the object of withdrawing them?

Mr. WARREN. I want to withdraw them for the purpose of returning them to the parties. Objection was made.

[Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, here reported, as correctly enrolled, bills of the following titles:

An act for the relief of the settlers upon lands reserved for railroad purposes; and Joint resolution relative to bids for provisions, clothes, and small-stores for the use of the Navy.

Which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker.]

Mr. WARREN. I wish to advise the House of the character of the papers I desire to withdraw. At an early period of the session I introduced a bill for the relief of one John Gossett, which was predicated upon two land warrants assigned to him, under a power of attorney, prior to the issuing of the warrants. Ascertaining that a bill for his relief cannot possibly be passed, his remedy is in the courts. I desire to withdraw the papers for the purpose of sending them to the petitioner, to enable him to institute his action to the courts.

No objection being made, leave was granted to withdraw the papers.

Mr. SKELTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present joint resolutions passed by the Legislature of New Jersey.

Mr. ORR. If they are not to be read, I do not object; but if they are, I do object, for I want to get into committee.

Mr. EASTMAN. I object.

Mr. ORR. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

And the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PHELPS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 46, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee last rose, they had under consideration House bill No. 46, and upon that bill the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] has the floor.

Mr. GROW said: The Committee on Indian Affairs have had under consideration the memorial of the Cherokee Indians residing in States east of the Mississippi river, praying the payment of money which they claim to be due them, under the treaty of the 29th of December, 1835, and the supplement thereto of the first of March, 1836; and that committee instructed me, at the proper time, to offer an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, for the payment of that claim, amounting to the sum of $92,625 18, with interest thereon from December 14, 1852, the time when the petition and papers were filed before Congress.

Knowing that we should be called upon to explain the merits of this claim, as well as the reasons for our action, and as that could not be done intelligibly to any gentleman unacquainted with the facts in a five-minute speech, and as general debate on this bill closes at two o'clock to-day, I have been forced to take this occasion to explain the amendment.

But for that fact, and the sense of duty which, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I owe to the appropriate business of the House, I should gladly have acceded to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] yesterday, and yielded to him the floor.

For a proper understanding of this claim, it is necessary briefly to review the history of the settlements and changes of the Eastern Cherokees for some years past.

The Cherokees originally occupied a territory covering a portion of the States of Tennessee, North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama. Up to 1809 that was their home. Then, under the permission of the President of the United States, such of them as chose to do so were permitted to emigrate to a settlement on the Arkansas and White river, in what is now the State of Arkansas. They continued to emigrate, as suited their own inclination and convenience, until 1817, when a treaty was formed with the Government of the United States, securing to them the right of settlement upon those rivers; and they continued to emigrate thither under the provisions of this treaty till 1828, when a new treaty was formed, granting them seven millions of acres of land west of the territorial limits of Arkansas, which were guaranteed and secured to them by the Government as a permanent home.

These seven million acres were granted for the purpose of inducing them to abandon their settlements on White and Arkansas rivers, to which many of them had removed since the permission of the President in 1809, and to settle west of the State limits of Arkansas, so as to avoid the troubles to which they had been exposed in Georgia, by being included within any territorial or State jurisdiction. From the time of the first emigration to Arkansas, the Cherokee Indians were known by the designation of Eastern and Western Cherokees—and this was the only division known in the tribe till the formation of the treaty of 1835. That emigration continued, and the relation of the tribe and the Government remained the same till 1830, when the State of Georgia extended her laws over the Indian territory within her limits. She caused the lands to be surveyed and sold, and the purchasers of the State went on, took possession, and ousted the Indians; and this state of quasi hostility continued with the whites and the Indians until 1835, when a treaty was formed with the Government of the United States, by virtue of which Congress agreed to pay the Cherokee nation $5,000,000 for "all their lands and possessions east of the Mississippi river;" and it was further stipulated that they were to remove within two years.

A supplement to that treaty was added, however, in 1836, by which the Senate agreed to pay $600,000 "to include the expense of their removal, and all claims of every nature and description against the Government of the United States, not otherwise expressly provided for;" thus making the treaty fund set apart by the General Government to be paid to the Cherokee nation for their lands and possessions, and for removal and spoliation, $5,600,000.

This treaty was made on the part of the Cherokees by certain men of the nation, in order to avoid expulsion by the State of Georgia, and forcible removal by the General Government. But John Ross, their chief, and leading spirit, refused to make any treaty, or to comply with the provisions of the one already made. He denounced the men who made it as traitors to their nation, in selling their homes and the graves of their fathers. Many of them he doomed to death; and that was the sentence he pronounced upon all who acquiesced in the treaty. He refused to comply with its stipulations; stood out in opposition to the Government, and would not remove; and, under his influence, a large part of the tribe took the same position, and were called the Ross party; while those who formed the treaty, and were ready in good faith to observe it, were called the Treaty party.

Well, sir, the two years allowed by treaty for their removal expired, and none had left save a portion of the treaty party. General Scott was sent by order of the Government to remove them, peaceably if he could, but if not, at the point of the bayonet. In 1838 General Scott went into the Indian country for the purpose of removing the Indians west of the Mississippi, according to the treaty which had been formed by the treaty party of the Cherokees. I hope gentlemen will bear in mind the different terms by which these different parties were known in order properly to understand the merits of this claim.

There were of the Eastern Cherokees the treaty party who made the treaty with the Government, and were ready to abide by its terms, a portion of whom had removed west to the Cherokee country set apart by the Government. Then there was the John Ross party, who were opposed to the treaty and to removal. The Western Cherokees were also divided by the treaty into two factions. The one, embracing those who had emigrated under the permission of the President in the first place, and subsequently under the treaties of 1817 and 1828, were called the "old settlers." Those who left the States and went west under the treaty of 1835, were called the treaty party west. Here, then, of the Western Cherokees there were the "old settlers," and the treaty party west. General Scott goes to remove the balance of the tribe east, being the Ross portion, which had refused to remove.

Let me here state a stipulation of the treaty of 1835. It was stipulated that the Cherokees were to sell to the United States all their lands and possessions east of the Mississippi river, for which the Government was to pay $5,000,000. But by the twelfth article of said treaty it is expressly provided, that—

"Those individuals and families of the Cherokee nation that are averse to a removal to the Cherokee country west of the Mississippi, and are desirous to become citizens of the States where they reside, and such as are qualified to take care of themselves and their property, shall be entitled to receive their due portion of all the personal benefits accruing under this treaty for their claims, improvements, and per capita."

Here, then, by this treaty, such of the Cherokees as preferred to remain in the States and become citizens, were entitled to all the benefits for their claims and improvements, and their per capita share of the money to be paid to the tribe. A number of these Cherokees have remained in the States under this provision of the treaty of 1835, and become citizens of the States. They have then complied with its terms, and they are the party in Congress to-day asking that their rights under the treaty shall be granted. They are the party that ask their per capita of the amount which the Government agreed to pay by the treaty of 1835. To explain the basis of their rights I shall refer to the subsequent treaty, its terms and conditions, and what has been done by the Government.

By the 8th article of the treaty of 1835:

"The United States also agree and stipulate to remove the Cherokees to their new homes, and to subsist them one year after their arrival there." * * *

"Such persons and families as, in the opinion of the emigrating agent, are capable of subsisting and removing themselves, shall be permitted to do so; and they shall be allowed in full for all claims for the same $20 for each member of their family; and in lieu of their one year's rations they shall be paid the sum of $33 33, if they prefer it."

Removal is then fixed by the treaty at $20 per head, and subsistence at $33 33 per head. These are the terms of the treaty; and the Cherokees now residing in the States claim that the Government could allow no greater sum than that to be deducted from the treaty fund. They claim that the Government can only take out of the $5,600,000 for removal and subsistence the sum of $53 33 per head.

But then the question arises, what has the Government allowed for removal and subsistence? And what was the reason for that allowance? General Scott was sent there, as I said before, in 1838, to remove the balance of these Indians. The Ross party refused to go. General Scott collected them together and was about to force their removal, according to his orders, at the point of the bayonet. A negotiation was then entered into between General Scott and John Ross, by which he agreed to permit Ross to remove the Cherokees at an allowance of $65 88 a head, with some incidental expenses, making it $65 90 per head, provided the removal of each company took but eighty days. But, in addition, he made this supplemental agreement, that if their removal took over eighty days, then the Government was to pay a proportional amount for the excess over the eighty days; and if they reached their new homes in less time, the allowance was to be proportionately less. Ross, however, took good care that none of his party should reach their new homes in less than eighty days, but some of them took one hundred and eighty-six, and as high as one hundred and eighty-nine days; for, under his arrangement with General Scott, which was afterwards ratified by the Government, he was to be allowed a proportional amount for every day exceeding eighty. So that instead of the removals costing $53 33 per head, as provided in the treaty of 1835, or $65 90, as estimated by General Scott in his agreement with Ross, it amounted to sums varying from $65 90 to $155 69, according to the number of days consumed by each detachment in their removal. The $65 90 per head was paid by the Government out of the appropriation of the 12th June, 1838, of $1,047,068. But the amount of the difference between $65 90 per head and the varying sums per head up to $155 69, was taken from the treaty fund, and thereby reducing the per capita under the treaty of 1835-'6. This is one of the grounds upon which this claim rests. In consequence of this agreement of General Scott with Ross, by which the terms of the treaty were changed, the Eastern Cherokees, who were no party to it, have been deprived of a portion of the per capita secured to them under the treaty of 1835-'6, and the 10th article of 1846.

The precise terms of the agreement of General Scott with Ross may be found in his answer to certain interrogatories of the attorney of the Cherokees, embodied in report of Mr. Harris, made August 27, 1842, No. 1093, of second session Twenty-Seventh Congress, volume 5 of Reports of Committees, and is in these words:

"The march of the several Indian detachments was averaged (by estimate) at eighty days, and on that estimate money was advanced to Mr. John Ross. If that estimate was found too great, Mr. Ross was to refund to the nation; and if too small, including the unavoidable delays mentioned above, it was understood and agreed that the subsistence, &c., for the excess of time on the road was to be paid by the Government out of the fund of the Cherokees."

Here, then, is a stipulation by General Scott to pay, as I said before, $65 90 per head for the removal and subsistence of these Indians with a varying amount according to the time consumed in their removal. Shall the Eastern Cherokees, acting under the treaty of 1835, be prejudiced by that stipulation? Are they bound by a subsequent arrangement, entered into by General Scott and John Ross, by which their treaty fund is to be absorbed for the removal and subsistence of the Indians, to a greater amount than is provided for by the treaty of 1835, under which they acted, and by which the Government is bound? Your Committee on Indian Affairs believe that no such subsequent arrangement by an individual of the Indian tribe and an officer of this Government, not acting in the capacity of a treaty-making power, can change or alter the treaty. Your committee believe that the Eastern Cherokees cannot be prejudiced by any such arrangement, and that this Government must abide by the treaty of 1835, made with them, and give them whatever rights are secured by that treaty. If the Government officer has been overreached by any chief of that tribe, it is not the fault of the Indians who are entitled to per capita under the treaty. What, then, are their rights under the treaty of 1835, for whatever they were at the time it was concluded, they remain the same to-day, so far as the Eastern Cherokees are concerned; for, by the 10th article of the treaty of 1846, which is the last and only treaty made with the Cherokees, or any part of them since the treaty of 1835-'6—

"It is expressly agreed that nothing in the foregoing treaty contained shall be so construed as in any manner to take away or abridge any rights or claims which the Cherokees now residing in the States east of the Mississippi river had, or may have, under the treaty of 1835 and the supplement thereto."

So it matters not what may be the terms and conditions of the treaty of 1846, as to any rights of the Cherokees remaining in the States east of the Mississippi; for they were not to be affected by it. But owing to the difficulties which had grown up among the Cherokees themselves, and the factions into which they were divided, it became necessary in 1846 to make that treaty in order to settle, if possible, these conflicts, and jarring interests among the Western Cherokees. And a treaty was then made by all sections and parties of the Cherokee people, including the old settlers West, the treaty party West, the John Ross party that were then West, and the treaty party East, or Cherokees remaining in the States. What were the conditions of that treaty, and how are the Cherokees now residing in the States affected by it in their rights and claims upon the Government? That treaty is final and conclusive, and all settlements under it a bar upon all Cherokees west of the Mississippi, and would be upon those east but for the tenth article. Whatever rights there were guaranteed to them under the treaty of 1835 were in no way changed or abridged by the treaty of 1846; but, on the contrary, they were readmitted and confirmed to them. So, in determining the rights of the Eastern Cherokees, it is not necessary to inquire into the terms and provisions of the treaty of 1846. But to prevent confusion of ideas, it may be proper to refer to it briefly.

By the ninth article of the treaty of 1846, it is stipulated that all sums paid for improvements, ferries, spoliations, removal and subsistence, and for various other purposes that it is not necessary here to enumerate—

"The aggregate of said several sums shall be deducted from the sum of $6,647,067; and the balance thus found to be due shall be paid over per capita in equal amounts to all those individuals, heads of families, or their legal representatives entitled to receive the same under the treaty of 1835, and the supplement of 1836, being all those Cherokees residing east at the date of said treaty and the supplement thereto."

By this article all sums paid for removal and subsistence, which included the enormous amounts under the agreement of General Scott with Ross, were to be deducted from the aggregate fund of $6,647,067. This sum is the amount of the original fund of $5,600,000, provided by the treaty of 1835-'6, added to the $1,047,067 appropriated the 12th of June, 1838, to cover expenses of removal. The wording of the act is:

"That the further sum of $1,047,067 be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full, for all objects specified in the third article of the supplementary articles of the treaty of 1835, between the United States and the Cherokee Indians, and for the further object of aiding in the subsistence of said Indians for one year after their removal west: Provided, That no part of the said sum of money shall be deducted from the $5,000,000 stipulated to be paid to the said tribe of Indians by said treaty."

By this treaty the fund is fixed at $6,647,067, from which is to be deducted all sums whatever paid by the Government for removal and subsistence, and other enumerated objects, and the balance is to be distributed, per capita, among all the Cherokees residing east at the time of the treaty of 1835 and 1836. The Eastern Cherokees have received their proportionate share of that sum, and would, like the Western Cherokees, be entitled to nothing more, but for the tenth article of the treaty of 1846. By the treaty of 1835 removal was fixed at $20, and subsistence at $33 33 per head, and the treaty fund from which they were to be subtracted, $5,600,000. By the treaty of 1846 the fund was $6,647,067, from which removal and subsistence were to be subtracted, at whatever amounts the Government had paid. To this arrangement all the Cherokees were parties, and bound by it, except the Eastern Cherokees, who were expressly excepted by the tenth article.

By this agreement of General Scott the removal and subsistence of these Indians amounted to the sum of $2,952,196 26, while by the treaty of 1835, allowing $53 33 per head, the amount would have been only $961,326 58. That is the amount for the removal of 18,026 Indians, the number removed, at the rate fixed by the treaty of 1835. Now, the Eastern Cherokees claim that that is the entire amount for subsistence and removal that can be taken from their fund under the treaties. The Government has paid all the money that they ever stipulated to pay. The whole fund was paid over—paid over in this way.

By the final settlement, February 27, 1851, all of the amount for subsistence and removal was added up, according to the stipulations of the ninth article of the treaty of 1846; and these amounts, together with the other sums enumerated, put together, and the total subtracted from the treaty fund of 1846. The Western Cherokees, therefore, have no wrong to complain of. The money they used in removal and subsistence was taken out of the general fund. But the Eastern Cherokees ought not to be protected in their rights, under the treaty of 1835, notwithstanding any settlement or laws made under the treaty of 1846, when the tenth article of that treaty reserves all their rights and claims under the treaty of 1835. The Western Cherokees, in addition to the treaty of 1846, are precluded from any further claim by the settlement of February 27, 1851, which is in these words:

"For the payment to the Cherokee nation, the sum of $724,603 37, and interest on the above sum, at the rate of seven per centum per annum, from the 12th day of June, 1838, until paid, shall be paid to them out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but no interest shall be paid after the 1st day of April, 1851, if any portion of the money is then left undrawn by the said Cherokees: Provided, however, That the sum now appropriated shall be in full satisfaction, and a final settlement of all claims and demands whatsoever of the Cherokee nation against the United States under any treaty heretofore made with the Cherokees. And said Cherokee nation shall, upon the payment of said sum of money, execute and deliver to the United States a full and final discharge of all claims and demands whatsoever on the United States, except for such annuities in money or specific articles of property as the United States may be bound by any treaty to pay to said Cherokee nation; and except, also, such moneys and lands, if any, as the United States may hold in trust for said Cherokees: And provided further, That the money appropriated in this item shall be paid in strict conformity with the treaty with said Indians of 6th August, 1846."

Here, then, is a final settlement under the treaty of 1846; and with whom? With the Cherokee nation, and not with the Cherokees, who have abandoned their tribal character, and have become citizens of the States, under the treaty of 1835. Individual Cherokees, who were citizens of States east of the Mississippi river, at the date of the passage of the law, are not barred by it, but are in good faith still entitled to their proportionate share of all moneys justly due under the treaty of 1835-'36, before it was modified by the treaty of 1846. This construction is sustained by the second proviso:

"And provided further, That the money appropriated in this item shall be paid in strict conformity with the treaty with said Indians, of 6th August, 1846."

The Cherokee nation, with John Ross at their head, had removed to the Western Cherokee country. He took with him not only his branch of the tribe, but their laws and government, and planted them upon the Cherokee country west, secured by a former treaty. They were then the Cherokee nation proper, and are such to-day. The Cherokees still residing in the States have become citizens of the States in which they reside. Here was a final and conclusive settlement with the Cherokee nation. The Western Cherokees, then, have no claim upon this fund, and no claim upon the Government.

Then what is there due to the Cherokees still residing in the States? The Senate of the United States was constituted umpire upon two points which were submitted to them, and their decision was to be final, and become a part of the treaty. One question submitted to them was, whether subsistence shall be charged at a greater rate than $33 33 a head? By the report of the Senate committee that sum was to be deducted from the treaty fund, and no more. They found, at that time, a balance due to the Cherokees of $627,230 40. They also found due to them $96,999 42 for certain contingent expenses, which were improperly charged to the general treaty fund, paid to the various agents of the Government connected with the removal of the Indians. For the United States, under the fifth article of the supplement to treaty of 1835, agreed to pay all the expenses of these negotiations. The Cherokees contended that the amount expended by the United States for agents was not within the meaning of that article of the treaty. In that belief the Senate committee concurred, and they reported that the sum of $96,999 42 as due them on that account, being an improper charge on the treaty fund.

These two sums taken together make the amount of $724,603 37 as due to the whole Cherokees; to which should be added $189,422 76, overcharged for subsistence, making the whole amount due at that time, $914,026 13. The Cherokees residing in the States have received their proportionate share of that amount. But they claim a proportionate share of the difference between the amount of subsistence, counted at $33 33 per head, and the amount paid to John Ross, under the arrangement with General Scott. This they claim under the treaty of 1835. What, then, were their rights under that treaty and the supplement thereto? Whatever they were, they remained unaffected by the treaty of 1846.

The amount the Government agreed to pay by the treaty of 1835, and the supplement thereto, was..... $5,600,000 00

The expenditures provided for in the 15th article of said treaty that are to be deducted from this sum, the items of which are given on the third page of the Senate's report, amount to..... $4,028,653 45

Which, being deducted from the treaty fund, leaves for per capita distribution among all the Cherokees, east and west..... $1,571,346 53

But the Cherokees east, have received their proportionate share of..... $914,026 13

Which, deducted, would leave, but for treaty of 1846..... $657,320 40 to be divided per capita among all the Cherokees. But as the Cherokees east, by the tenth article of the treaty of 1846, were not in any way to be affected in their rights and claims under the treaty of 1835, by anything contained in the treaty of 1846, they are therefore entitled to their proportionate share of the $657,320 40; to which should be added $22,212 76, the amount charged for Cherokee committee, and which was improperly deducted from the treaty fund, as it is not one of the items specified in the fifteenth article of the treaty, by which the kind of expenditure is fixed that is to be deducted from said fund. By the supplemental article to the treaty of 1835, $600,000 was agreed upon, "to include the expense of removal and all claims of every nature and description against the Government of the United States not herein otherwise expressly provided for." An amount for removal and spoliation, exceeding $600,000, could not, therefore, be deducted from the treaty fund. But the cost of removing the eighteen thousand and twenty-six Indians, being the number removed, at $20 per head, amounts to the sum of..... $360,520 00

And there was charged for spoliation, 264,894 09

Making in all, for removal and spoliation..... $625,414 09 being $25,414 09 greater than the amount provided for in the treaty, and therefore improperly deducted from the treaty fund, and which amount should therefore be added to the $657,320 40, making the whole amount justly due to the Cherokees under the treaty of 1835, $704,947 16, of which the Cherokees east would be entitled to their proportionate share; the Cherokees west being concluded by the treaty of 1846. Divide this sum equally between sixteen thousand two hundred and thirty-one, this being the number of Cherokees both east and west by the census of 1851, under which the $914,026 13 was paid per capita, and it would give each person $43 43 per head. But the Western Cherokees have no further claim to per capita, being concluded by the treaty of 1846 and the final settlement of February 27, 1851; and the number of Cherokees east by the census aforesaid, who are entitled to per capita, being two thousand one hundred and thirty-three, at the rate of $43 43 per head, would give them in the aggregate, as their proportionate share of this amount still due, the sum of $92,625 19, which we have reported with interest from the 14th of December, 1852, to the time of payment.

We have reported interest for this reason: The question was submitted to the Senate, whether the Government should pay interest from the time the money became due. The Senate agreed to allow interest at five per cent. from that time; but your committee did not feel authorized to discontinue the practice which they believe to be a sound one, of refusing to pay interest upon all claims against the Government until the proofs and papers are completed and filed. They have, therefore, reported in favor of allowing interest from the time the papers were filed in this House, and referred to a committee. They thought proper to allow interest from that time, because, if the Government fails to dispatch its business and to liquidate its debts, the honest claimant ought not to suffer therefor.

Sir, the principal points upon which I have touched in explaining this claim are contained in the report the Indian Committee instructed me to make. Should gentlemen desire to consult it, I will call their attention to some typographical errors which it contains. On the 2d page, 1st article of treaty of 1846, should be 10th; on the 3d page $757,320 40, should be $657,320 40, and "captations" should be "spoliations;" and on the 9th page $1,047 67, should be $1,047,067.

Sir, if there be any tribe, or any portion of a tribe of Indians, with whom this Government should faithfully keep all its guarantees, the Cherokees, now remaining in the States, are such a people. They entered into a treaty with your Government, against the remonstrance of the chief of the tribe and a large portion of its members, to save themselves from a forcible removal from the land of their fathers. They entered into it after Georgia had extended the jurisdiction of her laws over them, and turned them out of their homes. They entered into this arrangement, having ever stood the firm and the fast friends of the white man. They marched with General Jackson and our countrymen in defense of the country against the hostile Creeks. They have ever warred on the side of the Government, and have been true to its citizens. At the special investigation and request of the Government they came forward and signed a treaty, to save a conflict between the State of Georgia and the General Government. Georgia was claiming that the Government should remove the Indians out of her limits. She was asserting her jurisdiction over all the territory within her limits as she had a right to do. The Government then solicited these men to enter into the treaty. For so doing death was their lot. Many fell by the hand of the Ross party. Those who now remain in the States dare not go into the Western Cherokee country. These are the men who claim justice at your hands. They only ask the fulfillment of treaty stipulations, and certainly there can be no hesitancy in granting to them whatever rights are secured to them under Government treaties.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not intend taking the floor if any gentleman desired to address the committee during the time remaining previous to the hour at which this debate terminates. But as there are only a few minutes left, which other gentlemen seem disinclined to occupy, I will say a few words in relation to the amendment which has just been argued by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grow.] Before, however, I approach that branch of the observations which I intend to submit, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the amendments of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. By reading the document, No. 38, which was laid upon our tables on yesterday, it will be discovered that the appropriations contained in those amendments are mostly intended to authorize the negotiation of treaties between the Government of the United States and various Indian tribes in Oregon, Washington, New Mexico, and Utah Territories. I am willing to admit that I am not so well advised as my friend from South Carolina [Mr. Orr] in regard to the propriety and necessity of these appropriations—the estimates having been sent to the committee of which he is chairman, and I not having known of or had an opportunity to examine them; but I propose, however, to submit to the committee a few thoughts in relation to them.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, from the information contained in the documents to which I have referred, that the treaties here proposed to be made are for the acquisition of territory which we do not now need, and will not, in all probability, for a quarter or half century to come. We propose to mark out and restrict the boundaries of Indian tribes who, wild and roaming, know nothing about treaties or the obligations growing out of them, and to acquire, by this attempt at restricting the wild Indians, territory not demanded, or likely soon to be, by the public interest. For that reason, it seems to me, this committee ought to consider well the policy, the tendency of the propositions, and what it intends to do, before it acts. These are grave and important propositions, extending, and, as I think, complicating, our Indian system and relations—assuming responsibilities with, and incurring obligations towards, the wild and roving Indian who is entirely beyond the most remote borders of our settlements.

Some few years since, many treaties were made with the Indians in the Territory of Oregon. Those treaties were so improperly made that they have been either rejected by the Senate, or, for some reason, they have not been ratified and agreed to. The proposition to negotiate treaties with the Indian tribes in Oregon, I have no doubt, is, to some extent, right and proper; and the same may be true, to a limited extent, in relation to the Indians in Washington, New Mexico, and Utah. It appears to me that an appropriation of money is not needful for the purpose of making treaties with those wild Indians whose haunts and roving grounds are far beyond where the white man ever goes, and who do not infest the routes to our distant States and Territories; and especially is this objection well taken to the talk which is proposed to be had with the Blackfeet, Grosventres, and other wild tribes of the mountains. It does seem to me that an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of bringing together those wild, harmless, and scattered tribes, with the view to a "talk" with them, is an expenditure of money not demanded by the public interest.

Mr. ORR, (interrupting.) One of the objects of holding this council, is for the purpose of trying to secure, if possible, a permanent peace between these Blackfeet and other wild tribes, and the semi-civilized Indians in Washington and Oregon. I will state, further, that these Blackfeet Indians are constantly making incursions on the whites, and assailing the emigrant trains going to Oregon. They roam from latitude fifty-two or fifty-three, in the British possessions, down to the line of New Mexico; they traverse that whole region of country.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, sir, I do not so understand the facts in relation to that tribe; and unless the gentleman from South Carolina has reliable information on the subject, I must still be permitted to doubt the accuracy of his history. They roam high up on the Missouri river, beyond the junction of the Yellow Stone, and thence unto the mountains, and never come so far south as the routes of our emigrant trains.

But, sir, I pass from this branch of the subject for the purpose of presenting some views in relation to the amendment which has been urged by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grow,] although I labor under the inconvenience and disadvantage of not having had access to the documents and papers which present that claim in its true light. It is true the gentleman made a report on the subject from the Committee on Indian Affairs, but that report was only laid on our tables yesterday evening. It involves an examination of some half dozen treaties, reports, and statutes, and it is not a very reasonable supposition that it could be, in one short evening, properly investigated and understood by any gentleman. Nevertheless, I think I know enough about it to show that the claim ought not to be agreed to and allowed by this committee.

This claim is predicated upon and grows out of the treaty of December, 1835. We had negotiated many treaties with the Cherokees previous to that time, but the treaty of 1835 is the beginning, I believe, of this claim. By that treaty, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] has made extensive reference, the Government of the United States agreed to pay to the Cherokee Indians, both west and east, (for in our treaties with them they were regarded as but one tribe,) $5,000,000 for their lands east of the Mississippi river. The whole consideration of the purchase, as originally made in that treaty, was $5,000,000 for their entire possessions east. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has argued to show that, by that treaty, we also bound ourselves to pay for their removal west and one year's subsistence. In that he is mistaken; no such provision is to be found in that treaty. On the contrary, it, in express terms, provides that the expenses of removal and subsistence shall be paid by the tribe, and to be deducted from the treaty fund. The gentleman says he does not controvert the statement I have made.

Mr. GROW. I did not intend to argue that the expenses of the removal and subsistence of the Indians should come out of the $5,000,000, but out of the $600,000 which were appropriated by a supplementary treaty.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman does not seem to understand me. I have not as yet said anything about the supplementary treaty of 1836. I say that the treaty of December, 1835, gave $5,000,000 to the Indians for their possessions East, and also expressly provided that the fund thus created should pay the expenses of removal and subsistence of the Indians. Is there any doubt upon that point? If so, allow me to read from the report of the Indian Committee of the Senate, which was adopted by the Senate, in which the same fact is stated. But the gentleman attempts to shelter himself under the provisions of the treaty of 1836. Let us see what additional light that treaty sheds upon this subject? What was the treaty of 1836? About the time of the ratification of the treaty of 1835, the Ross party of the Cherokee Indians filed a protest against its ratification, and that protest was before the Senate at the time of their action upon it. Nevertheless, the Senate ratified it.

In view, however, of the fact that the Indians were dissatisfied, and believed that they had been misunderstood by the Government of the United States; and having maintained, as they doubtless believed, that the expenses of their removal and subsistence should have been included and provided to be paid by the United States in the treaty of 1835, a supplementary treaty was made between the same tribe of Indians and the United States in 1836. In that supplementary treaty the United States agreed, without any additional consideration whatever, to pay $600,000 in addition to the $5,000,000 provided for in the treaty of 1835, which sum was intended to cover, as far as its amount would go, the expenses of their removal and spoliation, yet making no provision for their subsistence West.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The hour at which it was agreed by the House yesterday that general debate upon this bill should cease has now arrived.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose I am entitled to an hour to close the debate, but do not propose to occupy an hour. I hope to get through my remarks in much less time.

This claim, Mr. Chairman, is important for two considerations: First, because of the amount involved in it; and, secondly, the principle upon which it rests; for if we pass this amendment we thereby devolve upon ourselves the obligation to pay the Cherokees west their proportion of the $704,000, out of which we are now called upon to pay $43 33 per capita to that part of the tribe remaining east; those west being entitled to the same per capita allowances as those east. It will not do for my friend from Pennsylvania to tell me that they are precluded by treaty, or that they are precluded by settlement, unless we paid them the money; if we ever owed them the money, and have not paid it, we should do so now; and if the gentleman insists that the Cherokees west are precluded, I will show him that the Cherokees east have been precluded by the same treaty, the same settlement, and the same law, fully and conclusively. So that if we argue that we are to refuse to one branch of the tribe their share of the $704,000, the same argument will deny it to the other branch. If we allow the Cherokees east to come in for a share, we must, on every principle of fairness and common honesty, allow the Cherokees west to do the same; for if the amount ($704,000) is due at all, it is due to the Cherokee nation, embracing those west as well as east. I ask gentlemen upon what principle they would allow it to the one branch of the tribe and refuse it to the other? for if the debt was ever due it was a debt in which all were interested; and if it has never been paid they are all now entitled.

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to correct him?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir. I am willing to be interrupted and corrected if I am in error. I want the facts to come out. I have no wish to defeat a just debt; and if this can be made to appear to me as just, I will at once cease my opposition to it.

Mr. GROW. This is the reason why I think that the Cherokees east are not precluded, and that the Cherokees west are: The Cherokees west are bound by the treaty of 1846, and by the subsequent treaty of 1849. They are bound by the terms and conditions of these treaties. The Government have carried out and fulfilled on their part these terms and conditions. The Indians cannot come in afterwards and make claims. But in this treaty, which binds the western Cherokees, there is an article—the tenth—which contains an express provision to the effect, that the rights of the eastern Cherokees, under the treaty of 1835, are not to be affected by it. That is the reason why I contend that one part of the Cherokee nation is precluded, and that the other is not precluded; because the same treaty whose provisions include the eastern Cherokees exclude the western.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am satisfied the gentleman is laboring under an error; and if he will give me his attention I think I will satisfy him when I come to that branch of my argument, that the eastern Cherokees were as much precluded by that treaty settlement as the Cherokees west. The gentleman, in the hurry of reply to me, stated, that the treaty of August, 1846, was made with the Cherokees west. In that he is also mistaken; that treaty was made with the entire tribe; and its obligations, provisions, and duties were effectual alike upon all the Cherokees east and west. The gentleman contends that the tenth article of the treaty of 1846 reserved certain rights to the Cherokees east, upon which he bases this claim. I hope to be able to show him that the reservations in that article apply to an entirely different thing, and never were intended to admit the claim of one branch of the tribe to a share of debt due the entire tribe, and deny to the balance their share in that debt.

In pursuing this subject further, we find, that in 1836, as I have already stated, in order to quiet and pacify the public mind of the nation in relation to the treaty of 1835, which had been made by the United States with what they contended was a minority of their tribe, what did the Government do? Although the treaty expressly provided that the Indians should pay for their own removal, subsistence, and spoiliations, the Government of the United States agreed to give them $600,000, which was to cover, as far as it would go, the expenses of removal, and the spoiliations the Indians had committed, and which the Government had agreed to pay, and deduct the amount from the treaty fund. This $600,000 was a donation—a gratuity. No obligation rested upon the Government to make it. No consideration passed from the tribe or any part of it; it was given upon the principle that always has and always should actuate this Government, in dealing with the Indian tribes; that is, to be not only just but liberal, to give too much rather than too little.

I do not object to this principle of action; on the contrary, I hold, that in dealing with the Indians it is right and proper that we should so act as to render it certain that they receive kindly usage. We owe it to them as well as ourselves to do so; and if I cannot show this committee that we have dealt with them in that manner I will abandon my opposition to this amendment. The treaty of 1836, although giving what the Government understood the Cherokees as then contending for, failed to produce a permanent quietude in the nation. For a time things were calm; but soon discontent was again in their minds. It was found that the expense of removal and subsistence was much greater than had been supposed. What was then done? In 1838 Congress passed a law, by which was appropriated $1,047,067, for the purpose of further aiding in the removal and subsistence of those Indians. This sum was appropriated by Congress upon the same principle of indulgence towards the Indians that had so prominently marked our previous intercourse with them. Without any obligation, legal, moral, or otherwise, Congress appropriated that sum, for the purpose of quieting the Indians, and reconciling them to their removal.

Let us proceed further in the history of this transaction. Conflicting opinions still existed, and angry feelings on the part of many of the Indians; and in 1846, after all these provisions which have been mentioned, after all these donations, (for all appropriations after 1835 were mere donations,) another treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Indians, east and west, was concluded, which was intended, and so expressed, to be a final adjustment of all the difficulties between these tribes and the Government. That treaty rectified all the Government had done which the Indians alleged to be wrong, but for fear some further cause of dissatisfaction might afterwards exist, it was agreed that the Senate of the United States should say what the Indians were entitled to or should have.

In pursuance of this provision, the Second Auditor and the Second Comptroller of the Treasury were appointed to examine, adjust, and report the true state of the accounts between the Government and the Cherokees, including those east as well as west. They were to make a fair adjustment, and they did make it, and the gentleman has appended it to his report. In 1849, after the treaty of 1835 had been ratified for fourteen years; after the Government had given the Indians, in 1836, $600,000; after the Government again, in 1838, had given them $1,047,000; after the Government had, in 1846, bestowed additional liberalities upon them, the Second Auditor and the Second Comptroller, upon the liberal principles of adjustment indicated in the various treaties and acts of Congress, and under the direction of the Senate, reported that the Government should pay them $627,603. The Indians took exceptions to a class of items embraced in the report of the Second Auditor and Second Comptroller, and charged to the treaty fund, amounting in all to about $96,000. These items were required by the treaty to be paid out of the treaty fund. I presume the gentleman from Pennsylvania will hardly controvert that. Notwithstanding, the Government gave up the $96,000, which, added to the amount reported, made the entire balance then due to or claimed by the Cherokees, including those east and west, to $724,000; and in 1851 Congress appropriated that sum in full settlement and final closing of all matters with the entire Cherokee tribe, including all its parts or factions.

“For payment to the Cherokee nation, the sum of $724,603 37, and interest on the above sum, at the rate of five per centum per annum, from June 12, 1838, until paid, shall be paid to them out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but no interest shall be paid after April 1, 1851, if any portion of the money is then left undrawn by the said Cherokees: Provided, however, That the sum now appropriated shall be in full satisfaction and a final settlement of all claims and demands whatsoever of the Cherokee nation against the United States, under any treaty heretofore made with the Cherokees. And the said Cherokee nation shall, on the payment of said sum of money, execute and deliver to the United States a full and final discharge for all claims and demands whatsoever on the United States, except for such annuities in money or specific articles of property as the United States may be bound by any treaty to pay to said Cherokee nation, and except, also, such moneys and lands, if any, as the United States may hold in trust for said Cherokees: And provided further, That the money appropriated in this item shall be paid in strict conformity with the treaty with said Indians of August 6, 1846.”

That is the act of 1851. The Indians east and west agreed to its provisions; they claimed no more; they received their portions under that, and gave their full receipt against all other claims; and that is, or should be, on file in the Department now; and I regret the gentleman did not let us see it as a part of this transaction. The Indians were then satisfied, and I have no doubt they are satisfied now; they claimed no more; they had received all they demanded; why was this claim not presented or thought of then? Not a word was said about it. Every one thought the matter was closed, and this is an after-thought.

Mr. GROW. The gentleman's statement is not to be wondered at. This statement was made just as the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate were about to make their report. Mr. SEBASTIAN said that the committee had not time then to consider it.

Mr. HOUSTON. That fact is not in Mr. SEBASTIAN's report. No mention is made of it. I do not receive the gentleman's statement. I do not question his veracity; but we have the papers before us furnished by the gentleman's report, and no such fact is in it. I reassert, then, what I have already said, and I speak from the documents. Of course I cannot go into private declarations or private history just brought up as the matter is being disposed of.

It is said by the gentleman that the Government should pay subsistence for one year after the Indians removed west, notwithstanding the treaty of 1835 expressly says the contrary; yet it is amusing to see how easily gentlemen argue themselves into an opinion, or arrive at a conclusion they desire to attain. In Mr. SEBASTIAN's report, speaking of the amount that should be allowed for subsistence, and whether the Government or the treaty fund should pay it, I find a paragraph or two which I beg permission to read. His entire argument, as well as the express language of the treaty, says the treaty fund should pay it; yet he very promptly determines that the Government should do it. He says:

"In the consideration of this question the committee have found great difficulty in coming to a just conclusion. The artificial manner in which the treaty of 1835 was drawn, its ambiguity of terms, the variety of construction placed upon it, have led to great embarrassment in arriving at the real intention of the parties. Nor can much additional light be found in the interpretations which it has since received. Upon the whole, the committee are of opinion that the charge should be borne by the United States.

"The committee entertain no doubt but that by the strict construction of the treaty of 1835, the expense of a year's subsistence of the Indians after their removal west was a proper charge upon the treaty fund. It was so understood by the Government at the time; and as such, was enumerated among the expenditures to be charged to that fund, in the fifteenth article of the treaty. In the original project of a treaty which was furnished to the commissioner empowered to treat with the Indians, this item was enumerated among the expenditures, investments, and payments, to be provided for in its several articles, and which made up the aggregate sum of $5,000,000 to be paid for the Cherokee country.

The gentleman says that the Cherokees west are precluded from receiving anything further; yet he makes out, in his report, a balance of $704,000, which he says ought to have been distributed among all the Cherokees east and west, but in making up that indebtedness he has to go behind all the treaties; he has avoided the effect of the supplemental treaty of 1836; he avoids the treaty of 1846; he avoids the effect of the law of 1838; he avoids the effect of the settlement made by the Second Comptroller and the Second Auditor in 1849; he avoids the force and effect of the law of 1851, and the receipts of the claimants. After the Cherokees east have had all the benefits to be derived from these various treaties and laws, he goes back to the treaty of 1835, and attempts to put a construction on it by which those settlements are to be reopened, and a sum of $704,000 more found to be due.

The gentleman says that the reason the Cherokees west are not entitled to their share of this $704,000 is, that they are precluded by the treaty of 1846, while the treaty of 1846 does not preclude the Cherokees east. Let us look to that point, and see whether it does or not. Here is what the gentleman relies upon:

"It is expressly agreed that nothing in the foregoing treaty contained shall be so construed as in any manner to take away or abridge any rights or claims which the Cherokees now residing in States east of the Mississippi river had or may have under the treaty of 1835 and the supplement thereto."

Now I ask this committee, as fair-minded gentlemen—I put it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself—what reason was there, what propriety, what justice would there have been in a treaty that would exclude one branch of the tribe from its part of the fund, justly due to the entire tribe, and admit the other? Can this committee be induced to believe that the Government of the United States intended to shut out the Cherokees west from a fair participation in money that was actually due them? No, sir, it was intended to shut out the whole tribe, because the Government knew that nothing more was due them, and that they had already received three or four millions more than had been stipulated in the original treaty by which they agreed to surrender their possessions. The tenth article reserving their rights applies to those Indians who were allowed to remain in the country. Under the treaty of 1835 they were allowed, if they did not choose to go west, to stay in the States east and become citizens; and, if they did so remain, they were to have their share of the treaty fund, per capita, and were also to have their claims and improvements; and, under certain circumstances, to have preemptions to one hundred and sixty acres of land. Those are the rights reserved by the tenth article of the treaty of 1846. The Government never intended to give those remaining east an unjust advantage of those remaining west, and especially if, in doing so, it should repudiate a debt which the gentleman says is justly due them. If it did, the Government would be worse than a plunderer; if it allowed such advantages, and under such circumstances, especially when you find that the true object of the Government was to remove all of the Cherokees west.

The policy of the Government, and the object of the treaty, were, that they should all go west. The Government did not desire that any of them should remain east. And if it did not desire them to stay east, why give them bounties to do so? Why give advantages to those who did stay and violate the policy of the Government? The policy of the Government, as I have before remarked, was to remove the Indians west. That was the object of the treaty of 1835, and of the supplemental treaty of 1836, and of 1846, and of the various laws to which I have referred. The position and argument of the gentleman stultify the Government, and imply a charge against it of dishonesty in its settlement with the western Cherokees. It is a mistake; the gentleman's hypothesis is unreasonable, and I am sure must be founded in error.

They had the right, under the treaty of 1835, to remain and become citizens, under certain circumstances, when they chose to do so. They were entitled, if they did remain, to their share of the treaty fund—their claims and improvements—and they were entitled to become preemptions to one hundred and sixty acres of land. All these rights and privileges were intended to be preserved to the Indians that remained east. It is true that the Senate struck out that part of the treaty giving them preemption. It is equally true that the tenth article of the treaty of August, 1846, was intended to protect the rights of these Indians remaining east—such rights as were given them under the twelfth article of the treaty of 1836, and no more. I say this, because I cannot suppose that the Government of the United States would attempt to disfranchise and cast off the Indians who had gone west, in pursuance of the treaty as well as the policy and desire of the Government—that it would exclude them from their share of money justly due them. The Executive, as well as the legislative department of the Government, has uniformly put a construction upon those treaties entirely different from the one the gentleman from Pennsylvania now attempts to give them.

But the gentleman says that the Committee on Indian Affairs reported favorably last year. I do not know how far that may be correct, for I have not looked at their report. I have not had time to do so. If the committee did so report, that does not alter the facts of the case, nor would it give merit to a claim otherwise destitute of it. I take the case as it stands upon its own merits, and examine the facts as I find them in the documents.

There is another thing intimately connected with this investigation to which I wish for a moment to advert. The gentleman from Pennsylvania assumes that the Indians west are precluded by the treaty of 1846, and by the law of 1851, whilst the others are not. What is there in the law of 1851 that applies to the Cherokees west, that does not apply with equal force and effect to those east?

Mr. GROW. I will tell the gentleman from Alabama what the difference is. The whole phraseology of the law, and the proviso appended to it, are to the effect that the Cherokees remaining in the States are citizens of the States in which they reside, and they do not belong to the Cherokee nation, or form any part of it.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is certainly mistaken. If they wish to become citizens of the United States, under the treaty of 1835, they have to comply with certain prerequisites which are specified in the treaty. There was a committee appointed, with John Ross at its head, who were to make a report showing who were entitled to citizenship under the provisions of the treaty—who were capable of taking care of themselves and their property. I have a right to say that no such report was ever made, for I have never been able to find it. The gentleman does not pretend that there is such a report; hence I have a right to infer that none was made. Then they are not citizens, in the sense of the treaty, and cannot be until they conform to its requirements; but they are a part of the tribe of Cherokee Indians. They have not complied with the treaty.

Mr. CHASTAIN. Many of them have.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, Mr. Chairman, I pretend to have no personal knowledge on this point, and I will not say, otherwise than I have already stated, that none have complied with the treaty of 1835. It is possible I may be wrong, but I think not. I speak of the Indians in the way in which I am satisfied they exist. With a very few exceptions, the Cherokees exist now as a tribe. A part of them are separated from the great body of the tribe, which went west; yet they are a part of it, never having complied with the provisions of the treaty of 1835, and become citizens of the United States, except in a very few cases, of which I am not advised.

Well, Mr. Chairman, another thing: This claim, at best, comes in a very questionable shape. It comes in after the most indulgent action of the Government towards the Indians; after their demands and claims of all kinds growing out of the treaty of 1835 had been fully investigated, and the balance paid over to them, and with which they were well satisfied. Not only has there been a thorough investigation of all claims by the committee of the Senate, which was favorably disposed towards them; not only have all these indulgences been exercised towards them by the Government of the United States, but their full receipt and acquittance is now on file (or should be) in the proper Department against this very claim.

Mr. CHASTAIN. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I have interrupted the gentleman in order to set him right in relation to the Cherokees residing east. Now I desire to state that all the Cherokees who are residing east at this time are recognized by the laws of the States in which they live as citizens of such States. "They have been recognized as citizens. A number of them vote. Some of them do not; and pay no attention to these things. In North Carolina, too, where a large portion of these Cherokees reside, they have given them a permit to remain on the lands which they have purchased. In the State of Georgia, many of them are permitted to come and vote; and they are, many of them, as respectable citizens as any within the State.

Mr. HOUSTON. How many of them are there in Georgia?

Mr. CHASTAIN. I cannot say how many. I suppose there are fifty-two or fifty-three in my district.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Georgia speaks of fifty-two or three Indians; but this amendment speaks of between two and three thousand. It is competent for the States of Georgia and Alabama to prescribe the qualifications of their own voters; this Government does not say who shall vote. If Georgia sees fit to say that an Indian shall vote, it has the right to say so; hence the Cherokees of which he speaks may be entitled to vote in his State, under and by authority of its laws, and yet not have complied with the terms of the treaty of 1835. To enable a Cherokee to lose his tribal character under that treaty, and claim the rights conferred by it, he must have complied with its requirements and stipulations.

But I will go further. Admit all this to be true, when we find that in 1851 the Government of the United States pays every cent that is claimed, and even pays $96,000, which the Auditor and the Controller reported against these Indians because they were dissatisfied with that report; and when everything that could be scraped up from 1835 to 1851 was paid, should we, under the circumstances which surround this claim, without any sufficient evidence to sustain it, should we vote a further sum to those Indians? Now, I ask the gentleman why he has not consulted the Indian department on this subject? I ask him why he has not consulted the Government, which has this matter in its charge, and which has every inclination to befriend the Indian—if I may be allowed to form an opinion from the facts developed in this case—why not have allowed us the benefit of the information which should be on file there? These facts present at least a strong prima facie case against the amendment, and makes a thorough investigation necessary.

Mr. GROW. Lest there should be a false impression in the committee, I would state to the gentleman that I have consulted the Indian Department.

Mr. HOUSTON. Exactly; and where is the information obtained? It has not been submitted to this committee. I speak from the documents furnished by the gentleman, upon which he desires that we should allow this claim. The Indians have given their receipt and acquittance in full against this claim. The Cherokees east have done so; they received their part of the sum given in 1851; they claimed, as a part of the tribe under that law, and have received, and I ask the gentleman if this is a bar? He refers to this fact as creating a bar to further claims. He says that the law of 1851 bars the Cherokees west. Why, then, does it not bar those east. In its terms it applies to those east as well as west; it was so intended; all were spoken of as the Cherokee tribe. Those east acknowledged they were of the tribe, by accepting its terms and receiving its benefits.

Mr. GROW. Because they are not a part of the nation.

Mr. HOUSTON. Not a part of the nation! Did they not receive a part of the $724,000 appropriation in 1851? Certainly they did. That law appropriated the money for the Cherokees, and they so received it, and it is too late for them to deny their tribal character. I repeat, the appropriation was to the nation; they claimed as a part of the nation, received, and receipted for it. They are a part of the tribe whenever money is to be distributed; but when restrictions are to be enforced, they are citizens of the States. That will not do. They were treated with in 1846 as of the tribe, and were so dealt with in the report of 1849. In the Senate's action in 1850 they were treated as of the tribe, and the same in 1851; yet the gentleman says they were not restricted by the treaty of 1846, because they were not of the tribe. It is very singular that they were not restricted by the treaty of 1846, or by the law of 1851; yet continued to receive benefits under both, as a part of the tribe.

Mr. ORR, (interrupting.) The gentleman labors under a misapprehension. In the treaty itself there is an express clause reserving to these Indians in the east all the rights which they had under the treaty of 1835.

Mr. HOUSTON. I stated that.

Mr. ORR. In 1835 a treaty was executed with these Cherokees. A portion of them went west, and another portion remained in Alabama, Georgia, and North Carolina. Those who remained lost their character as a tribe, and are now coming in as individuals, and claiming the rights which they are entitled to under the treaty of 1835. The treaty of 1846, which was made with the emigrant Indians, expressly reserves to those Indians whatever rights they had under the treaty of 1835.

Mr. HOUSTON. I read the tenth article of the treaty of 1846, making the reservation of which the gentleman from South Carolina speaks, and commented on it. So I am not laboring under a mistake as to the facts; I may have drawn erroneous conclusions from the facts, but I think not.

According to the statement of my friend from Georgia, [Mr. CHASTAIN,] the Cherokees east became citizens of that State prior to 1846. If they are citizens now, they were as much citizens then; and yet this gentleman [Mr. GROW] admits, in his report, that in 1846 they were considered as a part of the tribe of Indians. The report itself says, and the treaty of 1846 also speaks of the different factions into which the nation had been divided—making direct reference to those parts of the nation east as well west.

When interrupted by the gentleman from South Carolina, I was remarking upon the liberality of the Government to the Cherokee nation. We have not only paid every demand made and given whenever asked, but we gave them interest upon the amount of the claim, although the claim was itself a gratuity from 1838 to 1851, at the rate of five per cent. per annum.

But there is another item in our dealings with the Cherokees remaining east worthy of notice, and I am astonished that my friend from Pennsylvania did not say something about it, and that is, an allowance made them in 1848 of $53 33 for removal and subsistence, as if they had removed. Though they never went west, though they have remained in the States, yet they have received, by direct appropriation, and amount to cover their removal and subsistence just as if they had gone west.

Mr. GROW. Is not the money now in the Treasury?

Mr. HOUSTON. I draw no such nice distinctions. I grant that the money is now in the Treasury. It is funded there for their benefit, and drawing interest, and they continue to receive the interest annually.

Now, sir, here are these Indians remaining in the States, in violation of the policy of the Government. They have not only received their full portion of the $5,000,000 agreed to be given, in the treaty of 1835, as payment for their lands, but they have received their full proportion of the $600,000 appropriated in 1836, their full proportion of the $1,047,000 appropriated in 1838, also of the $724,000, and over one half million interest upon it, appropriated in 1851. In addition to this, they have received $53 33 each, appropriated to them for doing what they never did—that is, for their removal west, and one year's subsistence.

Mr. GROW. I dislike very much to make these frequent interruptions, but I am anxious that this matter should be fully understood by the committee. This per capita to which the gentleman alludes was funded to the Cherokees who remain in the States for their subsistence and removal. It has never been paid to them. They receive the interest; but they will never receive one cent of the principal until they remove to their reservation, when it will be paid to them. I repeat, this sum is not paid to these Indians; it is set apart for those who go West. When I spoke of the application of this act a moment ago, I did it not by way of criticism, but for the purpose of asking whether this was the act the gentleman from Alabama referred to.

Mr. HOUSTON. That was the act I referred to, and its effect was precisely what I stated. I did not mean to be understood as saying that these Indians have actually received the $53 33. But I mean to say, that it is set apart for them; it is funded in the Treasury for them, and the interest is paid to them annually. They have a right to the money whenever they decide to go west; and if they do not go, they will get it in the end just as certainly as they live; and if they never go west they will continue to draw the interest for life. It is as an annuity, and in the end they will get the whole sum.

Mr. Chairman, any gentleman who will look at the course of the Government, at the liberality which has characterized its course towards this tribe of Indians, will agree with me in the view I have taken of this subject.

Now, sir, I have submitted my views in relation to this claim as well as I can present them in the hasty manner in which I have been obliged to make my examinations. I regret exceedingly that it did not come up upon its own merits, where it could have been discussed more at length. I believe it is wrong. I believe it has no merit in it; and if it has, it is of such doubtful character that it should not be allowed without ample discussion. It ought to be discussed; it ought to come up by itself, and not as an amendment to an appropriation bill. If it be rejected here, it may yet come up by itself. If it be rejected I hope the committee will report it in a separate bill, so that it may be fully investigated. Let us have an opportunity of referring to the documents, and to the Department, for the information which I believe I can get, if time be afforded me. But, if there be any justice in this claim, then the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to have reported in favor of the Cherokees west. If the Cherokees west are precluded by the treaty of 1846, if they are precluded by the law of 1851, the Cherokees east are also precluded. What precludes one ought to and does preclude the other. You cannot draw a distinction between them, because the last account we had of them they were treated as the whole tribe of the Cherokee Indians.

Each man of the Cherokees west is entitled to as much as each man of the Cherokees east. Indeed, they merit the care of the Government more, because those east are in opposition to its policy, while those west are obedient to its policy. It is unreasonable to suppose that Congress would bestow a bounty upon Indians who were obstinate and ungovernable which it withholds from the more submissive part of the tribe. It is unreasonable to suppose that the Government will do more for such Indians than it will do for those who went west in obedience to its requirements and policy.

Now, I think that the whole of this case shows that there has been the most ample legislation in behalf of the Indians. They have obtained everything they claimed of the Government, and at every time they made the claim. But two years ago there was a provision in the Indian bill by which they got $724,000, as the final and last amount due them, according to the report of the Auditor and Comptroller, sanctioned and indorsed by a committee of the Senate. There was no more due them; there was no more claimed by them. The whole amount, according to the Senate's report, was paid. That payment was said to be final and conclusive. The Government required them to make their receipts, and I understand that their receipts are now on file.

But, Mr. Chairman, we shall never have a final settlement with the Indians so long as claims are hunted up by agents in the manner in which they have been for years. I do not say that such is the case with this claim—I do not know—but we know that such has been the case with many others. So long as the Indians are disturbed in their peace and quiet by interested agents, so long as their interest is drawn up and presented to them, falsely in many cases, for the purpose of getting a claim before Congress, knowing the sympathy of the Government and of the members of Congress towards the Indian tribes, knowing the indulgence with which Indian claims are always regarded, so that we oftentimes appropriate money which ought not to be appropriated, and which I am persuaded does not, in every case, go into the pockets of the Indians; until we can change the present system, and keep the Indians out of the hands of the sharpers, we will never have peace with the Indians, or a final and satisfactory settlement with them.

Mr. GROW. I desire to interrupt the gentleman from Alabama, so that the claim may not be prejudiced by any remarks he has made. I have seen, and heard, and know, of no person who is pressing this claim except Mr. Rogers himself, who was an Eastern Cherokee, and one of the men who signed the treaty of 1835. He is one of the party in interest, and is a citizen of a State of this Union. He is prosecuting his own claim, and that of those citizens similarly situated. I have seen and heard of no other.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know nothing about that, and did not speak of this particular claim; but those of us who have been long in Congress know that the scenes to which I have referred have been enacted and reenacted over and over again in almost numberless instances. The claim is brought forward, wholly destitute of merit, and the sympathies of Congress is appealed to in behalf of the Indian to secure its allowance, when it is the white man, and not the Indian, who is benefited by our munificence.

Mr. ORR. I desire, before the gentleman from Alabama takes his seat, to call his attention to the report of Alfred J. Vaughn, of the Upper Missouri agency, as to the character of the Blackfeet Indians, and the country they inhabit.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman may read what he pleases to the committee. I do not know enough of the subject to make any definite point upon it.

Mr. ORR. I will read a simple paragraph:

"The Blackfeet are a wild, roving, reckless people, committing murder, and stealing everything that falls in their way. They inhabit an extensive country lying between the head waters of the Missouri and the waters of Hudson Bay, extending their war expeditions as far south as the river Platte, and in former years as far as the valley of the Great Salt Lake. They are friendly with none of the adjacent tribes, but at war with the whole."

"In their war expeditions nothing escapes them. They murder, and steal, as I before observed, everything falling in their path."

The debate being now closed, the Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that, perhaps, the progress of the bill may be expedited. From the point where the Clerk is now reading to nearly the close of the bill all the appropriations, as the Chair is informed, are made in pursuance of treaty stipulations; and, unless gentlemen desire to offer amendments, the Chair would suggest that that portion of the bill should be passed over by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think it would be better to have the bill read.

Mr. ORR. It will do no sort of good. It will be an unnecessary consumption of time.

Mr. HOUSTON. The appropriations are all in pursuance of treaty stipulations.

Mr. WASHBURN. Well, I have no objection to dispense with the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the reading of the bill will be passed over to those points at which gentlemen desire to offer amendments.

No objection was made.

Mr. ORR. I offer the following amendment: For payment to the Chickasaw nation in full of the expenses of their commissioners in negotiating the treaty of June 22, 1852, $1,500.

That sum of money is provided to be paid by the treaty entered into with the Chickasaw Indians. Gentlemen can see the clause of the treaty providing for it by turning to pages 52 and 53 in the Appendix to the Acts of the last Congress.

The question was then taken on the amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. ORR. Pursuant to the notice I gave yesterday, I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 33, at the end of line 783:

For the expenses of negotiating treaties with, and making presents of goods and provisions to, the Indian tribes in the Territory of Oregon, $68,000.

I do not propose to enter into any lengthened explanation of the amendment I have offered. I stated to the committee yesterday the necessity for its adoption. There have been no treaties negotiated with the Indians in Oregon, amounting, in all, to some thirty-five or forty tribes. Some fifteen or twenty of these tribes of Indians have been seriously trespassed upon by the whites, and something should be done to compensate them for their losses.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he knows whether the treaties which were negotiated a few years ago, and which were before the last Congress, were rejected or not, or are they still pending before the Senate?

Mr. ORR. Of course it can only be a mere matter of speculation with me as to what became of them. They were presented to the Senate in secret session. Perhaps they were acted upon by that body. I am inclined to think, although I have no positive knowledge upon the subject, that they were laid upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What good reason is there for negotiating other treaties, if those already negotiated have been laid upon the table by the Senate?

Mr. ORR. It may be that the Senate were unwilling to ratify the treaties which were negotiated two years ago, because they appropriated too large sums of money.

Mr. HOUSTON. If these treaties are unacted upon, then, as a matter of course, it is unnecessary to make the appropriation asked for. The treaties which were negotiated in Oregon had some provisions which were very objectionable, and which, by accident, were disclosed to the Committee of Ways and Means. I believe that most of the tribes with whom we negotiated are very small in number. We agreed to give them so much money, and they were to leave their territory at a day designated in the future. There was no apparent restriction in several of these treaties. I understand that the Senate fully considered them, and concluded that they ought not to be ratified.

Mr. PECKHAM. I move to amend the amendment by reducing the sum $3,000.

I regretted very much to hear the remarks yesterday of my learned and distinguished friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] remarks which he deemed necessary to make in order to illustrate his views of the bill. He seemed to think that it was proper and necessary to say, that this Government had been guilty of gross outrages and wrongs, almost from its very organization, against the Indians. The gentleman deemed it proper to say, that the Government had despoiled the Indians in all parts of the country; not only in the Territories, but also in the thirteen original States. He alluded to these wrongs in language not to be misunderstood—asserting that the Government had despoiled them, and driven them from their homes and improvements. I regretted extremely to hear the course of remark in which he indulged, although the gentleman himself may have judged it to be very pertinent and proper.

Now, with great respect to the gentleman, I desire to read a short extract from his speech, which I find reported in the Globe of this morning; in which he says:

"In Oregon there are many Indians who have cultivated the soil, who have cleared their own land, erected buildings, but they have been driven back from their settlements, their improvements, their homes."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind the gentleman that the rule requires that he should speak in favor of the amendment which he has proposed, and confine his remarks thereto.

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. We had better conform ourselves to the rules, or we shall never finish the bill.

Mr. PECKHAM, (resuming.) I do not understand that such are the facts. I do not understand, from the knowledge which I have of the history of the action of this Government towards the Indian tribes, that it is liable to these imputations—it is liable to the course of remark of the gentleman from South Carolina. Such remarks, emanating from so high a source, are calculated, and do produce, an injurious effect upon our national character abroad. Our character as a filibustering and freebooting nation is somewhat dubious with the nations abroad now, and when I hear remarks like those to which I have referred, coming from a high and distinguished source, I cannot but believe that they are calculated to convey an unjust impression of the policy and conduct of this Government towards the Indians. My belief is that the action of this Government will compare favorably with that of any other nation, in their dealings with the children of the forest—certainly within this last half century it will. We have done everything to promote their welfare, to civilize and Christianize them; and if we have not succeeded it is not the fault of the Government, for it has acted with a just and generous, a liberal and manly, spirit towards them.

Now, sir, I submit, with great deference to my friend from South Carolina, that the course of remarks indulged in by him is not founded in fact, and is calculated to produce an impression abroad injurious to the Government. It reflects, also, harshly upon us as individuals. I do not think it is necessary to indulge in that course of remark to induce this House to do justice upon this occasion. I think every man here is inclined to act not only with justness, but in the spirit of liberality, kindness, and charity towards those people. In conclusion, I may say, however, that I am informed that a similar course of remark has been usually indulged in by those who have heretofore occupied the position of the gentleman from South Carolina in former Congresses.

Mr. ORR. I am much obliged to the gentleman from New York for his kind lecture. I have no objection to his defending the course of our Government in its intercourse with the Indians. I do not intend to assail it. If, however, the gentleman had perused my remarks a little further, he would have seen, from what I said, that I did not consider the conduct of our Government towards the Indians in the Territories of Oregon, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico was of a defensible character. The settlement of Oregon commenced twelve years ago, and your citizens have been going there ever since. You organized a government for that Territory in 1848, six years ago. Emigration has been going there from that time to the present, by the authority of this Government. At the time a territorial government was established there, the Federal Government did not have a foot of land for a single citizen to settle upon—not a single foot. Would it not have been just and fair, right and proper, that the Government, before affording the means for settlement there, should have gone there, through its agents, and procured land from the Indians, upon which citizens could settle?

Now, sir, our citizens, for six years, have been living in that condition in respect to the Indians, without paying them anything for their territory of which you have despoiled them. Is that just to them? Does it not fully authorize the animadversion in which I indulged?

Mr. PECKHAM. Has not the gentleman stated in his speech, and are not the facts so, that those Indians who have changed their location, have done so by their own express assent, and by an express arrangement with the Government? I appeal to any gentleman upon this floor; I appeal to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] to say if ever a single outrage has been practiced upon these Indians by the whites?

Mr. ORR. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from New York, that the Indian agents have made promises in behalf of the Government of the United States to the Indians in Oregon, which have never been fulfilled. They have caused the Indians to remove from their territory, with the promise that the Government of the United States would pay them the full value of their lands. These are the sort of promises which I speak of as never being fulfilled. The treaty made with them more than two years ago made many promises to them, but the Senate have not ratified the treaty, and I do not suppose they intend to. It has been before them for two years, and if they had ever intended to ratify it they would have done it long ago. But it contained promises to the Indians which they expected would be kept.

Mr. PECKHAM, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

The question then recurred upon Mr. ORR's amendment.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. It was my intention to have said something upon the subject of this amendment, but if the committee wish to vote upon it now I will desist.

The question was taken; and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. We are nearly through the bill. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that motion.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I move that the committee rise, and report the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order, so long as gentlemen desire to offer amendments. The Chair understands there are still other amendments to be offered.

Mr. ORR. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his motion that the committee rise. We shall certainly finish the bill in less than half an hour.

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot withdraw my motion.

The question was then taken; and the committee refused to rise.

Mr. ORR. I offer the following amendment:

For the expenses of negotiating treaties with, and making presents of goods and provisions to, the Indian tribes in the Territory of Washington, $45,000.

The question was taken; and the amendment adopted.

Mr. ORR. I move the following in addition:

For the expenses of negotiating treaties with, and making presents of goods and provisions to, the Indian tribes in the Territory of Utah, $45,000.

The question was taken; and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I have still another amendment to come in at the same point. I move the following:

For expenses of negotiating treaties with, and making presents of goods and provisions to, Apache, Navajo, and Utah Indians in the Territory of New Mexico, $30,000.

The question was taken; and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I move the following amendment, to come in at the same place:

For expenses of making presents of agricultural implements and farming utensils to the Pueblo Indians in the Territory of New Mexico, $10,000.

The question was taken; and the amendment agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I offer the following, which is the last of the amendments I have to offer to the bill:

For expenses of holding a council with, and making presents of goods and provisions to, the Blackfeet, Grosventres, and other wild tribes of Indians, immediately within or adjacent to the eastern boundary of the Territory of Washington; and for defraying the expenses of bringing the chiefs of said tribes to Washington city, $100,000.

The question was put; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I offer the following proviso, to come in after the last amendment:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, if in his discretion the public interest require it, be authorized to use any part of the appropriations herein made for making treaties in Oregon, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico, and for holding councils at Fort Benton, prior to the commencement of the next fiscal year.

That proviso, Mr. Chairman, is rendered necessary, from the fact that it may suit the convenience of the Indian Department to commence these negotiations before the commencement of the next fiscal year, and it is requisite that power should be conferred upon it.

The question was taken; and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. GROW. I move the following amendment, to come in after line 787 of the bill:

To Cherokees residing in States east of the Mississippi river, in full of all demands, under the provisions of the treaty of 29th December, 1835, and the supplemental articles thereto of 1st March, 1836, and the treaty of 6th of August, 1846—except the amount of $53 33½ funded per capita certain Cherokees for subsistence and removal—$92,695 19, with interest from the 14th December, 1852, to time of payment: Provided, That in no case shall any money hereby appropriated be paid to any agent of said Indians, or to any other person or persons than the Indian or Indians to whom it is due: Provided also, That the Indian, or Indians who shall receive the said money, shall first respectively sign a receipt or lease acknowledging the same to be in full of all demands under the aforesaid treaty.

I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, further to discuss the merits of the amendment, but to answer, so far as my time will permit, some of the objections which have been made to it. The amendment, as I have before remarked, is based on the treaty of 1835. By that treaty it is expressly and definitively provided that such Cherokees as were averse to removing West should be permitted to remain in the States if they became citizens. It matters not what appropriations have been made, whether this Government has dealt fairly and justly by the Indians, or whether they remained in the States so long as the Government made that stipulation with them. It is not for us to stand up here to-day and object to paying what is due on that account; and especially if gentlemen will remember that the treaty of 1835 was made by a class of men in the Cherokee nation, who were doomed by John Ross and his party. They dare not go to the West now. Many of those who made the treaty have suffered death in consequence. Not only those who went to the West fell under the knife and hatchet, but many who remained east of the Mississippi. The gentleman from Alabama complains that we are giving bounties to them for not going West under the treaty, and because they remained in the States against the policy of the Government. He says that, therefore, they are not entitled to the provisions of the treaty. They dare not go to the home of the western Cherokees. They are the men who signed the treaty of 1835; and Mr. Rogers, who is prosecuting this claim, is one of them. If he went to the land of the western Cherokees he would go to his grave. In addition to many others of the tribe, Boudinot, the collaborer of Guess, who did for the Indian what Cadmus did for the Greeks, found his grave in signing the treaty. These men were bound to remain in the States, or sacrifice their lives. And will you deny them their rights under your treaties because they chose to avail themselves of their stipulations?

Gentlemen claim that the eastern Cherokees have no rights here because the proviso to the settlement of February 27, 1851, under the treaty of 1846, precludes them. The Cherokee nation, under that settlement, have no claim upon the Government, for they were required, when they took the money, to file a release in full. That they have done. It was done by the Cherokee nation, and not by the men who have separated from the nation; who have lost their tribal character; who have become respected citizens and many of them voters of the States of Tennessee, North Carolina, and Georgia; who have adopted the habits of civilization, and are now living in a civilized community, in obedience to the laws of organized States. The men who are pressing this claim are not precluded by that act, for they are individual citizens, belonging to no tribe of Indians, and who have belonged to no tribe since the treaty of 1835. They have remained in the States not from choice, but because if they moved West they would do so at the peril of their lives; but under the provisions of the treaty of 1835 they had a right to remain, and they are not precluded by anything in the treaty of 1846; for that treaty contains an express clause reserving to them all their rights under the treaty of 1835 and 1836.

The gentleman from Alabama says that the wording of that provision was intended to cover their per capita and preemption rights. All preemption rights that these eastern Cherokees ever had under the treaty of 1835 were stricken out by the supplementary treaty of 1836. What, then, was the meaning of the language of the treaty of 1846? Why, it preserved all the rights of the eastern Cherokees under the treaty of 1835 in the treaty fund. Can you, then, take that treaty fund for any other purpose than that for which it was set apart?

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that these eastern Cherokees have belonged to no tribe of Indians since the treaty of 1835. Well, if that be true, they are bound only by the provisions of the treaty of 1835, and are only entitled to their share of the treaty fund, under that treaty, which was $5,000,000. The treaty of 1836 gave the Cherokees $600,000; the law of 1838 gave them over $1,000,000 more; the law of 1846 gave them other advantages, and the law of 1851 gave them $724,000 more. Well, if the gentleman is correct in his statement that they have belonged to no tribe since 1835, then I say they are parties to none of those treaties, and are, therefore, entitled to no part of the funds created by any treaty since the treaty of 1835. They would, therefore, be excluded from the provisions of the supplemental treaty of 1836, of the law of 1838, of the treaty of 1846, of the law of 1851, and every other donation that has been made since 1835, and thereby they would lose five times as much as this bill proposes to give them. I take the gentleman upon his own statement, and upon his own issue, and if it is true that they did not belong to the tribe after the treaty of 1835, then they had no part in the treaties subsequently made, and are entitled to none of the considerations given by those treaties.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I desire to offer the following amendment to the amendment:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be directed to ascertain whether any Cherokees east of the Mississippi river were omitted or overlooked in taking the census heretofore, and that he place upon the roll all such, and pay to them the same sum that those on the roll have already received or are to receive.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CHASTAIN] cannot be legitimately made to the pending amendment. It is not germane, and is upon altogether a different subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Georgia is in order.

Mr. CHASTAIN. The object of the amendment I have offered is to give to those Indians residing east of the Mississippi, who have heretofore been neglected in taking the census, and whose names have not been placed upon the roll, the same benefit that those Indians have received whose names have been placed on the roll. In 1851, the Government sent on a commissioner for the purpose of enrolling the names of the Indians east of the Mississippi who were entitled to receive a portion of the benefits of the appropriation of that year. There are, perhaps, twenty-five or thirty, whose names, as I ascertain, have not been placed upon the roll, and who have written to me on the subject, in order to obtain the money which was due to them under the act of 1851. Their names have not been enrolled, and the consequence was, that they were precluded from their share of the appropriation. The commissioner who was sent on the part of the Government to enroll the names of the Indians passed through the country in great haste, and those whose names have been omitted did not even know that he was in the country until he had passed through. The result was that they were neglected, although they are as much entitled to the benefits of the appropriation made for the Indians east of the Mississippi as those whose names were enrolled. I do not think that any gentleman can have the slightest objection to the amendment I have offered to remedy the neglect of the commissioner towards these Indians.

Mr. ORR. I was quite sure that the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia was not in order when he first read it; and I am still more satisfied from the fact that it has reference to another fund, and pertains to a different subject altogether from that embraced in the amendment proposed by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grow.] I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia. The subject to which his amendment relates is before the Committee on Indian Affairs, but as yet they have not examined it, and therefore have not come to any conclusion upon it. I do not know whether the committee will recommend that the provisions of the amendment be carried out or not.

Mr. CHASTAIN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina allow me to ask him a question? If the Committee on Indian Affairs, after an investigation of the proposition I have now submitted, come to the conclusion that it is just and proper that the claim should be paid, will they agree to report a bill to that effect?

Mr. ORR. Yes.

Mr. CHASTAIN. That is all I want; and if there is no objection I withdraw my amendment.

No objection being made, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Grow] is now pending?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I move to amend the amendment by increasing it $100,000. I move it for the purpose of enabling me to submit a few remarks in regard to the propriety of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I know that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, with whom I have acted in relation to this bill, is anxious to dispose of it as soon as possible; but being apprised, to some extent, personally of the history of these transactions with the Indians, I cannot refrain from submitting a few remarks in regard to the subject.

I am familiar with the provisions of the treaty of 1835, and also with those of the supplemental treaty of 1836, having been a resident near those Indians at the time those treaties were made. I knew the parties engaged in them—the parties to which the Government look as the treaty-making power.

There is but one question, in my opinion, involved in the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Those Cherokees who saw proper to remain in the States then composed a part of the Cherokee nation. By the provisions of the treaty certain amounts were agreed upon to be deducted from the treaty fund, for subsistence and removal; and the whole matter resolves itself into a question as to this amount agreed upon for subsistence and removal. It is in reference to the excess which was paid to Ross and his party, under an arrangement between him and General Scott, in 1838, and which was deducted from the treaty fund, and of the disbursing of the same, of which they complain. That is the only question which is submitted to this committee—whether or not they will suffer those Indians who saw proper to remain in the States to be prejudiced by a subsequent arrangement between General Scott and Ross?

I was there in 1838, when this arrangement was concluded. I am aware of the fact that Ross got the advantage of General Scott in that arrangement. There is no doubt of that. Some portion of them removed, and the amount allowed for that purpose was increased to $105 to each man, in regard to some detachments which were removed west. Is it right or just that this treaty fund should be taken to pay those expenses, to the exclusion of those who remained in the States, and who now reside there? That is the only question before us. They hold that the Government had no right, by an arrangement with Ross, or any other person, to deprive them of any privileges they were entitled to under the treaties of 1835-'6. How was it, that by the treaty of 1846 it was provided, that the rights secured to them by the treaties of 1835-'6 were not to be prejudiced thereby, if they had no just cause of complaint against the Government on account of the disposition of the funds in that manner? There was that express reservation in that treaty. It is true, as remarked by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] this question was not submitted to the consideration of the Senate committee at the time this general arrangement was entered into. But, from that very fact I have no doubt they had an eye to the rights of the Cherokees east of the Mississippi. Hence the provision in the treaty of 1846 was adopted, by which they were not to be prejudiced in any rights they had acquired under the treaties of 1835-'6.

Mr. ORR. I am opposed pro forma to the amendment of my friend from Arkansas. I am very anxious that a vote should be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grow]—that it shall be disposed of one way or the other, so that the committee may rise, and report the bill to the House.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I withdraw my amendment, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and the amendment was withdrawn.

The question then recurred upon Mr. Grow's amendment, upon which tellers had been demanded.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. WALSH. I ask to have the amendment again reported.

The Clerk read the amendment

Messrs. DAVIS, of Indiana, and ORR were appointed tellers.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 46.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk then finished reading the bill.

Mr. ORR. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no existing provisions of law prescribing the manner in which payment shall be made to Indians shall be so construed as to repeal or contravene the seventeenth section of an act entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, and to preserve peace on the frontiers," approved June 30, 1834.

Mr. Chairman, the third sections of the Indian bills of the last and preceding Congress provided that payments of annuities and moneys should in all cases be made directly to the Indians, per capita. The Department has construed it so strictly that they cannot even deduct from the payments the amounts of spoiliations which the Indians may commit, and which they are bound to pay, under the intercourse act. The amendment simply gives the construction that was intended.

The question was taken; and the amendment was adopted.

Mr. ORR. I move that the Committee do now rise, and report the bill.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 46, entitled "A bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1855," and had directed him to report the same back, with sundry amendments.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The call for the previous question was seconded; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. KEITT. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. ELLISON. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. KEITT's motion; and it was agreed to, there being, upon a division—ayes 101, noes 18.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and thereupon, at twenty-five minutes to four o'clock, p. m., the House adjourned till Monday, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 27, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling for the amount expended for the transportation of troops, supplies, and munitions for the land and naval forces in the Pacific; also, for the transportation of the mails for the last three years; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PETITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of a committee of the American Medical Association, praying that a rank may be granted to the medical officers of the Navy analogous to that assigned to the medical officers of the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill from the House of Representatives to authorize the school commissioners of the fractional township No. 1, range No. 10 east, in Alabama, to locate one half section of land for school purposes, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. FORNEY, its clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

The above-named bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

A subsequent message was received from the House of Representatives, announcing that their Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills from the Senate:

An act for the relief of George G. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased;

An act to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes;

Which were thereupon signed by the PRESIDENT pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was received, by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act for the relief of settlers on lands reserved for railroad purposes; and Joint resolution accepting certain volumes and medals presented by her Britannic Majesty's Government to the United States.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the deficiency bill in the morning hour. I think we could very nearly dispose of it in an hour, if the Senate will permit me to take it up. In that way we may get along without interfering with the business in Executive session. I do not see any other mode of carrying through the bill which I ask the Senate to take up without interfering with some other matters in which the Senate is much interested.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I want to present a memorial this morning.

Mr. HUNTER. I will say to my friend from Indiana that we have been presenting petitions and making reports nearly every day since the session commenced, and this is the first hour we have asked for the general appropriation bills. The Government is in want of the money, and I think it will promote the dispatch of business if the Senate will take up this bill in the morning hour; but if we once commence presenting memorials the morning hour will be consumed.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves to pass by all previous orders, for the purpose of taking up the deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1854, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance, with several amendments.

Mr. HUNTER. I suppose it will be scarcely necessary to read the bill. The amendments may first be read, and the question taken upon them seriatim.

The PRESIDENT. The pending amendments will be read.

The Secretary read the first amendment.

It proposed to amend the item—

"For extra clerk hire and copying, $2,000"— by striking out "two" and inserting "four," so as to increase the appropriation to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment proposed is to insert the following item:

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest the propriety of reading all the amendments at once, and then any Senator can except to any one upon which he desires a separate vote. If any one be objected to it may be set aside, and the vote can be taken upon it after the others have been disposed of. It seems to me that this course will facilitate the dispatch of business.

Mr. HUNTER. It seems to me that that course will be a good one.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection that course will be pursued.

There being no objection, the several amendments reported from the Committee on Finance were read, as follows:

To pay expenses incurred by Edward Cunningham, acting Consul at Shanghai, for a police force for the preservation of the peace by American citizens, $372 80.

For rent of surveyor general's office in California, purchase of instruments, records, drawing materials, furniture, fuel, and pay of messengers, $41,000.

For compensation of a draftsman and clerks, for the office of the surveyor general of California, $10,000.

For completing and keeping in order the grounds south of the President's house, $9,770.

For iron flagging in front of the old portion of the Patent Office building, and altering windows, and private stairway, $5,730.

For altering streets and repaving in front of the east wing of the Patent Office building, iron railing and flagging, and painting new saloon, $14,250.

For furnishing the rooms of the new wing of the Patent Office building, with furniture, and providing the saloon therein, with cases for models, $45,000.

For fulfilling treaties with the Sioux of the Mississippi:

For the third of fifty installments of interest, at the rate of five per cent. per annum, on $1,360,000, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of 23d July, 1851, $68,000;

For the third of fifty installments of interest, at the rate of five per cent. per annum, on $112,000, being the amount in lieu of the reservation set apart in the third article of the treaty of 23d July, 1851, per Senate's amendment thereof, $5,600;

For the third of fifty installments of interest, at the rate of five per cent. per annum, on $1,160,000, stipulated in the fourth article of the treaty of 5th August, 1851, $58,000;

For third of fifty installments of interest, at the rate of five per cent. per annum, on $69,000, being the amount in lieu of the reservation set apart in the third article of the treaty of 5th August, 1851, per Senate's amendment thereof, $3,450;

For the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the provisional government of Oregon in defending the people of said Territory from the attacks and hostilities of the Cayuse Indians in the years 1847 and 1848, and for such allowances for the expense of adjusting the claims on that account as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem proper, $75,000. But the said claims and accounts shall be settled and adjusted at such place and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and no claims shall hereafter be allowed on account of this war which are not presented within the next fiscal year.

For arrearages of pay for services of volunteers in the Kentucky regiment called into service in 1836, $1,000.

For arrearages of pay for services rendered by volunteers or militia, in the Black Hawk war, $1,000.

For clothing for the army, camp, and garrison equipage, and horse equipments, to supply the place of losses sustained by the wreck of the steamer San Francisco, $26,590.

For the purchase of Spanish and Mexican law books for the Library of Congress, $1,700.

The next amendment was in the following item:

"For miscellaneous items $10,000."

The committee proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty," so as to increase the item to $20,000.

The committee proposed to add the following items:

For rent of paper warerom from the 1st of January to the 30th of June, 1854, at $250 per annum, $125.

For cartage of printing paper from warerom and office of Superintendent of Public Printing to the printing offices, and labor, from the 1st January to the 30th June, 1854, at $550 per annum, $275.

The next amendment is an addition to the following item:

"For arrearages incurred prior to the 1st of July, 1853, for running and marking the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, $50,000."

The proposed addition is in the following words:

And the limitations imposed by the provisions contained in the act of 15th May, 1850, entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1850," and the act of 3d March, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

For engraving maps, views, sections, and natural history, of the survey of the boundary between the United States and Mexico, $10,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

That portion of the bill continues in the following language:

"For salaries and incidental expenses of the commission appointed under the act of March 3, 1851, for settling land claims in California, $37,500."

To which the committee propose to add the following:

For compensation of the judge of first instance in civil cases for the district of San Francisco, California, per appointment, dated 21st of September, 1849, by the late General B. Riley, while Governor of that country, from 1st October, 1849, to 1st April, 1850, $750.

For the purchase of a new site for the custom-house in San Francisco, $250,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his judgment the public interest will thereby be promoted, to apply this appropriation, and as much as may be necessary of former appropriations, for the erection of a custom-house on the land reserved for said purpose, to the purchase of a building or buildings for a custom-house and other public offices; and the said Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to take all legal proceedings which may be necessary or advisable, to maintain and secure the possession and title of the United States to the lot heretofore selected for the site of a custom-house.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I ask for a separate vote upon that item.

The PRESIDENT. That item then will be excepted.

The next proposed amendment was read. It is to strike out the following item:

"For compensation for the discharge of United States consular duties at Constantinople, in conformity with the act of Congress, approved August 11, 1848, $3,594 50, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid under the direction of the Secretary of State, to such person or persons as may be entitled to the same, or any portion thereof."

The last amendments proposed by the committee were the following additional sections:

SEC.—And be it further enacted, That all books, papers, documents, and records, in the Department of the Interior, may be copied and certified under the seal of that Department, (which is hereby recognized as legal,) in the same manner as those in the other Executive Departments may now by law be, and with the same force and effect.

SEC.—And be it further enacted, That hereafter the commissions of all officers, under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be made out and recorded in the Department of the Interior, and the seal of the said Department affixed thereto, any laws to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That the said seal shall not be affixed to any such commission before the same shall have been signed by the President of the United States.

SEC.—And be it further enacted, That before any payment shall hereafter be made to any invalid pensioner, whose name shall have been upon the pension list two years, he shall produce to the agent for paying pensions to whom he shall apply for payment the affidavit of two surgeons or physicians, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, stating, from personal examination, the continuance of the disability, describing it, for which the pension was originally granted, and the date of such disability at the time of making such affidavit, and every two years after the date of such affidavit, he shall, before receiving any further payment, produce to said agent a similar affidavit; and if in said affidavit the disability shall be stated at a rate below that for which the pension was originally granted, he shall only be paid at the rate stated in said affidavit—said affidavit shall be filed by said agents, and carefully preserved, and copies thereof shall be transmitted, with the semi-annual returns of said agents, to the Commissioner of Pensions, who shall file them with the original papers of said pensioner, respectively: Provided, That when the pension shall have been originally granted by a special act of Congress, or for a total disability for the loss of a limb, or other cause, which cannot be removed, either in whole or in part, the above affidavit shall not be required: And provided further, That if any person entitled to an invalid pension shall be in the possession of a salaried civil office, his pension shall be suspended during the time of his employment in said civil office.

Mr. ADAMS. I ask for a separate vote upon the last section.

The PRESIDENT. That amendment will be excepted; and also the amendment upon which the Senator from Maine asks for a separate vote.

Mr. WALKER. I wish the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, would explain the amendment which provides for the repeal of certain limitations on the appropriations for the commission to run the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Mr. HUNTER. The limitations referred to in that amendment are limitations which were imposed, in former appropriation bills, upon the Mexican boundary commission. According to them, the commission would expire during the next fiscal year. The amendment is designed to continue it. It is necessary that it should be continued, in order to enable the commission to conclude its business. That is all.

The amendments, except those reserved for a separate vote, were then agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the following item:

"For the purchase of a new site for the custom-house in San Francisco, $250,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his judgment the public interest will thereby be promoted, to apply this appropriation, and as much as may be necessary of former appropriations, for the erection of a custom-house on the land reserved for said purpose to the purchase of a building or buildings, for a custom-house and other public offices; and the said Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to take all legal proceedings which may be necessary or advisable to maintain and secure the possession and title of the United States to the lot heretofore selected for the site of a custom-house."

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, according to former laws, a custom-house was directed to be built on a certain lot reserved by the United States and claimed by them, on the water front of the city of San Francisco. Some $80,000 or $90,000 were expended by the United States in piling and preparing this lot for the reception of the edifice which it is proposed to erect. During the process of preparing the lot for the building, it was ascertained that some claim was set up to it by the State of California. The Secretary of the Treasury proposed to the Government of the State of California, to relinquish any claim which it might have to this lot, before he proceeded further with the completion of the custom-house. This the authorities of that State have refused to do; the State government has refused to relinquish its title to the lot. Then, although we are of opinion that we are entitled to it, yet it would be dangerous to go on with so expensive a building upon land in regard to which our title is uncertain. It is therefore proposed, in order to gain time, to prosecute our title to this lot by all legal means; that we should vest in the Secretary of the Treasury a power to divert the appropriation to some other lot, to enable him to purchase some other site on which he may erect a building, or purchase some site on which there are buildings now erected.

It was thought better to do this than stop the appropriation entirely, because the rents which we are paying for Government offices in San Francisco are very large, being between $130,000 and $140,000 per annum. In order to get rid of this annual drain it was thought better to proceed with the building of a house for the custom-house and the other public offices; and in order that we might do so, and obtain the means of prosecuting our title in safety to this lot which we claim, we propose to vest in the Secretary of the Treasury the power to buy another site and build upon it, or to buy another site upon which buildings are already erected. This stands, therefore, in a different position from other custom-house appropriations. We propose to do this in order that we may not lose time, in order that we may not lose the materials which have already been purchased, and for which contracts were made when it was supposed there would be no difficulty in building the custom-house on this lot.

For these reasons the case seemed to the committee to stand on different grounds from other appropriations for custom-houses. The Secretary of the Treasury thought it was important, in order to secure the interests of the United States, that such a power should be vested in him. The Committee on Finance concurred with him in that opinion, and reported this amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have no objection to the appropriation; it may be advisable that it should be included in this bill, but still I do not think the reasons which the chairman of the committee has given are such as should necessarily induce us to include this appropriation and exclude others of a like character. There may be a controversy between the State of California and the General Government in relation to the fee of the site on which it is proposed to erect a custom-house. It may be, and it is true, that the Government is paying large sums for the use of buildings for warehouse and custom-house purposes. Still, it seems to me that it would be more appropriate to place this appropriation in another deficiency bill, which the Committee of Ways and Means of the House have already reported, and create no uneasiness by allowing one appropriation for such a purpose as this to precede others of a like character.

Now, sir, we have before the Committee on Commerce a memorial asking for an appropriation to rebuild the custom-house at Portland, Maine, which has been recently destroyed by fire. That case is certainly much stronger than the one from California. The building which has been destroyed afforded accommodations for the United States courts and post office, and the Government is now paying large sums of money for accommodations for those purposes, but they are of an inferior character, and not such as are adequate to the place, or as the citizens have a right to expect and should be afforded. If this appropriation is to be included, I ask that other appropriations for works similarly situated shall also be included. That is all I ask. I simply desire that there shall be a similarity in the action of the Government on various cases; and for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate I move to amend the amendment of the committee by adding:

For rebuilding the custom-house at Portland, Maine, $200,000; said building to contain accommodations for a post office and rooms for the United States courts.

Mr. HUNTER. I will say to the Senator from Maine, that I would sooner abandon the amendment in relation to the San Francisco custom-house than agree to have it amended by adding other custom-houses; not that I mean to pass upon the propriety of the appropriations for custom-houses, but I know that to send the bill back to the House with the custom-house appropriations in it will endanger its final passage. I shall, therefore, feel constrained, if the Senate amend the amendment in this way, to vote against the amendment of the committee. I thought—and the Committee on Finance, when they considered this amendment, thought—it stood upon a different ground from the proposition of the Senator from Maine, and from other appropriations of the same nature. The Government will lose nothing if it does not rebuild the custom-house at Portland, except the necessary loss occasioned by delay; but in the San Francisco case, if we leave things as they now stand, the Government runs this risk: As the law now stands, the Secretary must go on and build a custom-house on a lot the title to which is uncertain, thus jeopardizing a large amount of money. Besides that, in order to make use of the materials for which contracts have been made, and in order to prevent the payment of damages to the contractor, it is necessary to provide some means by which the materials may be used, or some authority by which the Secretary of the Treasury may settle with their owners. Unless we pass this provision, the Secretary, according to the powers now vested in him, and the duties now imposed upon him, must go on with the building on this lot, and use the materials; or if he should think he had the power to suspend the building, we should certainly be exposed to damages which would be claimed by the contractors, because the materials were ready, and had not been used. Here was a case for which we thought some legislation was necessary. Here were difficulties which we had to meet in this case, and which did not arise in regard to any of the other custom-houses. We thought, therefore, we could venture to put in this without bringing up the whole question of the custom-house appropriations; but if it does bring up that question, if the Senate amend the amendment by putting on other custom-houses, we shall be forced to vote against our own amendment, because we know that that question, if connected with this bill, will endanger it in the House of Representatives.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, according to the explanation given by the honorable Senator from Virginia, I think there is something singular and objectionable in the appropriation now proposed to be made. He says, an appropriation was made for the building of a custom-house in San Francisco on a lot which the Government claimed and thought it owned; but that after it had gone so far as to expend some $90,000 to prepare the lot to receive the building, the State of California came forward with what, up to that time, was a latent claim, and asserted title to the lot; and now sets up this claim against the claim of the United States. It is singular, indeed, that such a claim should not have been discovered before the expenditure of so large a sum of money. It is strange that the State in which that city is located should have remained quiet, knowing her rights, and permitted the Government to go on and make this expenditure, and make no development in regard to her title or her claim prior to the time when it was presented. It seems, too, that the Secretary of the Treasury has interceded and endeavored to obtain a surrender from the State of California of her title to this lot, in order that the Government may go on and complete the custom-house there; but California declines to do this, and now the United States are about to be subjected to great loss, unless another place for a custom-house can be found, and an appropriation made to buy it.

Sir, I do not like this. I do not know how the Senate may feel, but it looks to me rather extraordinary that now, after the expenditure of $90,000 upon a piece of property, to which our title has failed, we should be called upon to make an appropriation to purchase another site, and go on again with the erection of a custom-house at another location. What assurance are we to have that we shall ever get for this purpose a piece of property to which there is a clear title? There is no provision made in this bill that the officers of the Government shall be satisfied as to the perfectness of the title, before they make another commencement with this building. For aught we know, we may expend $90,000 more, and California may then come forward to claim that site, and we shall have to be continually running over San Francisco, and making appropriation after appropriation for the benefit and improvement of lots in that city, without the Government deriving any benefit from it.

I think myself, sir, that this is a matter which ought not to be included in the deficiency bill. I think, under all the circumstances, that there is much less merit in it than in the Portland case, and that it had better be dropped; and we should have some time to consider the question, on one of the more general appropriation bills, before we vote for it.

The Senator from Virginia does not offer us any evidence or any explanation of what right California has to this property. We do not know at present but that her claim was a mere pretense. I doubt very much whether the Senators from California know anything about it. They have not explained the matter to us as yet, and I think that we are asked to shift our ground in relation to it rather too suddenly, and that we ought to have a little more time to consider what we are doing. I do not know that the Senator from Virginia is prepared to make it manifest to the Senate that the Government of the United States has been led into the expenditure of $90,000 on a California lot to which it had no title, that it is a clear loss, that the amount is to go to the benefit of the city, and that we are to derive no advantage from it. And perhaps he is able to prove to us that we are helpless, that we are now to turn round and reappropriate the money, buy another site, and expend $90,000 over again, before the Government can get a custom-house in California.

MR. FESSENDEN. I wish to say a few words, Mr. President, on the subject of the custom-house in Portland, Maine, in order that Senators may understand the propriety and necessity of adopting the amendment proposed by my colleague. A few years ago the Government bought of the city of Portland a very large (though not too large) and elegant building, which had been erected by the city in a place which was most convenient to accommodate all the business of the General Government. The building was bought at a very reasonable rate. It was a substantial and permanent stone building, and accommodated not only the custom-house, but the post office and judicial courts of the United States. A few months ago that building was burnt. The consequence has been that the customs are very badly accommodated at a time when the business of the city of Portland is very largely increasing every day in consequence of its having been recently made the terminus of a very extensive railroad to the British Provinces, and having also become a port where British steamers enter once a fortnight. From these causes its business is very largely increased from what it was, or what it was anticipated to be at the time the building was purchased.

In consequence of the destruction of the building by fire, the Government is left in possession of a lot in a central position; the very best which can be selected to accommodate the custom-house, the post office, and the courts. It lies there vacant. Any one must see that it will be built upon again, and that at a very early period. Consequently, every day we lose is a loss to the Government itself, in reference to that matter. The result has been that the building now occupied as a custom-house is in one part of the city, and that not a convenient place, and buildings are hired for a post office in another portion, and for the judicial courts in another; and all of them are very small, inconvenient, and temporary, exposing the officers of the Government to great inconvenience, and the Government to pay high rents in order to obtain these miserable accommodations.

Now, sir, it is manifest—nobody disputes the fact—that as soon as possible this lot of land in Portland, which is so beautifully situated for the purpose, must be built upon again, in order to accommodate the large and increasing business of the Government at that port. Then it is only a question of time for the consideration of Congress, whether a whole year shall be lost in reference to that matter, whether a mere question of form in regard to what particular bill this appropriation shall go into, shall defeat the great object.

I do not agree with the honorable Senator from Virginia, that the amendment of my colleague must necessarily peril the bill in the House, if it be adopted. This is a very peculiar case. I understand that the amendment proposed in reference to the custom-house at San Francisco is an amendment presented here by the Committee on Finance, and the bill must go to the House of Representatives again in order to have our amendments acted upon. If the amendment proposed by my colleague, with reference to the custom-house in Portland, is to endanger the bill in any way I do not see why it will not be as much in danger by the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance. The case which my colleague and myself present is certainly as strong a case as that proposed to be provided for by the committee. The officers of the Government in Portland are exposed to great inconvenience. They are very badly accommodated, or, I should rather say, not accommodated at all. The citizens are very badly accommodated. There is a loss to the Government in the way of rents, and in almost every particular. The only question, then, is, whether, through a mere matter of form, as to whether it shall go into one bill or another, the appropriation shall be deferred to a future time, when the amendment of the committee seems to be of a no more urgent character than that which is proposed by my colleague.

Since I have been here I have not pressed this matter, although it has been pressing upon me, for the reason that I did not understand exactly in what shape it was to be brought forward; and it did not occur to me, or to my colleague probably, to present it until we saw the amendment in reference to the custom-house at San Francisco proposed to be put into this bill. On inquiring into the reasons for that appropriation, we find that they are no stronger than, if as strong as, those for the appropriation for which we ask. There is a large business transacted at the port of Portland; there is a great want of accommodation for the Government business there; and, owing to a casualty, the building which was used for the purpose has been destroyed. There is no question upon the mind of any one that the matter must be, and, for the good of the Government, ought to be, attended to as soon as possible. Under these circumstances, if the amendment proposed by the committee be adopted why should not this go with it? I certainly cannot believe that, under such circumstances, this amendment would lead to the defeat of the bill in the House of Representatives, when it must be apparent to the mind of every member of that House that it is not a new thing, but is merely to make up an actual deficiency of the strongest character; to provide for a most pressing necessity; to erect a building in lieu of one which has been burnt, in a place where a large revenue is collected, to accommodate not only the custom-house, but also the post office and the United States courts for the whole district of Maine. There are now, in fact, no accommodations for these purposes; and shall things remain in this way, and a whole year be lost, on account of a mere question of form? I do not suppose that the evil which the Senator from Virginia seems to apprehend would follow from the adoption of the amendment of my colleague. I think the House of Representatives will be satisfied, after hearing the explanations which can be given to them by gentlemen there who are perfectly competent and ready to give them. At any rate, I think that we present as strong a claim as is presented by the Senator in reference to the proposed amendment for San Francisco. I hope, therefore, the Senate will consent that the amendment proposed by my colleague to the amendment of the committee shall be adopted, because time is of very great consequence, and I do not see that any evil results will follow from it.

MR. PETTIT. Mr. President, I believe that if this amendment would have the effect which the Senator from Virginia supposes I should vote for it, that is, if it should have the effect of killing the bill, I am opposed upon principle to all these bills. I have nothing to say as to the details or specific items included in this or any other bill of this nature; but I can conceive of no propriety, not to say no authority under the Constitution, to pass deficiency bills. I understand that they are passed to appropriate money out of the Treasury to cover up money which has been taken from the Treasury during the year, in violation of law. The Constitution expressly provides, in so many words, that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." Now, why a bill is named a deficiency bill, I do not know, and cannot conceive, unless it is to do precisely what I have supposed; that is, to cover up moneys which have been already expended, upon which a lawless or wanton hand has been placed in the Treasury, and thence abstracted or removed—perhaps for proper purposes, as may have been considered, and with no design to embezzle. I do not charge that; but I hold that it is the business of the Congress of the United States to estimate, or at least to appropriate, the entire amount of money which can be expended for a year, and no emergency whatever can justify any Executive officer in putting his hand into the Treasury, and expending more money than is appropriated, for a purpose for which money has been appropriated, or for any new, or distinct, or separate purpose whatever.

If the public service suffers by the non-appropriation of sufficient funds to carry on the whole operations and discharge the demands and exigencies of the Government let the responsibility fall where it ought to fall. We alone have power to control the public Treasury; but if we do not guard it vigilantly upon the one hand, and upon the other expend it as liberally as the interests and demands of the people of the country require, we are to be censured. The censure should fall here, where the Constitution has placed the control of the moneys of the country.

Sir, I do not say that I shall not vote this year for a deficiency bill, but I do say that I will not vote for such a bill any year hereafter. When a new Administration comes in, and has only to expend that which a former and outgoing Administration has estimated for, and which has been appropriated, there may be some seeming apology for the use of more money than an Administration just going out of power, and wishing to show a very clean balance sheet, and an economical disposition of the public money, has been willing to estimate, and have appropriated. I say, there may be an apology in such a case; but it is a miserable apology which can justify a direct violation of the Constitution for any purpose whatever. I give notice now, to the present Administration, that they must, so far as I am concerned, make estimates enough for this year, and I will vote for them all. I will vote liberally for all they estimate for the coming year's expenditure, but next year they must not ask me to vote for a deficiency bill, unless they can show that there has been some great, and absolute, and overpowering necessity, such as that the Army or Navy were required to be concentrated at a particular point, to give defense, when it could not have been anticipated, or any estimate made for it. Then law gives way before necessity; but in the ordinary course of the transactions of this Government, in times of peace, there is no reason why we should not control the purse strings, and make, in advance, all the appropriations which are required.

But, sir, Senators will say that the appropriations in these bills are not all for moneys which have been expended; as, for instance, in this case, it is proposed to make a direct and original appropriation for a custom-house in Maine, and another in California. They may be necessary. I do not say that they are not needed. I do not know that there are any contracts out for either of them, but I think it not improbable that there are assurances or even contracts out for the construction of these works, if the money has not already been taken from the Treasury for them. I presume that these are new and original works; that no money has been taken from the Treasury whatever for them; that they have not been commenced under an appropriation of $2,000, or $5,000, or of any other sum, made as sufficient in the judgment of Congress to carry them on, and that the Department has not gone on involving the Government in as much more money, expending it during the recess, and asking us now to come in and cover it up. While these may be original propositions, and, as such, proper enough, (for we have entire jurisdiction over them,) yet it is not pretended that there are not some provisions in this bill to cover up moneys already expended, already subtracted from the Treasury, and which the Government would have us believe we are bound to appropriate and make good.

I hold, that it is as palpable a violation of the Constitution for any Department of this Government to make a contract for the purchase of property, or the erection of a building, or otherwise to involve the Government, which shall require an after appropriation here, as it is to take the money directly out of the Treasury, and consummate the contract at once, and ask us to cover it up afterwards.

Sir, it will be said that we are not obliged to vote the money; that one of our secretaries may buy a site for a custom-house, and go on with the work, and if you please, spend millions of money, and say he had made a contract stipulating that, if Congress would appropriate the money, it should be all right. Every one knows in what condition we are placed when we come here and find such a contract before us. Those who have claims upon us besiege us to death, and they say, we are in honor bound, we are in duty bound to pay; that the work has been performed, and the material furnished, the deeds for the land given, and that we cannot shrink from the responsibility of making the appropriation.

This system is wrong from beginning to end. When and where did it arise? It arose with extravagant Administrations; those who wished to hold out a fair exterior to the public, and dared not say how much money their own interests and exigencies demanded, because it counted up in large sums. Sir, I never was afraid, and I never shall be afraid, to say to the people, "You cannot get the advantages, the blessings, and the protection of this great Government without taxing yourselves, and freely spending your money." It is the better policy always to go at once to the people, and say, "It is necessary to expend so much money; this Government operates as an insurance company to you; it protects your persons and property from harm; protects your reputation, your national character, your honor, and everything which is dear to you as a people, and you must pay the premium note." Say what it is at once; deal fairly with the people; let there be no hiding, no concealment; let there be no saying, "We will administer your Government for so many millions of money," and then, before the end of the year, fasten upon them the means by which they will have to cover up the difference ten times over.

I am opposed, on principle, to all these deficiency bills; and I repeat, that if I vote for this it will be the last one for which I shall vote, whether I sit here for a longer or a shorter period.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana will find, if he will examine this bill, that its appropriations are mainly, not for money which has been expended without authority of law, but to meet propositions from the Departments to be allowed to expend more money than they were allowed to expend under former appropriations. For instance, there is a case of this sort: There is an appropriation of $1,000 for expenditures in the Black Hawk war. There was an appropriation for the purpose before, but it has passed to the surplus fund. Since that time claims have come in which are believed to be good, but the proper Department could not pay them, because there was no appropriation applicable to the purpose. It asks now to be allowed to pay them, and we accordingly propose to give the authority to do so. There is no violation of law on the part of the Department. This claim must be provided for in some way; and how is it to be provided for? Why, in a deficiency bill. Then there is an appropriation to pay the expenses of the Cayuse war in Oregon.

Mr. PETTIT. I will say to the Senator, that there are, no doubt, a number of appropriations which are original and proper appropriations, but the greater portion of this bill is to cover up money which has already been used from the Treasury. I ask the Senator if that is not so?

Mr. HUNTER. I think not. The Senator will find, if he will examine it, that there are very few cases in which any money has been expended, for which we are asked to make appropriation here. There have been obligations incurred in some cases; for instance, the exploration of the route across the unknown country between the Mississippi and the Pacific in the high northern regions, turned out to be more expensive than Governor Stevens supposed. After he got involved in that country, the necessity of the case required him to expend something more than he had, or to incur liabilities to a greater amount than the existing appropriation would authorize. There may be a case of that sort here and there, but it will be found that there are few such cases in this bill, and where they occur, they are generally for small amounts, and in regard to expenses which could not have been readily foreseen. These are deficiencies which must occur under any and every Administration. There is no amount of foresight or experience which will enable an Administration to prevent the occurrence of such cases. I shall be told, perhaps, that they ought to estimate to meet all these contingencies. If they did, and we were to make the appropriations accordingly, it would swell the general appropriation bills to inordinate bounds. It is far better, in order that we may keep some sort of proportion between the appropriations and what we believe to be legitimate expenses, that we should only appropriate as the necessity for expenditure is proved to exist.

Now, sir, when we are making appropriations for the next fiscal year, can we perceive all the exigencies which will arise, or the calls which may exist for public money, in order to meet the wants of the public service? We cannot. We appropriate for all which will probably arise; all that we can foresee. In the progress of the next fiscal year it frequently turns out that if a little more had been appropriated to one head we could have performed some important public service, and that there will be a saving of money, as well as a general advantage to the Government, to appropriate it in a deficiency bill to the service of that year, instead of waiting for another year, and postponing the public work and the public service, whatever may be its character, until that succeeding year. In such a case, a deficiency bill is entirely proper.

Well now, sir, I think, if the Senator will look into the history of our past legislation, he will find that there has scarcely been a year for the last forty when there have not been two appropriation bills passed at every session. It is true we have had different names for them. Before the alteration of the fiscal year, which I think occurred some ten years ago, changing its commencement from January to July, one bill was passed very early, called a temporary bill, to meet the temporary emergencies; but then there was a general bill passed afterwards. When we changed the fiscal year, throwing the appropriations so far ahead, we had two bills. The first was the general bill providing for all the probabilities that we saw in existence. The next we called a deficiency bill, which was to provide for contingencies which had not been foreseen, but had been developed in the course of the fiscal year.

I do not believe there is a single case in this bill, if there is I do not now recollect it, in which we propose to appropriate money to carry out contracts which have been made beyond authority given by law. All the appropriations, with some very few exceptions, are to meet contingencies which were not foreseen, and which have arisen in the course of the progress of this fiscal year; and being so, it seems to me that it is legitimate and proper to make appropriations for them.

So much for the general objections to any deficiency bill. I come now to the objection which has been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WALKER] to this amendment of the committee. He seems to think that this is a provision to meet the wants of California. It is a provision, as I understand it, to protect the Government against what we believe to be improper demands on the part of the State of California. It is a provision designed to place the Government in a position in which it can make provision for its public officers, without being forced to pay the sum which we believe to be unjustly demanded by the State of California to obtain a perfect title to this lot. In order that we may make provision, without yielding in this point, in regard to which we are not willing to yield, we propose to allow the Secretary to buy a site elsewhere; that is the whole proposition. But the Senator wants to know how it is that this money was expended upon this lot with an uncertain title. It was not expended until the former Attorney General had given an opinion pronouncing the title, in his estimation, to be good; but after the work was commenced it was suggested that there were doubts upon it; and I believe the present Attorney General thought there was so much doubt in regard to it as to make it proper and politic to withhold any further expenditure of money upon that lot. The difficulty in the case arises out of a decision made in Alabama, that lands reclaimed from the sea or from rivers, which had been covered by water, belong to the State; and it is under that decision, I believe, that the State of California claims this lot. Whether the claim be rightful or not I do not now pretend to say. I believe the weight of opinion is against her; but still it is thought that the title is sufficiently doubtful to make it improper and impolitic to go on with further expenditures upon it until the matter is settled. That is the whole case.

So far as economy is concerned, it was thought better to go on with the completion of this building, than to be paying the enormous rents which the Government is now paying in that city, from $130,000 to $140,000 per year. It was believed that this case differed from the others, because the appropriation was not merely designed to hasten a public work which was necessary for the public service, but it was designed to protect the United States against improper demands, to save the Government from losses which may occur if we go on building on this lot, which we shall perhaps be required to do, under the existing state of the law, or else have to pay damages to the contractors.

In regard to the custom-house in Maine, I do not stand here to dispute the propriety or necessity of some appropriation at the proper time for such purpose, but it seems to me to stand on different grounds from this. It stands on the same grounds with many other demands for custom-houses. I oppose it, because I know that if we agree to this we shall have to agree to others; and if this amendment, which the Committee on Finance has reported, should be amended by adding any other custom-house, I shall feel constrained to vote against it. I shall vote against it because I believe, from what has already happened, that it would endanger the bill itself, when it goes back to the House of Representatives. We all know that the very fact of adding these custom-house appropriations did once defeat the deficiency bill, and it was only passed by separating it from considerations connected with these public edifices. That was the only mode by which it could be passed. Now, I am not willing to add that obnoxious matter, and force it upon the House, whether it be reasonable or unreasonable in the House originally to have entertained such objections.

I desire to provide for the wants of the Government. I desire to provide for them quickly, because otherwise the deficiency bill will be useless unless we can pass it in time to meet the wants of the Government in the present fiscal year; and for that purpose I am disposed to put aside all controverted matters. I cannot demonstrate perhaps to the satisfaction of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] with positive certainty and absolute precision, that the addition of these custom-house appropriations to this bill will destroy it in the House of Representatives. That is a matter of judgment and of opinion. I have inquired from those who seem best acquainted with the temper and disposition of the House, and such is their opinion. And in deference to that opinion I have determined, so far as I can, to keep off these appropriations from this bill. I may be mistaken, but I do not think I am. I believe that if we add this, there are others which we shall be called upon to add for reasons equally good; and if we do attach to the bill appropriations for custom-houses, I feel very sure that we shall lose it in the House.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to ask him what is the whole amount appropriated by this bill?

Mr. HUNTER. It is a little over two millions, if we put in all that the committee of the Senate propose, in addition to what was appropriated by the bill as it came from the House. It appropriated between one and two millions of dollars, as it came from the House.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to ask another question, How much, in amount, has the Senate committee proposed to add to the bill?

Mr. HUNTER. I think we propose to add between seven and eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia if there is any other case of a custom-house which has been burnt; whether there is an instance in any other place of a building accommodating all the public offices and the public business of the Government, which has been destroyed so as to throw everything into the state in which it is at Portland at the present time?

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know that there is any other case in which a custom-house has been burnt, but there are doubtless other cases which are thought, in the opinion of their friends, to be quite as strong as that; and the honorable Senator will find, if his proposition be added, that there will be others equally strong presented.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not understand how that can possibly be.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, I am inclined very much to concur in the opinion with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. PETTIT] in regard to this bill and all similar bills. I have not been here very long, but I have never been here at any session when we have not had a deficiency bill before us. I do not mean to say that such bills are palpably in violation of the Constitution; but this much I do say, that there are a great many items in this bill which are in violation of the spirit and intention of the Constitution. The Constitution declares that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury, except in consequence of appropriations made by law. There are various appropriations proposed in this bill to make up for moneys already expended. They may not have been actually taken out of the Treasury and paid to the contractor or the agent, yet the fact is palpable that the Government owes the money, if it has not been paid, and we are placed in the position either of repudiating the debt, which would be an act of dishonor that no Senator would entertain for a moment, or to make an appropriation for the money which has already been expended. Now, that is a violation of the spirit of the Constitution, to say the least of it.

But this is not the only objection which I have to this course. One of these three things, I think, is self-evident: either that the Departments that send in their estimates here are very inadequate to the performance of their duty, or they send in their estimates much too low; or else the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of that power which they have—a sort of parsimonious power, for the purpose of making political capital at home—reduce the estimates, and thereby force upon the Departments the necessity of expending money not appropriated by law. Either one of these things is true, or else there is a palpable violation of the spirit and intention of the Constitution by the Departments.

Now, Mr. President, I think my whole history here, short as it is, will demonstrate that I have never been found wanting in a spirit of liberality. If I have any sin to answer for, it is that of prodigality, both personal and general. I believe I vote for almost every appropriation which is presented. I am not afraid to spend the public money. I am willing to spend it whenever it is necessary, and when it has even the semblance of necessity; but I want every man to do it upon his individual responsibility before the country; and I am not willing that any Department of this Government shall spend money, and then turn upon me, without consulting me, without permitting me even to judge of the question, and present to me the alternative either of paying the money or repudiating. I would pay the money, though it were four times as much, rather than repudiate a single dollar.

Now, sir, I am unwilling to continue this system, and, for myself, I concur with the Senator from Indiana. In my judgment this is the last deficiency bill for which I shall ever vote in the Congress of the United States. I may vote for some deficiencies of a particular character, which could not have been foreseen; but I cannot and will not hereafter vote for a bill running through all the Departments of the Government, making appropriations for the salaries of officers in every Department, which could have been, and must have been, foreseen.

Do you not remember, Mr. President, that at the close of the last session of Congress—I know the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance remembers it—when the estimates came in here from the Departments, in either one branch of Congress or the other, (I will not say which, because I am forbidden to speak here of the other branch,) those estimates were cut down below a point which any sensible man ever believed could be justified by the necessities of the country. We know that fact. They were cut down by those who wished to make political capital at home in the next canvass, to go before the people, and raise a hue and cry against profligacy by others, and to show by their votes that they were the peculiar guardians of the Treasury of the country. From this cause followed, as a matter of course, many of these deficiencies; and you, sir, and I, are called upon to bolster up and sustain men in such a spirit of wild demagogism. For myself, I am opposed to it. Let the Departments make the necessary estimates. Make them large enough. Double them, if you please, and I will vote for them. But when estimates are made, and they are cut down below what, in the judgment of the Government, is necessary, we are turned upon at the next session, and told here is a deficiency which you must appropriate for or repudiate a debt, I think it is unjust to the Congress of the United States. I think we can arrest it, and ought to arrest it; and there is no better time for it than now.

The distinguished and honorable Senator from Virginia tells us that it has been the custom for thirty or forty years to pass such bills. I am tired of this idea of age, and the holding of it up in terrorem over gentlemen. That is the same argument which I had to meet here a short time ago in relation to the Missouri compromise. I was told that I was not to touch that "sacred" thing, because it was thirty years old; and now we are not to arrest an abuse of the Government because it has continued for thirty or forty years. If it is an abuse let us arrest it now. This is an age of progress. I do not mean young Americanism progress; but I mean a progress of reason, and judgment, and common sense, and proper responsibility. Let every man bear his own responsibility. I am willing to take mine. Make your estimates large enough to cover up all your expenses, and let us like men come up and vote for them. I shall vote for this bill because it is in part to pay for debts which have been contracted; but hereafter I shall never vote in favor of another general deficiency bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee says that he has found that a deficiency bill has always been reported at every session since he has been here. That is true, and if he shall remain here until the day of his death I doubt not he will find annually a deficiency bill reported. I think the occasion which calls for it has been well stated by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance. There are unforeseen expenditures which are required within the year, and which cannot be provided for in the annual appropriation bills. These are appropriations which good and sound economy requires should be made, and are made during the year, although they are not provided for in the annual appropriation bills.

Now, sir, the Senator from Tennessee himself says that this may not be the fault of the Government but of a class of individuals; but he avows his purpose hereafter not to vote for a deficiency bill, notwithstanding the sums appropriated may be due to honest workmen, to individuals who have entered into obligations with the Government, who have discharged their contracts, who have honestly and fairly earned their money, but who, in consequence of a course which is objectionable, perhaps to everybody, taken by certain other individuals, have not been able to receive their dues; and appropriations are not to be made even to pay that class of Government liabilities! Such liabilities will always occur, and such liabilities will always be paid, I think.

It was not my object to enter into a discussion of the propriety of deficiency bills, or of the circumstances or necessity which required them; but it was my purpose to answer a declaration made by the Senator from Indiana, which was far too broad, and which I feel may, unintentionally on the Senator's part, do injustice to the Secretary of the Treasury. He avowed that a greater portion of these appropriations were not only without law but in direct violation of law; that these expenditures were not only without law, but in direct violation of law.

Mr. PETTIT. The Senator will allow me to say that I certainly cast no aspersions on the Secretary of the Treasury, but I spoke of the general policy of the Government. It is known that I entertain the kindest feelings for the entire Administration—for every branch of it.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have no doubt of it; but still I think, by implication, a wrong impression might be drawn from what the Senator said, and it was for the purpose of correcting it that I rose. I do not say that the Senator designed to make any charge of the kind—far from it—but he made the general declaration, and he illustrated it by reference to the expenditures which were made in the erection of Government buildings; and those Government buildings are mainly in charge of that Department. Now, allow me to say to the honorable Senator from Indiana, and to the Senate, that I think I am justified in asserting, that the Treasury Department, in no single instance, have departed one inch beyond the limitations and provisions of law in reference to the erection of public buildings.

Mr. PETTIT. I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. HAMLIN. In no single instance have they departed from the limitation provided by law, but they have done this, and as wise and prudent officers, it was their duty to do it: When they have found an appropriation for a public building, in their judgment, after an actual survey and estimate, to be inadequate, while they have made a contract coming within the limitations and the provisions of law, they have added to that contract a qualification, that if Congress should see fit to make an additional appropriation for the purpose of making the building what it should be, then the Department should have the power of so changing it. They have made their contracts within the limitations of the law in all cases, with the addition of this qualification. It has been found, in various cases, that the appropriations have not been sufficient to make the buildings fire-proof, and then they have added the qualification which I have named, submitting it to Congress subsequently to make an additional appropriation for the purpose of making the building fire-proof; and if Congress should see fit to make the appropriation then the modification or change would be made; otherwise not.

I have a word to say in relation to the direct amendment before the Senate, and then I will not trouble them again. There are a large number of custom-houses and marine hospitals in process of construction, in various sections of the Union, and in various States in the valley of the Mississippi, and on the Pacific slope. There is an appropriation bill now in the House of Representatives, providing for increased appropriations to finish, or, in some instances, to change, the plan of construction, if it shall be deemed advisable, for those various buildings. There is no other case, save this at Portland, within my knowledge, where the whole structure has been entirely destroyed, and where there are no accommodations furnished, and where the Government has lost the accommodations which it has had for the custom-house and post office, and the United States courts. It involves precisely the same expenditure for those accommodations out of the Treasury which are required in California. There is, I grant, a difference in amount, and a difference in degree, but in principle both are precisely the same. Now, if there is any good or substantial reason why there should be an exception let it be made. I felt it to be a duty which I owed to my constituency, that this case, standing, as I believe, substantially upon the same foundation with that in California, should meet the same fate. In regard to the others, standing upon a different ground, I have nothing to say. I do not propose to mix them with this bill, or to ask a vote of the Senate upon them. They stand as a class. This stands separate from them, and for that reason I offered the amendment to the amendment. If it is advisable that an appropriation shall be made in this bill for the change of a site for California, I hope this appropriation will be made to rebuild the custom-house at Portland; otherwise, not.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I concur in very much of what has been said by the Senators from Indiana and Tennessee in reference to deficiency bills, and yet I am not prepared to go so far as the Senator from Indiana, and say I will not vote for them hereafter. That abuses are growing up and multiplying is true beyond all question, under this system of passing these deficiency bills. Now, sir, what is a deficiency bill? Probably, it is a bill supplying necessary deficiencies in appropriations already made, which could not be foreseen, and therefore could not be estimated for in the beginning. Confined to these, the sum appropriated by a deficiency bill would be very small. The Administration sends in its budget at the opening of the session, and it is published, and the whole country sees it. That far the responsibility of the Cabinet Ministers is fixed. But if they underestimate the absolute amount required for their own schemes, then the balance of the responsibility, the making up of the deficiency, is thrown upon Congress, and the country is not given to understand that the Administration is expending every year three, four, or five millions of dollars more than the budget sent to the country shows that it is expending. Wherever there is an absolute, existing deficiency, required by the necessities of the country, I shall be willing to vote for it; but I will not take into bills called deficiency bills new schemes, or put in appropriations for large sums of money, which have been expended without the shadow of authority.

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to say to him that I think, if he will examine this bill, he will find none such in it.

Mr. BROWN. I was coming to that. The very item before us strikes me as not being a deficiency. According to the Senator's own account, the $90,000 heretofore appropriated for the San Francisco custom-house, have been entirely lost to the Government, and we are about to abandon the lot which we purchased for that money.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator is mistaken; we are not going to abandon the lot; we are going to try our title to it.

Mr. BROWN. Is this appropriation of $250,000 then, to be made to try your title to that lot? No sir; but, according to the Senator's own explanation, it is to buy another and an entirely different lot, or, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, to buy another lot with a house upon it. This is a new scheme, having no earthly connection with the purchase which you have made. You bought a lot for $90,000, and the Senator says you are going to contest the title to that lot; but this money is not for that purpose. What connection has this appropriation of $250,000 with the $90,000 already appropriated? None on earth; and this appropriation is for an entirely distinct object, to wit: the purchase of another lot, or another house. I cannot regard it as a deficiency; but yet, so far as this bill is concerned, I would as soon vote for it in this bill as in any other bill. I am willing to vote for it, if the necessities of the country require it; but I dislike these misnomers. I dislike this thing of putting in appropriations of this kind in places where they do not properly belong.

Now, there is one point of objection which I make to the amendment, as proposed by the committee, and which, if it is not corrected, will prevent me from voting for it. The Secretary of the Treasury is allowed by the amendment, in his discretion, to purchase a house already built. To that I object most emphatically, because there will be found in the city of San Francisco no suitable house for this purpose. I am sure there will not be. You may buy a house, and buy it cheap enough; I do not pretend to say that cannot be done; but you cannot buy a proper house for the accommodation of the Government there. What will be the consequence? Why, sir, after four or five years, perhaps in a shorter time, we shall be asked to make new appropriations to build a new house, and the old one will have to be sold, and sold, possibly, at a sacrifice. I think the Government ought to have a custom-house there—one commensurate with the growth and prosperity of the city. I am willing to make an appropriation to buy a suitable lot, and then to build a suitable house on it, after it has been purchased; but I am not willing to send out the Secretary of the Treasury to buy houses already erected, and which will turn out in the end to be wholly unsuited to the purposes for which we are buying them. You may as well buy a house at Portland, another at Louisville, another at St. Louis, and one at New Orleans, and every other place where you want a custom-house. Let the Government go on as it is now doing. If it pays a few thousand dollars too much, what of that? Let it rent these houses where it cannot do better; but when you pretend to build a custom-house, build such a one as the interests of the country require, and make a sufficient appropriation for that purpose.

I repeat, I cannot vote to give the Secretary of the Treasury discretion to buy houses already built; but I am willing to vote liberal appropriations to buy lots and build houses where necessary. If the Government fails to recover the lot already purchased, of course it is a naked loss; but if it is recovered, it can be sold. I am not for delaying the work while a litigious lawsuit shall go on in reference to that lot.

Mr. HUNTER. I have before me a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject which explains the whole matter; and as there seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to it, I will read the letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 22, 1854.

SIR: I beg leave to bring to the attention of the Committee on Finance the condition of the custom-house at San Francisco.

The square bounded by Front Battery, Washington, and Jackson streets, part of the Government reserve in San Francisco, was selected by the collector, Thomas Butler King, for a custom-house, and the title submitted to the district attorney, who examined the same, and reported the title perfect in the United States, and not affected by a lease made by Captain Erasmus B. Keyes, on behalf of the United States, because of the reservation contained in the lease for the surrender of whatever part should be required for Government purposes. The selection of the site was approved by my predecessor, and the building of the custom-house contracted for, and steps taken to fill the square, and pile for the foundation, and some $90,000 expended, before it was ascertained that the State of California set up title to the Government reserves, as land covered by the tide; and, upon investigation, it was found the title of the United States was not free of doubt and difficulty, and in consequence thereof the work was suspended, and application made to the Legislature of California to release all claim to the square. The Legislature of California passed an act to sell the Government reserves, but exempted out of the sale part of said square which the custom-house was to occupy, but did not release title or claim to the same. The residue of the Government reserves claimed by the State of California was sold by the commissioners appointed by the act, and an attempt made to sell part of the custom house square, and an injunction obtained on behalf of the United States to prevent the sale.

A renewed application was made, by authority of this Department, to the State of California to release claim to said square; but the Governor, in his message, recommended it should not be done; and a letter has been received from R. P. Hammond, collector at San Francisco, to whom the application was intrusted, that there is no probability that the release will be made. A copy of the letter accompanies this.

The Government is annually paying rent in California for custom and warehouse purposes, post office, court-rooms, and offices, to the amount of $133,024 26, as will appear by the accompanying statement; and the contractor for the custom-house, which is also to have rooms for the post office and the courts, is delayed. The contractor may claim compensation for the delay, under these circumstances. Another site might be provided, and the building progressed with, or authority given to vacate the contract.

A suitable and proper site for the custom-house, post office, and courts, in an eligible position, will be costly; and, that the sum may be adequate, an appropriation of $250,000 in addition to the former appropriation, is recommended, so that whatever part may not be needed for the site may be applied for the building.

I have directed legal proceedings to test the title of the United States to the square selected for the custom house. Those proceedings will take years. The square is well selected for custom-house purposes; and the whole will be required for that, and other public offices. In the mean time, if the contract to construct the custom-house, &c., should be vacated, it would be cheaper to purchase buildings for custom-house, post office, court rooms, &c., than to rent. It is believed that a purchase could be made for what it would cost to rent suitable buildings for a term of five or six years.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JAMES GUTHRIE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. R. M. T. HUNTER,
Chairman Committee on Finance, U. S. Senate.

Mr. PETTIT. I have a few words to say in reply to the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.] The cases which he puts will properly and legitimately come under the head of additional and further appropriations, to which I should not object. Let us put a case. Suppose the Government of the United States concludes that it wants to build a custom-house at any port of entry, or buildings in the interior and shall describe what kind of buildings are wanted, of what materials they shall be built, how high, how broad, how long, and how permanently they shall be built, and Congress shall appropriate $200,000 for their construction, and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed to erect them. What now? The Secretary finds, on casting around for bids, that he cannot complete those buildings for that money; nevertheless the law has ordered him to go on and expend that money in the buildings. He does so. He makes his contracts if he acts prudently and wisely, no further than the money already appropriated, when that money is expended, he says to all hands, "You must stop; I can go no further until I present this matter to Congress at the next session, and then, if they appropriate more money, well and good." But that is not the policy that is pursued. That would be an additional appropriation, and I should have no objection to make such an appropriation in a proper case. But, the policy pursued is this: you direct that a custom-house shall be built at any important point, and Congress make the estimate of how much money they can afford to expend in it; but while Congress have by law designated the kind of building which shall be built, whether of stone or brick, and in this, that, or the other way, the Secretary of the Treasury (I do not charge it on the present Secretary, but I say this has been the policy heretofore) has taken upon himself to say that that is not a suitable building, that it is not fire-proof, that the materials are insufficient, and he will therefore take the responsibility of changing the plan, and he changes it to a more costly and magnificent structure, and then comes to Congress. He does not content himself with expending, although in a different structure entirely, the amount of money appropriated; he not only changes the structure and the order of architecture, but he expends more money, perhaps double the amount of money appropriated, and then comes to Congress, and asks an appropriation for a deficiency. That is the point of these deficiencies. That shows the difference between a deficiency and an additional appropriation.

Then take the Indian Department. Suppose Congress appropriate $50,000 for removing a certain tribe of Indians. The Administration go on and find that they cannot remove them for less than $100,000; but instead of saying "we will not attempt it, or will remove them as far as we can for that sum, and no further," they say, "we will go on and contract for the whole amount, and ask Congress to cover it up," or "we will pay it out of the Treasury as we go along." That is a power which the Departments have not got, and to which I object.

The Senator from Tennessee agreed with me, in the main, in my views of this bill; but he does not agree with the views which I shall now express, whether I expressed them before or not. They are these: If an Administration shall send to Congress their budget for a year, asking for $50,000,000, and the House of Representatives, in their great economy, or supposed economy, shall cut the appropriations down, say to $30,000,000, and tell the Administration, "that is as much as we will give you for carrying on the Government," then there may be some justification for the Administration going on and expending to that amount of money and no more, saying "you would not give us as much as we asked." I say that is the very reason why they should not expend more than the amount appropriated. Congress holds the purse-strings, the power to levy and appropriate money; and if they say that but $30,000,000 shall be expended, when an Administration proposed to spend $50,000,000, though the public service is going to decay and is suffering, I hold that it is the bounden duty of the President, and of his helpers and assistants, so soon as the money shall run out, to cease work at once; and if there be any grumbling in the country, let the President issue his proclamation and say, "the Constitution stares me in the face; I have used, and used economically, all the money which your representatives have given me, but I cannot, without violating the Constitution, and putting my hands into the Treasury unlawfully, use one dollar more; charge the responsibility to your representatives; look at my budget, and you will find that I asked for a sufficient amount to be appropriated, but your representatives, those whom you sent here, would not sustain me; chastise them, and charge the responsibility upon them." This is what the President should say.

He should tell the people that he has no power to spend a dollar beyond what is appropriated, and that all should go to ruin rather than that the Constitution should be violated. Let the responsibility fall where it ought properly to fall—on those who control the purse-strings of the country.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance whether there is a single item in this bill—not whether it is mainly made up of that class, but whether there is a single item in it to cover up money which has already been taken from the Treasury beyond the appropriations which have been made? If there is such an item I shall vote against the whole bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not believe there is an item to cover expenditures which have been made beyond the appropriations. Where there were no appropriations the money was not expended, but there are some items to cover liabilities incurred, and but few of these; and there are special circumstances attending them. There are some items covering liabilities which were incurred by public officers beyond the amount of appropriation.

Mr. PETTIT. Then I shall certainly do this, if no more: When the bill shall have passed, I will move to make its title correspond with the fact that it is a bill making further appropriations, and not filling up deficiencies of money already appropriated, in violation of law. I say, it is a censure upon the Administration, if they have used the money, and they ought to be heralded to the world as desiring to make up deficits to cover up that which they have taken from the Treasury. If they have not so taken it let this be called an additional appropriation bill, and not a deficiency bill.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, it is evident that my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, is mistaken in his belief that the bill can be passed in the morning hour. I must ask, therefore, that its further consideration be postponed, in order that the Senate may go into Executive session. I make that motion.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us fix some time to which the bill is to be postponed—let us say half-past twelve o'clock to-morrow. I hope the Senate will give me an hour and a half every morning until we dispose of the bill.

Several SENATORS. Very well.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill till to-morrow morning, at half-past twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—SECRET SESSION.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. WALKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the special order.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] has a motion before the Senate.

Mr. WALKER. I do not think the motion of the Senator has precedence. It is a question, if I understand it, as to whether we shall postpone the special order or not.

The PRESIDENT. That is true.

Mr. WALKER. I wish that the Senate may understand distinctly what we are voting upon. It is to postpone the special order, which is the homestead bill, in order to proceed to the consideration of Executive business. If the Senate vote for that motion I shall not rebel, but at the same time I prefer that the special order shall take precedence.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia withdraw his motion?

Mr. MASON. I do not, sir.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was about to appeal to the honorable Senator to withdraw his motion, for the purpose of allowing me to report, and ask the Senate to consider two joint resolutions from the House. One provides for the distribution of arms, and the other is explanatory of the law regulating the number of cadets to be appointed to the Military Academy at West Point. I hope both will be passed without any debate. I would state to the honorable Senator that the anxiety for passing one of these joint resolutions is on account of the necessity of appointing cadets at this time to enter their classes. That resolution is in but few words, and I hope the honorable Senator will permit it to be passed this morning, as I am very much pressed by members of the House, and by the Department, to have it passed as soon as possible.

Mr. MASON. I should be gratified if I could accede to the request; but I cannot, for reasons which I am sure the Senate will appreciate.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, I should like very much to have an understanding as to some time at which we can get the Senate to take up the homestead bill. If there is to be a regular pitched battle between the homestead bill and the Gadsden treaty, or some other matter of that sort not proper now to be debated, I wish to know exactly when it is to come on, and to know it as soon as possible. I wish, in other words, to divide the time. I make no announcement as to my partiality for either of these measures. I am openly for one, and the other is not a matter about which I am privileged to speak at present. What I wish is, a fair division of the time between them; and I want the friends of the homestead bill now to bring themselves up, night and morning, to the scratch, so that we shall test the matter before it is overslaughed. I know that that measure has been overslaughed in time past, under this sort of pressure; and I wish to warn its friends that it will be so again, if they do not take care. It has a great many enemies that it ought not to have, and I am astonished that it should have them. We are to have a severe conflict for it; and if the Executive business is to be prolonged for a great period, I wish to divide the time of the Senate between that and the homestead bill.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, there is another bill in regard to which I should like to make an inquiry of my friend from Iowa, as he is the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I have had, for some time, before the Senate, a bill granting one hundred and sixty acres of land to each of the old soldiers, and to their descendants, and I want to know what has become of it? I want a little portion of the time, not day and night, as the Senator from Iowa wants, but a small portion of the time of the Senate for the consideration of that bill. Sir, there are thousands, and tens of thousands in the old States who are interested in it, and when we are considering homestead bills, and having them forced upon us, I wish to inquire what has been done with the bill to which I refer, which has been so long before the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate?

Mr. MASON. I submit, if this debate is in order on the motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business?

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is. Gentlemen have a right to show reasons why the Senate should not proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. WALKER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks what has become of his bill to give to each of the old soldiers one hundred and sixty acres of land? I do not think anybody will complain of his lack of assiduity in pursuing that matter. He has been pressing at the heels of every land bill which has been before Congress for some time, and he has met with but very little sympathy from anybody else. I can inform him, however, that I have got that bill in my special charge, and I am taking particular care of it; and in order that his "old soldiers" may not get the advantage of anybody else, we propose to pass the homestead bill, and give one hundred and sixty acres of land, not only to each of them, but to everybody else, and that too in addition to what they have already had. Some of them have received land for five minutes' service; others for ten minutes', for an hour's, and for one day's service, and we propose to give to each of them, and to their widows, and their sons, and their daughters, by the homestead bill, one hundred and sixty acres of land. Unless the Senator is particular as to the manner in which they shall get their one hundred and sixty acres, he need not press his "old soldier" bill very strenuously, but let him vote for the homestead bill, and when that passes, they will get one hundred and sixty acres, in addition to what they have got under bills previously passed. I can inform him, however, that he shall have a report on his bill before a great while, but I cannot say that it will be favorable.

Mr. GWIN. I shall not interpose any objection or obstacle to the consideration of Executive business, but as notices have been served here in regard to bills which should have precedence, I give notice to the Senate and to the country that there is another measure, infinitely more important than all of the bills which have been spoken of, which I intend to urge upon the Senate at an early day, in preference to all others. I refer to the bill which was made the special order for this day, providing for the construction of a railroad to connect the waters of the Mississippi with the Pacific ocean. I am in favor of the homestead bill; I intend to vote for it precisely as it came from the House of Representatives, without dotting an i or crossing a t; but I am determined to urge the Pacific railroad bill as a question of more importance, and I hope those who are in favor of both measures will not come into collision. We are in this condition in regard to the measure which I propose to press forward at an early day. It has not been discussed yet in either House of Congress at this session. The homestead bill has been fully discussed, and has been passed by the House, and we can take it up at any time. It is completely within our control. The Pacific railroad bill is not. That is a subject which, if not brought up at an early day, will, I fear, be overslaughed entirely. I shall feel it to be my duty at an early day, certainly not beyond this day week, to ask the Senate to take up and dispose of that bill, no matter what may be in the way.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope that some day will be agreed upon, on which we may consider the homestead bill, and I hope it will be an early day, so as not to conflict with the favorite measure of my friend from California, the Pacific railroad bill. I do not know why we cannot make the homestead bill the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. WALKER. It is now the special order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then I hope we may proceed with it. It is a very important measure. It has passed the House of Representatives twice, but we have never yet had a vote upon it in this body. I think it is a measure of such transcendent importance, that we ought to give it a preference, and proceed to its consideration. I do not wish to interfere with other business, but I hope that bill may not be postponed.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I wish to state two reasons why I think it would be better to defer the consideration of the homestead bill, and they are reasons which I think appeal to the friends of the measure. I did not profess to be one of its friends, and if I am called upon to vote on it, without instructions, I shall certainly vote against it. But I observe, by the captions of the acts of the Legislature of Alabama, which have been sent to me, that numerous resolutions and memorials, in respect to the public lands, have been adopted by that body. My colleague and myself have not received a number, corresponding to those adopted, according to the captions. One of them may relate to the homestead bill, as nearly half the lands within the limits of my State are still public and unappropriated. Hence, I say, a reason personal to myself prompts me to ask that this measure may be deferred; but there is another reason which I think appeals especially to all the friends of the measure.

I suppose the friends of the measure wish to do the greatest good to the greatest number. Now, I observe, by extracts from the foreign papers, that a large emigration to this country, from different countries of Europe, will take place during this spring. The homestead bill, as it came from the House, provides by its terms only for those who are residents of the United States at the time of its passage. Hence, I would say to my friend from Iowa, the longer he defers this measure the more homes will be provided for the homeless, and the more land for the landless. Then, I trust, I do not appeal to his philanthropy in vain, when I ask him to wait, and to defer the measure until the last day of the session, in order that you may provide for all the German and other immigrants who will crowd upon our shores during the spring and the early part of the summer, and give all a home; but if you pass the bill now all those who come hereafter will be excluded, or they may be tempted to a crime which I fear this bill may induce very commonly, that of perjury; but if you will put it off till near the close of the session they may not be tempted to violate our laws by committing perjury, and they will, at the same time, be brought within the generous and wholesome provisions of the bill.

I trust, therefore, the Senator will agree that this bill shall give place to that of the honorable Senator from California. I ask it for my own sake; because I say that, without special instructions, I shall certainly vote against it. Indeed, I do not know but that I shall be constrained to do so in its present form, even with instructions. And I ask it further, in order that you may provide homes for the largest number.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

NEW SERIES.....No. 48.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am very well satisfied that my friend from Alabama cannot have read the bill, or he would not make the statement. I understand that he asserts now that the homestead bill provides for no other persons than are actually residents of the United States at this time?

Mr. CLAY. At the time of the passage of the bill.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Well, sir, I think the bill has a separate section directed to meet the very case to which the Senator refers.

Mr. ADAMS. I think not.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. My friend from Mississippi, who has deserted us on this question, receives with approbation the remarks of my friend from Alabama, and announces that it has not such a provision. I propose to remedy all these things, when we get at the bill, by offering such amendments as will meet the case in its broadest aspect. I propose, at least, to put upon the statute-book such a law as the Whig party put there in 1841.

Mr. MASON. I am very reluctant to interrupt the Senator, but it is manifest that the debate is now proceeding upon the merits of what is called the homestead bill.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I only wish to reply very briefly to my friend from Alabama, and I will give way in a moment. I wish to say that I want to meet that war upon the foreign-born population of the country. I wish to know if those who come from the land of Lafayette, and Montgomery, and Steuben, and Pulaski, are to receive now, at the hands of the American Congress, and the Democratic party, that war which Federalism has waged upon them from the day of the organization of parties down to this time? I want to place upon the statute-book that law just as it now exists in the preemption laws of the land; that is to say, I wish it to provide for those who are now residents, and such as shall signify their intention to become citizens. The poor German emigrant who lands at New Orleans, or New York, and works his way three thousand miles up the Mississippi with his family, and goes into Nebraska, or Kansas, or Minnesota, to work your roads and fight your battles, is the man who is identified with you in every way; and for him I want a homestead, and I trust I shall get it. If the bill is not now so worded, as to give it, we shall have it so amended, if we have the power.

Mr. WADE called for the yeas and nays.

Several SENATORS. It is not necessary to have the yeas and nays on this motion.

Mr. WADE. I withdraw the call.

Mr. BROWN. I renew it. As this is a trial of strength, I wish to know who is for the homestead bill, and who is against it.

Mr. RUSK. I do not regard this vote as any such test as the Senator from Mississippi chooses to make it—as a controversy between the homestead bill and anything else. The homestead bill is here, and can be attended to at any time. I think the argument is unfair. An appeal is made to the friends of the homestead bill to the detriment of a question upon which we cannot talk here, and which some of us regard as very important, and on which action ought to be taken shortly.

Mr. BROWN. I know of no measure whatever before the Senate anywhere which I regard as of more importance than the homestead bill. I cannot, however, go as far as some other Senators, and say that I will vote for that bill in any form in which it may be presented; but I do say that a homestead bill, which shall provide homes for those who are homeless, is, in my mind, the most important matter which can come before the Senate. Senators find time to pass bills here by the dozen, giving lands to railroad companies. We are told now that we must very soon take up and consider a great project for a railroad to the Pacific. That sort of legislation is in order, and may be called for at all times; but when you propose to do something which shall benefit everybody—the lowly equally with the great—then there is always something more important than that. I trust that the Senate will consider this vote as a contest between the two measures. Let us say whether it is more important to take up the homestead bill and give it some short consideration—put it under way. I do not ask to have it considered to the exclusion of Executive business, or to the exclusion of everything else, but that it may have some consideration, and not be allowed to sleep on your table, and be over-slaughed, from day to day, by something which gentlemen say is greater than it.

Sir, no measure is greater than this. It is the first measure before the Senate, and you can bring nothing here that is greater, because it is something which concerns every American citizen, from the highest even down to the very lowest. I am not willing to admit, by my action here, that legislation which looks only to great corporations, to great monopolies, or even to the nation at large, is of more importance than that which affects the individual interest of every man in the whole country. I want to see something done for this class. I want to see the Government do that which it has already too long delayed doing. And much as I respect the opinion of my distinguished friend from Texas, I must say, that in my judgment, after what has occurred this morning, this vote ought to be regarded as a test between the two measures. For myself I can say that I do not mean, if the homestead bill shall be taken up, to insist that it shall be considered to the exclusion of Executive business, or to the exclusion of every other matter, until decided; but let us take it up, and show the country that we do not mean to let it sleep the sleep of death upon the table, but that we mean to act upon it, and to act in good faith.

Mr. MASON. The Senate well know that the business for which we go into Executive session is of a character which, if it is not done within a limited time, cannot be done at all. There is no desire to bring that proposition in conflict with any measure before the Senate, but there are reasons why we should urge the measure in Executive session, because, if not done within a certain period it cannot be done at all.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, and the honorable Senator from Iowa, who have the homestead bill in charge, if they are desirous that it shall be brought up for consideration now? If so, I shall vote with them.

Mr. WALKER. For myself I can answer unequivocally that I am anxious that it should come up now for consideration.

Mr. STUART. I have attempted, somewhat informally, to ascertain the views of Senators upon the subject of the homestead bill; and I can say, to a considerable degree unsuccessfully, and I should like now to suggest to the Senator from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, whether he cannot agree that on to-morrow that bill may be considered. If we can come to such an agreement I will vote to go into Executive session now; but if we cannot, and if the disposition is to persist every day in motions to go into Executive session, until the business pending in that session is disposed of, I shall feel compelled to vote against it. I am willing, however, to compromise, and share the time, to take a portion of it for Executive session, and a portion for the consideration of the homestead bill. If we can have some such understanding, I shall be very glad to vote now, without further discussion.

Mr. MASON. In reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Michigan, I wish to say—

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope my friend from Virginia will give way for a question of order. I rise to a question of order. By the rules of the Senate it is provided that: in the opinion of a member, require secrecy, the President shall direct the gallery to be cleared, and, during the discussion of such motion the doors shall remain shut.”

“On a motion made and seconded to shut the doors of the Senate, on the discussion of any business which may,

In pursuance of this rule, we have heretofore, according to the old custom of the Senate, gone into Executive session at once, or refused to go, without debate. It is evident that a motion of this kind cannot properly be discussed in open session, and yet gentlemen go on here by the hour discussing the motion of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. In order to discuss it properly, we have to talk of matters of which we cannot speak in public. I insist, therefore, that the rule shall be observed.

The PRESIDENT. If the Senator asks that the galleries shall be cleared, the Sergeant-at-Arms is directed to clear the galleries.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the order will not be made. That rule of the Senate has no application at all to a motion to go into Executive session. Ever since I have been in the Senate, now eight sessions, the question has always been considered open to discussion. That rule applies to a case where a member of the Senate announces, in his place, that a certain subject under the consideration of the Senate, or about to come under the consideration of the Senate, ought not to be considered except with closed doors. The Senate, by that rule, declares that such respect shall be paid to the declaration of a Senator, as that, before proceeding further, the doors shall be closed. An ordinary motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business is not the case contemplated by the rule. Who gets up here now, and says there is a particular subject which requires that the doors shall be closed?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BADGER. No, sir; the Senator from Delaware cannot suggest that, because the motion before the Senate is to proceed to the consideration of Executive business. Should that be adopted?

Mr. RUSK. Should that be considered with open doors is the question?

Mr. BADGER. The question is on going into Executive session. The rule of the Senate is clear, that when the Senate proceeds to the consideration of Executive business strangers shall be excluded. The other rule applies to a different case. The question is now on a motion for an Executive session.

Mr. CLAYTON. If ever there was a question which required secrecy this is one. We are called upon to discuss a subject which we cannot discuss in public.

Mr. BADGER. Not at all.

Mr. CLAYTON. Undoubtedly; shut the doors, and I will show you in five minutes why it is impossible to discuss this subject without stating matter which cannot, under the rules of the Senate, be stated in open session. If there ever was a question which required secrecy it is this. I insist upon the rule; and if there is any difficulty about the technicality of the motion I hope the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations will vary it.

Mr. MASON. I vary it; and, in the language of the rule, I move that the doors of the Senate be shut.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. How can you clear the galleries if the doors be shut?

Mr. MASON. This is the rule of the Senate:

“On a motion made and seconded to shut the doors of the Senate, on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a member, require secrecy, the President shall direct the gallery to be cleared.”

The PRESIDENT. The rule is peremptory.

Mr. BADGER. Now, I beg to submit, if we are going to reverse the rules of the Senate, I have nothing to say; but I think we ought to know what we are doing. The case provided for by the rule which has been read is a case where a subject is under consideration in the Senate, and a Senator suggests that that subject ought not to be considered except with closed doors. This is a motion to go into Executive session. A Senator may say, “Why, there is no subject before the Senate but that motion.” What subject is there here? Are we going to reverse the rule, and say now that any gentleman may clear the galleries at his will and pleasure, and have us go into secret session without taking the sense of the Senate? By this course we should place ourselves in a very singular situation. It is the first time that any such attempt has been made, in eight sessions of the Senate that I have been here, to apply such a rule.

Mr. MASON. I do not mean to vary the usages of the Senate, but to avail myself of the rules of the Senate to get at the discussion of important public business, which requires that the doors shall be closed.

Mr. BADGER. What is the question?

Mr. MASON. I move to shut the doors of the Senate, and I understand by the rules, that when that motion is made, and when in the opinion of the member making it the discussion of the business to be brought before the Senate should be in secret, the President of the Senate is to direct the galleries to be cleared.

Mr. PETTIT. But we shall not then be in Executive session.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator be good enough to specify the subject on which he bases that motion?

Mr. MASON. I will communicate it to the Senator with great pleasure, but to him only in secrecy.

Mr. SHIELDS. But I want it communicated to the Senate. I understand that the rule which has been read, is—

Mr. RUSK. I call the Senator to order.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am in order; I am arguing a point of order.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that as soon as a motion is made to shut the doors it is the duty of the Chair to direct the gallery to be cleared.

Mr. SHIELDS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and then I can state my reasons for the appeal.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope all these technicalities will be put aside, and that we shall go into Executive session. We have not much time to-day to be detained with the homestead bill, and I trust we shall not take it up at this hour of the day. It seems to be a popular measure, and no doubt will have abundant opportunity for consideration. I do not think there will be any difficulty about that. I agree, sir, with the Senator from Delaware, that in discussing the relative merits of the subjects which call for the consideration of the Senate, the merits of the one which can be considered in open session may be discussed here, while the merits of the one which should be considered in secret session cannot be discussed. Sir, in all Governments there is a class of subjects, particularly those appertaining to foreign relations, treaties, war, and all matters of that kind, which require dispatch; and whenever the Executive sends a communication to the Senate, requiring the Senate to deliberate upon such subjects, they have always, according to usage been considered as privileged questions. I hope, therefore, that we may go into Executive session. I feel no great interest in all these questions, but it does seem to me to be a usage, and a constitutional usage, and I think it is a safe usage, for this body to consider those matters which require dispatch, and ought to be disposed of at once.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will state what I understand to be the meaning and purport of the rule which has been read. When a subject arises accidentally before the Senate, which some circumstance, growing out of our relations abroad or at home, may require to be considered in secret session, then a Senator can take the course suggested in the rule. But, sir, this is a case where a motion is made to go into Executive session. Now that motion must be considered in open session. It must be voted upon in open session. It can neither be considered nor voted upon in secret session.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I rise to a question of order. I wish to inquire whether debate is in order upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The PRESIDENT. The chair is of opinion that it is.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have stated that, in my humble opinion, from hearing the rule read, the meaning and intention is that the subject must be one which ought to be considered in secret session, or which a Senator may think ought to be considered in secret session. But if the subject evidently is one that must necessarily be considered in open session, then I hold that the doors cannot be closed; and why? There is a motion made to go into Executive session. We must vote upon it. Are we to vote upon it in secret session or in open session? Certainly in open session. Well, sir, every man who gives a vote in open session ought to be enabled to give reasons for that vote in open session. It will not do to give one set of reasons in secret session and then come out and vote, and not be able to give any reasons for that vote in open session. The thing would be absurd in itself. If the motion of the honorable Senator from Virginia prevails we should have to go into secret session—not Executive session—but to close the doors.

Mr. MASON. If the Senator will allow me, I will say, that I really do not wish to prolong the debate. I submit to him that this is the construction of the rule: The rule says a member may, upon his responsibility, move to shut the doors of the Senate, and when he has made the motion the President of the Senate is by the rule directed to order the galleries to be cleared. When that is done the Senate is in secret session, and it may determine whether the member was right, or whether the business for which he proposed that the galleries should be cleared was of a character to take precedence of other business.

Mr. SHIELDS. If that is the proper construction of the rule, the President of the Senate has no discretion whatever in the matter; but upon any Senator rising here in his place, upon any subject, pending any motion, any question, or any resolution, he can compel the galleries to be cleared and the doors to be shut. Is that the construction to be put upon this rule?

Mr. BUTLER. Let us go into Executive session. That is the best way of disposing of the matter.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am willing to do so, but not in this way. It is a very important question, permit me to say; and, in my opinion, if the rule be construed as gentlemen wish to construe it now, any one Senator can rise, on any occasion, and compel the galleries to be cleared, and the doors to be shut.

Mr. MASON. Undoubtedly; that is the purpose of the rule.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose I were to say a war was pending, could I not ask, on my responsibility, that the doors be shut?

Mr. CLAYTON. I will suggest to the Senator from Illinois that one member can get up here and speak for seven weeks, if he chooses.

Mr. SHIELDS. All I have to say is, that it is a singular abuse of a rule which was intended for a salutary and wise purpose; and I think my honorable friend from Virginia had better not resort to it on this occasion. I am willing to go into Executive session, but I wish to have the rules properly construed.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say, in a very few words, what is my opinion in relation to the decision of the Chair. It seems to me that if Senators will look at the rule, and look at the action of the Senate, and at the subject-matter now pending before the Senate, there can be no trouble in applying the rule, or understanding the decision of the Chair. It seems to me that, taking the rule and the state of things now existing in the Senate, there can be no reasonable doubt that the Chair is right. Now, let us see what the existing state of things is.

The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business. That is the pending motion. The Senator from Iowa suggested, as a reason why the Senate should not proceed to the consideration of Executive business, that there is a land bill, known as the homestead bill, which should be considered. The Senator from California suggested that there is a bill known as the Pacific railroad bill; and the Senator from Pennsylvania suggests that there is another bill. All these subjects are of a legislative character. Now, to discuss the question, and to determine with propriety whether we shall remain in legislative session and act upon these measures, or whether we shall go into Executive session, no matter for what purpose, (it is an Executive purpose,) to discuss these questions fairly and fully, this rule applies, and it is for that precise purpose that it is made, not that we go into Executive session, but if a motion is made to close the doors, then the President orders the galleries to be cleared, and we discuss freely, without any restraint, the question, whether we shall proceed to the consideration of Executive business, or whether we shall proceed with legislative business? Then, when you have thus applied this rule, you have the question so presented to you that you can discuss the propriety of one course as well as the propriety of the other; while in a legislative session we can only discuss the propriety of Legislative, and not of Executive business. This is my view of the rule.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I think the attempt of my friend from Maine upon this subject has not been successful in showing that the Senator from Illinois is not right. An attention to two rules of the Senate will, I think, remove all difficulty upon this subject. By the 41st rule of the Senate, it is provided:

"When acting on confidential, or Executive business, the Senate shall be cleared of all persons, except the Secretary, the principal or the Executive clerk, the Sergeant-at-Arms, and Door-keeper, and the Assistant Door-keeper."

The Senate has a rule, therefore, a general standing rule, that when it proceeds to the consideration of Executive business strangers shall be excluded. Now, a gentleman rises and moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business. That is the question before the Senate.

Mr. MASON. Not now.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. The present question is, in the terms of the 18th rule, "to shut the doors of the Senate."

Mr. BADGER. Very well; I will take it in that way. Then there is no question before the Senate; there is no subject before the Senate. The Senator rises in his place, and says that he moves to shut the doors of the Senate. Very well; now let us see if that helps the state of this case. The 18th rule, on which this motion is founded, is this: "On a motion made and seconded to shut the doors of the Senate on the discussion of any business." Now, if we have no question before us, if we have no "business" before us, what is the subject-matter which is now before the Senate on which the Senator makes his motion to shut the doors? Why, sir, see how curious it is. The rule says: "On a motion made and seconded to shut the doors of the Senate on the discussion of any business"—some business. There must be something here in the nature of business. Have I a right to come in the moment the President takes his seat in the morning, and say, "I move to shut the doors of the Senate," and turn everybody out because, in my opinion, there will be, or may be, or should be something before the Senate in the course of the day which requires that there should be a discussion in secret? Why, surely not, sir. The rule is this: That when, on the discussion of any business in the Senate—not Executive business, of course, for we could not touch Executive business except with closed doors—

Mr. MASON. If the Senator will allow me, I will relieve myself and the Senate of the difficulty in which we are. My anxiety was to get the Senate into Executive session, and I made that motion. It was suggested, by a Senator on the other side of the Chamber, that, to preclude discussion, we had better adhere to the rule; but I am satisfied now that the true motion is to proceed to the consideration of Executive business. I withdraw my motion to shut the doors, and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business; and under the belief, and under my responsibility, I say in my place that that requires that the gallery should be cleared; and I now move, as ancillary to that motion, that the doors be shut.

Mr. BADGER. Very well; that is the same question.

Mr. SHIELDS. If the Senator from Virginia withdraws that motion, I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. BADGER. I renew the appeal, because the Senator from Virginia makes the same demand, to shut the doors. I have no objection, myself, that the rules of the Senate shall be so amended as to provide that the question of going into the consideration of Executive business shall be decided without debate. I have no disposition to debate this question, but I have not the least idea in the world of having the rules and the whole practice of the Senate overturned for the purpose of having an Executive session.

Now, sir, the question under the consideration of the Senate, which the Senator from Virginia suggests in his judgment requires that the doors should be closed, and be discussed in secret, is the motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business. There is then no business before the Senate. There is a motion that we shall proceed to the consideration of some business or other.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether a motion to go into Executive session is not business pending before the Senate?

Mr. BADGER. No, sir; it has no reference to business in the sense of this rule. Beyond all dispute, the meaning of this rule is, that when there is before the Senate any question, or subject, or business, in its nature of a legislative character, ordinarily to be transacted in open session, and a Senator makes a motion to shut the doors, stating as his opinion that that business requires secrecy, what is to be done? Why, sir, the Senate is to go into secret session, not Executive session. When in that secret session they are to do—what? They are to discuss the propriety of that motion; and the rule says, the doors are to be kept closed until they have discussed the propriety of the motion for considering the business in secret session.

Now, sir, according to the Senator from Virginia, the motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business is business before the Senate, within the meaning of the rule; and that question is to be discussed in secret? Very well; let us see the operation of this. Then the Senate proceed to discuss it in secret; and what do they decide? What is the business, what is the question, when we go into secret session? What is the result? What have we to discuss then? The question, whether we shall proceed to the consideration of Executive business?

Mr. MASON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BADGER. That is the only question. Does anybody suppose that the rule was ever intended to apply to any such case? Has anybody ever attempted to apply it so before? Not at all. The only occasion on which I recollect this rule having ever been attempted to be applied was a number of years ago—I think, when my friend from South Carolina suggested that some matter pending before the Senate ought, in his judgment, to be discussed in secret session, and he asked that the galleries might be cleared. The subject was one in its nature legislative; one in its nature fit for, and proper to be considered in, open session.

The only meaning of that rule, as I apprehend, is, that when there is a subject before the Senate ordinarily proper to be discussed in public session, if a Senator suggests that there is anything confidential or secret which ought not to be known to the public, the Senate pay so much respect to the suggestion as to close the doors while discussing the motion whether that subject shall be considered and disposed of in secret session.

In my judgment, the two cases are provided for by two distinct rules, and have no reference to one another. But if this proceeding is now adopted we shall subvert the whole system on which the Senate have heretofore acted, and, as my friend from Illinois suggests, we may have half a dozen times a day this process gone through upon the suggestion of any one member.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope all these matters will be waived. I think we are taking up a great deal of time in the discussion of this subject.

Mr. BADGER. I do not want to discuss the question of going into Executive session, for I object to the Senator from Virginia applying this rule for that purpose. I do not want to subvert the practice of the Senate; I am ready to vote for an Executive session.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that the Senator from North Carolina opposes going into Executive session on the grounds assumed by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BADGER. No, sir; I do not. If the motion of the Senator from Virginia is right, and we shall close the doors, we shall not then be in Executive session, but we have then to debate in secret session whether or not we will go into Executive session.

Mr. BUTLER. I have the floor, and I wish to make a single remark. Suppose my friend from Virginia, the organ of the Committee on Foreign Relations, were to come here from the President's house, after having communicated with the State Department in relation to some matters which had taken place in Cuba in reference to questions deeply involving the honor and interests, and requiring the prompt action of this Government; and suppose he were to rise and say that communications had been made by the President, and were upon the table, requiring consideration with closed doors, and he should move, upon his responsibility as a Senator from Virginia, that we go into Executive session, and that the galleries be cleared. For what? Certainly he has the right to have them cleared, for the purpose of considering the matter. Sir, I may be permitted to say that questions are before the Senate in reference to this motion which might be discussed in secret session. If my friend from Virginia were to come forward, and say that new developments have been made, requiring us to take action upon subjects which have been discussed, and were to move to go into Executive session upon his responsibility, because there are matters which require the dispatchful action of the Senate, I take it it would be within the purview of the rule. He has said so.

Mr. BADGER. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. BUTLER. He has said that upon his responsibility he believes the public interests require an Executive session, and in making that motion he moved that the galleries be cleared. If my advice be taken, however, all these motions will be withdrawn, and we will go into Executive session, without any further debate. I move that we go into Executive session, and by common consent I think we can withdraw all dispute.

Mr. BADGER. I have no objection to an Executive session.

Mr. STUART. If the appeal is withdrawn, I have no disposition to debate it, but if I am to be called to vote upon that appeal, I wish to say in a few words, what is the construction which I give to the rule. For the purpose of giving my views briefly, I will read the rule. It is in these words:

"On a motion made and seconded, to shut the doors of the Senate, on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a member, require secrecy, the President shall direct the gallery to be cleared, and during the discussion of such motion the doors shall remain shut."

Now, what have we before us? The business of the Senate, to which this rule applies, is, in this case, a motion to go into Executive session. Upon that business, as defined by the rule, the Senator from Delaware says that, in his opinion, the motion cannot be properly discussed in open session, and he moves to shut the doors. Now, the rule is imperative, that, as soon as that motion is made, the Presiding Officer shall order the galleries to be cleared. Before it is discussed at all, as soon as a member rises and says, "On this business now before the Senate I move to shut the doors," there is no discretion left in the Presiding Officer, but he is to order the galleries to be cleared, and the doors to be shut; and the rule then says they shall remain shut while the Senate is discussing this motion, that is, the motion to shut the doors. If the Senate, after hearing all that the Senator from Delaware has to say upon the subject, decide that it is not necessary to discuss in secret the motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business, then the Presiding Officer orders the doors to be opened, and the Senate go on discussing that question in open session.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? He says that when any Senator asks to have the doors shut and the galleries cleared, the doors must be shut and the galleries cleared. Then, he says, we go into secret session to discuss whether we will shut the doors or not.

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHIELDS. Thus we do shut the doors, and then go into secret session to discuss whether they shall be shut or not.

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir; and I will show the Senator that it is the clear and the only construction of the rule. I will read the rule again; and if Senators will only read it, there can certainly be no two opinions about it. It is, "On a motion made and seconded to shut the doors of the Senate on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a member, require secrecy." Now, what is the business? The business is the pending motion to go into Executive session. In the opinion of the Senator from Delaware, that business requires secrecy. He has a right under this rule to entertain that opinion. When, therefore, he says, "I move to shut the doors," it is the imperative duty of the Presiding Officer to order the doors to be shut, and the rule follows this up by saying that the doors shall remain closed while you are discussing the motion to shut the doors, that is, the motion to keep the doors shut while you discuss the motion to go into Executive session. That is the English of it, and the only meaning there is about it. Not that a Senator may rise in his place and say "Shut the doors." That is not it at all; but, "in my opinion," says the Senator from Delaware, in effect, "this motion to go into Executive session cannot be properly discussed in open session, and, therefore, I move to shut the doors." The duty of the Presiding Officer is to order the doors to be shut; and they are to remain shut while that motion is under discussion. If the Senate decide against the motion, then the doors are opened, and we go on discussing the motion to go into Executive session, which is, in this case, the "business" referred to in the rule, with open doors. On the contrary, if the Senate decide that the Senator from Delaware be right in asking that the doors be shut, we keep them shut, and the Senate go on with the discussion of the motion for an Executive session, which I say again is the "business" referred to in this rule, to be considered when the doors are closed, and they must be closed while it is under consideration.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think this is an important question as affecting the rules of the Senate; and therefore, if we are to decide it, it should be decided rightly. I do not think that the "business" referred to in the rule, upon which the doors may be closed on motion, is a motion to go into Executive session. I think it is clear that this rule refers to a case where there is a discussion pending in the Senate, and a member rises and suggests that, on the discussion of the pending question, the public interests require the doors to be closed. Then they must be closed until the Senate decide the question whether or not they ought to be closed—whether the discussion shall be in public or in private. It only relates to a discussion pending in the Senate, to questions in open Senate, to a matter of legislative business, if you please, which is being conducted in open session, and a suggestion is made that it is not proper to discuss that subject in open session, but that the doors should be closed. The Senate then close the doors to decide that point. The reading of the rule will convince any one, I think, that such is the case. "On a motion made and seconded to shut the doors of the Senate on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a member, require secrecy," the doors are to be closed, and are to remain closed until the Senate decide the point. It relates, therefore, to a pending discussion, a pending question. Sir, I submit that there was no pending question of discussion here on which such a suggestion could be made.

Mr. CLAYTON. The Senator will permit me to ask, Was not this question pending and discussed? Were not gentlemen engaged in the discussion of it when the Senator from Virginia made his motion, viz: Whether the homestead bill or the Gadsden treaty was entitled to preference? Was not the Gadsden treaty then necessarily, to a certain extent, a subject of discussion before the Senate, and was it not made a subject of discussion in open Senate? Was it right that it should be made a subject of discussion in open Senate? I put it to the gentleman, whether the word "business," as used in the rule, is not completely met by the facts? Was not the business of the Gadsden treaty under discussion? I beg leave now, while up, to say in reply to my friend from North Carolina, that "legislative business" is not in the rule; "legislative" is interpolated.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not understand that the Gadsden treaty was before the Senate for discussion when this motion was made. I do not think it could be before the Senate. It was not the pending question. It was not before us. The motion was not to proceed to its consideration. The motion was to proceed to the consideration of Executive business. The object may have been to confirm a consul at Dublin, or to confirm a postmaster. The question was simply, shall we proceed to the consideration of Executive business? That was not "business" under discussion before us. It was a motion to proceed to the consideration of business, there being none before us. That, therefore, is not a case to which the application of this rule can be made. This rule is, that where there is business pending, under discussion, and a member rises in his place, and suggests that discussion is not proper in open session, he can have the doors closed until the question of its consideration in open session can be determined. Otherwise, any Senator can break up your sessions on the suggestion that the public interest require an Executive session, and demand that the doors be closed for that; and when you go into Executive session, you find that the Senator wanted you to confirm an Indian agent among the Camanches, for example; and that Senator may think it a matter of great importance to have that Indian agent confirmed. Is it possible that such a construction shall be given to the rule as that any one Senator, for the sake of the confirmation of a small office, should be permitted to overrule the whole Senate, clear the galleries, break up your session, and, when you go into Executive session, you find it is only in regard to an immaterial appointment? In this case I do not pretend that the Executive business which we are to consider is not very important; but I am showing what will be, or what may be, the practice under the rule, if this construction be put upon it. I think it must be confined to the pending question under discussion at the time the motion is made; and the only question will be, the propriety of that discussion being in open or secret session.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, if I could be surprised at any difference of human opinion, I should be surprised at the doctrines and the opinions expressed in reference to this rule by the honorable Senators from Illinois and North Carolina. It seems to me too plain even for argument. I will concede that there must be business of the Senate under discussion at the time when any Senator on his responsibility states that that business requires secret discussion, and, therefore, moves to close the doors.

But, sir, the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] says this is a motion to go into Executive session, and that is not business within the meaning of the rule. I ask him on what ground, or by what right, he discusses it all, or was there any discussion on the subject, if the motion is not business before the Senate? A motion was made to go into Executive session. It was resisted on the ground that other business of the Senate, the homestead bill, was entitled to priority over any business which could come up in Executive session. The reasons on the one side as to whether that homestead bill was an important measure, or not, its advocates could present; but the comparison of that with the business which we might have under consideration, if we went into Executive session, no Senator on that side of the subject could state, nor could he open his lips in order to declare what that business was. In order, then, to a fair discussion of the question, which was as to the priority of the disposition of business relating to the country at large, and with a view to prevent the debate from being entirely one-sided, my colleague said, in substance, "on our side we can give no reasons; we cannot discuss this question; it requires, in order to determine the propriety of going into Executive session, that the doors should be closed; and I say that on my responsibility as a member of the Senate." If he were to state that on his responsibility as a member of the Senate, and if, when you closed the doors to discuss that motion, which I think the rule requires you to do upon his allegation, it should turn out that his object was merely to get a particular favorite confirmed, he would meet the censure of the Senate. I do not suppose there is any danger of any gentleman in this body ever making a motion on that ground; but you cannot determine, until you have closed the doors, what his grounds are; and when you shut the doors you determine it, because the act of shutting the doors is not going into Executive session. You shut the doors for the purpose of debating the question whether there is any business before the Senate which should require secrecy? The Senator only stands on his own personal responsibility for that allegation. He must suffer in the judgment of his compeers if he makes it on frivolous grounds; but you have no right to assume beforehand that it is on frivolous grounds until you have shut the doors and heard his reasons, and what is the character of the business which he says requires you should go into Executive session for the purpose of disposing of it.

Although the homestead bill, may not have been discussed, and although it may be of importance to the country, I submit that, unless the motion made by the honorable Senator from Virginia, which was to go into Executive session, was the business of the Senate, there was no right for any member to be heard on this floor in reference to it—that you cannot discuss in this body, in any mode, anything which is not business of the Senate, and that to confine the words "business of the Senate," merely to questions on the passage of bills, and to the discussion of particular points arising on them, is giving to the word "business" a meaning which it is by no means entitled to bear. If the question of the priority of business is open to debate—and it is always so recognized here—then I say it is business of the Senate.

Mr. TOUCEY. I do not rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of discussing this question. I think it does not need discussion; it needs only a statement of the decision of the Chair, to arrive at a proper determination as to whether that decision was correct or not.

The Senator from Virginia moved to go into Executive session. While that motion was pending before the Senate, a discussion sprung up. The motion was debated by several members in opposition. Upon the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia as to whether that discussion was in order, the Chair decided that it was in order to discuss that question, as the motion was then pending, and that it was in order to present the grounds which were presented in reference to three other very important bills, as to whether they were not entitled to priority. The discussion went on.

The Senator from Virginia then moved that the doors be shut; and, I suppose, for the very obvious reason that, if that discussion went on, you could discuss only one side of the question which was then under debate. Those who were in favor of going into Executive session were not able to assign their reasons. They could not represent to the Senate the importance of the business which was pending there, because we were in open session; and, therefore, the Senator from Virginia demanded that, pending the discussion of that motion, the doors should be shut. If I understand the decision of the Chair, it is that a motion to go into Executive session is "business" under the 18th rule, which declares:

"On a motion, made and seconded, to shut the doors of the Senate on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a member, require secrecy, the President shall direct the gallery to be cleared."

Now, the Chair has simply decided that the discussion of that motion was the discussion of business pending. Why, sir, suppose I had risen in my place and inquired of the Chair, "What is the business pending?" The Chair would have replied, "It is the motion of the Senator from Virginia to go into Executive session." That business, and it is most important business, was pending before the Senate. I think it obvious that the decision of the Chair was right, and the benefit of this rule is applicable to that motion—to that business as well as to any other business of the Senate. Certainly it is, if we are not to be forced into the position here of voting apparently in opposition to other measures, without being able to assign our reasons. I think, therefore, the decision of the Chair is right; and if it never has been decided before it ought to be decided now, that upon that motion, if it leads to a discussion, this rule may be applied, and the doors be shut.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would prefer that the yeas and nays be taken upon the question.

Mr. BADGER. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the appeal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question. A motion made by the Senator from Virginia to shut the doors; the business of the Senate pending at the time was a motion to go into Executive session. The Senator from Virginia suggested, upon his responsibility, that there were reasons why this motion, or this business, pending before the Senate, should be discussed in secret session. The Chair decides, that upon that suggestion it is the duty of the Presiding Officer, immediately, without taking a vote, to have the galleries cleared. From that decision the honorable Senator from North Carolina appeals, and the question is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?"

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bayard, Bell, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dodge of Wisconsin, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Hamlin, Hunter, Mason, Morton, Norris, Rusk, Shidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Wade, Weller, Williams, and Wright—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Brown, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Shields, and Walker—9.

The galleries were cleared, and the doors closed; and after some time being spent in secret session, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, March 27, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. A bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on Friday last, and there is an order of the House in reference to it which must be executed before any other business is in order; it is a bill making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling twenty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1855.

On that bill and the amendments the previous question was ordered; and, until it is disposed of, nothing can be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ENGLISH. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given, for the purpose of reference.

The SPEAKER. It will be remembered that the unanimous consent to introduce the bill will set aside even the order of the House, if the gentleman desires to have the bill considered now.

Mr. ENGLISH. I only desire to have it referred to a committee.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If it is understood that the object is only to refer the bill, I have no objection to its introduction.

Mr. ENGLISH. That is all.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I make no objection. The bill was then received, read a first and second time by its title, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill donating a portion of public lands, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the Ohio and Mississippi railroad, in the State of Indiana, by the way of the Falls of the Ohio and Evansville, to the Mississippi river, at or near Cairo.

Mr. ORR. I call for the regular order of business.

CONTESTANT FROM NEW MEXICO.

Mr. HUNT. Will the gentleman be kind enough to allow me to make a motion to refer a resolution which was offered the other day by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. MILLER,] to pay the contestant from New Mexico, (William Carr Lane,) his per diem and mileage? I would like to have that resolution referred to the Committee of Elections. There can be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina yield to the suggestion of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. ORR. Will it lead to debate?

Mr. HUNT. Not at all. I merely ask to have the resolution referred, that the committee may report upon it.

Mr. ORR. Then I have no objection.

The resolution indicated was then taken up, and referred to the Committee of Elections.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE MOUTHS OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present the memorial of the Board of Trade of the city of Philadelphia asking Congress to make an appropriation for clearing out the mouths of the Mississippi.

No objection being made, the memorial was received, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CHEAP OCEAN POSTAGE.

Mr. SKELTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey with reference to cheap ocean postage.

There being no objection, the resolutions were then received, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

They are in favor of a reduction in the present rates of ocean postage to the uniform charge of ten cents for the mere transportation of a single letter from any port of the United States to any port beyond the sea at which the American mail packets may regularly touch.

JOURNAL OF THE EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to offer the following resolution.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Joint Committee on the Library inquire into the expediency of replacing the volumes of the Exploring Expedition which were lost by the burning of the Library, and of the reporting a joint resolution for the printing of an extra number of copies of the work on the Exploring Expedition, and for such distribution in the congressional districts as they may deem proper.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

ARMS TO THE STATES.

Mr. PRATT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a joint resolution relating to the distribution of arms to the States. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that it be printed.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it is so ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is House bill No. 46, being the Indian appropriation bill reported to the House from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on Friday last, with several amendments.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to have the amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union read; and, if gentlemen require a separate vote on either of them, they can signify it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that a number of amendments have been proposed by the Committee of the Whole to the Indian appropriation bill. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] suggests—and such has been the practice of the body—that the amendments be first read over, and any gentleman desiring a separate vote upon any one of them can rise and so state. The balance of them, to which no objection is made, will be voted on en masse.

SALARIES OF JUSTICES OF SUPREME COURT.

Mr. PECKHAM, by the unanimous consent of the House, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, to regulate the salaries of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States; which, having been read the first and second time by its title, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GRANT TO INDIANA.

Mr. MILLER, of Indiana, by the unanimous consent of the House, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, granting a portion of the public lands to the State of Indiana to aid in the construction of a straight line railroad from Evansville to Indianapolis, in said State; which, having been read the first and second time by its title, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LAND DISTRICTS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. RICE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up from the Speaker's table for consideration the following bill:

A bill (H. R. No. 166) to establish additional land districts in the Territory of Minnesota.

Mr. ORR. Is it proposed to dispose of that bill now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. ORR. I hope the Indian appropriation bill will be disposed of first.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Orr] was aware of the merits of this bill, I think he would not make any objection to its being considered at this time. The bill adverted to is one which was considered in Committee of the Whole during the time when the House was engaged on territorial business. It was reported without any objection, and it now lies on the Speaker's table in a class where it cannot be reached for some time, unless it be taken up now.

INDIAN BILL AGAIN.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would say to my friend from Illinois that we could have disposed of this Indian appropriation bill, and got it out of the way in the time that has been consumed in attempting to put one bill ahead of another. I therefore ask for the regular order of business, in order that we may dispose of the Indian appropriation bill, and get it out of the way of other business.

The Clerk proceeded to report the amendments to the bill made in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, called for separate votes on the sixth, seventh, and ninth amendments.

The question was then taken on the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, eighth, and tenth amendments, on which separate votes had not been asked, and they were adopted.

The Clerk then reported the following amendment—the sixth—on which Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, had asked for a separate vote:

“For expenses of making presents of agricultural implements and farming utensils to the Pueblo Indians, in the Territory of New Mexico, $10,000.”

The question was taken; and the amendment was adopted.

The seventh amendment, upon which a separate vote was demanded, was then read, as follows:

“For expenses of holding a council with, and making presents of goods and provisions to, the Blackfeet, Grosventres, and other wild tribes of Indians, immediately within or adjacent to the eastern boundary of the Territory of Washington, and for defraying the expenses of conveying a delegation of the chiefs of said tribes to Washington city, $100,000.”

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

Mr. COBB called for tellers upon the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

The question was then put, and decided in the negative—yeas 61, nays 89; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Banks, Bell, Bliss, Carpenter, Chastain, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Dent, Dickinson, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Everhart, Fuller, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Andrew J. Harlan, Henn, Hill, Hunt, Kerr, McDonald, McDougall, Macy, Maxwell, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Pennington, John Perkins, Phelps, Pringle, Ready, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Russell, Salin, Seymour, Gerrit Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Russell, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Vail, Walker, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Daniel B. Wright—61.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Barry, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Bocock, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Caruthers, Caskey, Chrisman, Cobb, Cox, Cullom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dowdell, Elliott, Ellison, Paulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Goode, Grey, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, May, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Peckham, Powell, Pratt, Reese, Riddle, David Ritchie, Ruffin, Sapp, Seward, Simmons, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William K. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, John J. Taylor, Tracy, Vansant, Wade, Walley, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Wells, and Hendrick B. Wright—89.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The ninth amendment, upon which a separate vote was requested, was then read, as follows:

To Cherokees residing in States east of the Mississippi river, in full of all demands under the provisions of the treaty of 29th December, 1835, and the supplemental articles thereto of 1st March, 1836, and the treaty of 6th of August, 1846, except the amount of $53,33½, funded per capita to certain Cherokees for subsistence and removal, $92,695 19, with interest from the 14th December, 1852, to time of payment: Provided, That in no case shall any money hereby appropriated be paid to any agent of said Indians, or to any other person or persons than the Indian or Indians to whom it is due: Provided, also, That the Indians who shall receive the said money, shall first respectively sign a receipt or lease acknowledging the same to be in full of all demands under the aforesaid treaties.

Mr. HAVEN. Upon that amendment I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put, and decided in the negative—yeas 71, nays 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Banks, Belcher, Breckinridge, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskey, Chastain, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Thomas Davis, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Eastman, Edmunds, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Goode, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Hill, Hunt, Kerr, Latham, Lilly, Macdonald, McDougall, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Norton, Orr, Parker, Pennington, Pratt, Pringle, Purnyear, Ready, Reese, Ruffin, Russell, Seymour, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William K. Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Trout, Upham, Vail, Walker, Walley, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, and Daniel B. Wright—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Thomas H. Bayly, Bennett, Benson, Bocock, Boyce, Brooks, Bugg, Caruthers, Chandler, Chrisman, Cobb, Cox, Cullom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Elliott, Ellison, Fuller, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, McCulloch, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, May, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Preston, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Salin, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Shaw, Simmons, Skelton, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Vansant, Wade, Walsh, Wells, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Yates—86.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, it was put, and decided in the affirmative.

The bill being engrossed, was subsequently read a third time, and passed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put; and the latter motion was agreed to.

THE RESCUERS OF THE SAN FRANCISCO.

The SPEAKER. There is a proposition pending to suspend the rules, and that supersedes every other business until disposed of.

The motion, holding over from last Monday, is to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing a resolution, which will be read by the Clerk.

The resolution was reported, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be, and the same is hereby, discharged from the further consideration of joint resolution No. 16, being a joint resolution manifesting the sense of Congress towards the officers and seamen of the vessels, and others, engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers and the officers and crew of the steamship San Francisco from perishing with the wreck of that vessel; and that the same be now put upon its passage.”

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest, inasmuch as it will require a two-third vote to adopt the resolution, providing, as it does, to consider a measure making an appropriation, first in the House, and without reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that, as a matter of convenience, the House should by unanimous consent allow the resolution to be introduced, and then divide upon its adoption.

There being no objection, the resolution was accordingly introduced.

The question now being upon its adoption, on a division, eighty-three rose in the affirmative.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I demand the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and Bocock were appointed.

Mr. McMULLIN. Is it in order to say a word upon the subject of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. McMULLIN. Then I hope the House will not adopt the resolution.

The question was put; and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 46.

So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the resolution was not adopted.

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

The SPEAKER. Resolutions are now in order from the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to make a national move in the House to-day, and I can sincerely assure members that it is always a pleasure to me to be engaged in the performance of such a public duty. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make the Pacific railroad bill the special order for the third Tuesday of May next. As I have already remarked, the question is nationally important, and demands early consideration.

Mr. CLINGMAN. With the gentleman's permission, I would inquire for what period of time he proposes the question referred to shall be made the special order?

Mr. COBB. I propose that it shall be made the special order for the third Tuesday of May next, and considered from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Let the gentleman say that it be made the special order for one week from the time specified.

Mr. COBB. I have no objection to the gentleman's suggestion; but when the House has the question before it under its order it can close debate whenever members deem fit. It is an important question, and I think it would be best to leave the matter as to how long it should be considered with the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

Mr. COBB. I hope that objection will be withdrawn. Let us unite in this general move for the country.

The objection was not withdrawn.

Mr. COBB. I move then that the rules be suspended to enable me to make the motion indicated.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to suspend the rules; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 128, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Appleton, Banks, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Elliott, Ellison, English, Everhart, Flagg, Farley, Fenton, Flagg, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Kittredge, Knox, Lane, Latham, Lindley, Lyon, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougall, McMullin, Macy, Matteson, Maxwell, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, John Perkins, Preston, Pringle, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William K. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Watley, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—128.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, Thomas H. Bayly, Belcher, Boccock, Brooks, Chastain, Clingman, Dent, Fankner, Fuller, Goode, Hamilton, Haven, Hibbard, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, McQueen, Maurice, May, Morrison, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Reese, Rutlin, Shaw, Snodgrass, John J. Taylor, Tracy, Walsh, and Wheeler—39.

So the rules were suspended for the introduction of the resolution indicated.

Mr. COBB. I submit the following resolution: Resolved, That House bill No. 295, entitled "A bill to provide for the establishment of railroads and telegraphic communication between the Atlantic States and the Pacific ocean, and for other purposes," shall be made a special order for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the third Tuesday of May next, and shall thereafter be considered until disposed of by the committee.

On that resolution I call for the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would ask my colleague to accept of a modification of his resolution.

Mr. COBB. I am afraid to undertake its amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire that the time during which the bill shall be a special order shall be limited to some extent.

[Cries of "No!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. If we make special orders in the way proposed, we shall never get up any other business.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman's amendment be adopted, we shall defeat the bill.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was then ordered to be put.

Mr. HAVEN. I demand the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to make an inquiry on a point of order. Does it not require a two-third vote to pass a resolution making a special order?

The SPEAKER. It does.

The question was then taken on the resolution; and it was adopted—yeas 129, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Banks, Bell, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Breckinridge, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chrisman, Churchwell, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, Curtis, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Elliott, Ellison, English, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Flagg, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Kittredge, Knox, Lane, Latham, Lindley, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougall, McMullin, Macy, Matteson, Maxwell, Meacham, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Norton, Olds, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, John Perkins, Preston, Pringle, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Shannon, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William K. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Watley, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—129.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Thomas H. Bayly, Belcher, Boccock, Brooks, Caskey, Chastain, Clingman, Dent, Faulkner, Fuller, Goode, Hamilton, Haven, Hibbard, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lilly, McQueen, Maurice, May, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Reese, Rutlin, Shaw, Snodgrass, Tracy, and Walsh—40.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was put, and agreed to.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, notifying the House that that body had agreed to the amendments of the House to Senate bill No. 39, entitled "An act to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes."]

LAND DISTRICTS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. RICE. I now ask the House to take up and pass bill No. 166, "to establish additional land districts in the Territory of Minnesota."

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the House will proceed to take action on the bill indicated by the gentleman.

Mr. HAVEN. Is there not already a special order for territorial business?

The SPEAKER. There is such a special order for early in the month of May. This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union when acting under a special order some days since.

Mr. HAVEN. If territorial business has already been made a special order, I must object to taking up this bill now.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] will withdraw his objection. It is a bill, as I stated before, which was considered in Committee of the Whole when they were engaged upon territorial business. It was reported to the House without objection. The bill has for its object the establishment of four additional land offices in the Territory of Minnesota. There are five hundred townships of land surveyed in that Territory where there are no land offices, and where, at present, not an acre of land can be purchased. It is important that this bill should be passed, and that these land offices should be established, so that emigrants going there in the spring may purchase their lands. I hope there will be no objection on the part of the House to taking up the bill now and passing it. The question is only upon the amendment which is offered in the nature of a substitute. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking it up.

Mr. HAVEN. If it is the general sense of the House that we should make special orders and then not follow them, I will withdraw the objection I made.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the question will be upon the amendment, which is in the nature of a substitute, as the Chair understands, and which the Clerk will now proceed to read.

The bill having been read the first and second time by its title, as follows: "A bill to establish territorial land districts in the Territory of Minnesota," was then read through by the Clerk.

The substitute for the bill was then read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The question now, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, is on the adoption of the substitute that has been just read.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the question is upon the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, that bill may be all very right, and, for aught I know, is so. Still, in my judgment, it would be well to refer it. I therefore move its reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HENN. I would state to the gentleman from Ohio that the bill has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DISNEY. Then I ask leave to withdraw my motion.

There being no objection, the motion was withdrawn.

The question was then taken on the amendment; which was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, having been engrossed, it was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

CHAPLAINS TO CONGRESS.

Mr. MEACHAM. I am about to leave the city this evening, and will be absent for a few days. I therefore ask the permission of the House to allow me to make a report from the Judiciary Committee, and to move that such report be ordered to be laid on the table, and printed. It is an adverse report upon the petitions asking that the office of Chaplains in Congress, the Army and Navy, be abolished.

There being no objection, the report was received and ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled, bills of the following titles; which, thereupon, received the signature of the Speaker:

Act for the relief of George G. Bishop and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased; and Act to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes.

STEAM FRIGATES FOR THE NAVY.

Mr. BOCOCK. I offer the following resolution. It is important and national:

"Whereas, a proper regard for the interests of the country demands that our naval force shall be promptly increased: Therefore,

Resolved, That House bill No. 52, entitled "A bill to authorize the construction of six first-class steam frigates, and for other purposes," be made the special order of the day for Tuesday, the 28th instant, at one o'clock, and from day to day until the same be disposed of.

Mr. BOCOCK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to receive and consider this resolution.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

Mr. BOCOCK. Then I move to suspend the rules for that purpose; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then put; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 125, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Boccock, Boyce, Brooks, Bugg, Carpenter, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cullom, Cutting, Dean, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmunds, Elliott, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagg, Franklin, Fuller, Goode, Goodrich, Green, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Hibbard, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Johnson, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Lyon, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougall, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, May, Meacham, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Nichols, Mordecai Oliver, Packer, Parker, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William K. Smith, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Watley, Walsh, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburne, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, and Yates—125.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Barry, Bell, Caruthers, Chastain, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Disney, Eastman, Edgerton, Grow, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hendricks, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, Lilly, Matteson, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Pringle, Shannon, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, Wade, Warren, Wells, and John Wentworth—35.

So the rules were suspended, two thirds voting in favor thereof.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, transmitting to the House a communication in writing; also, informing the House that he had signed sundry private bills; and also acts of the following titles:

H. No. 14. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to divide the State of Arkansas into two judicial districts," approved March 3, 1851; and

H. 135. An act for the relief of the United States troops who were sufferers by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco.]

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BOCOCK. As this is a resolution of some importance, and as some of my friends desire that the preamble should be stricken out, if no one objects, I will so modify the resolution as to leave out the preamble.

There was no objection, and the resolution was accordingly modified.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia if this resolution proposes to limit debate upon the bill to which it refers to any particular day?

Mr. BOCOCK. No, sir; it does not. I prefer to leave that matter to some future time, when the pleasure of the House may be consulted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will fix some limitation. These other special orders will commence directly; and there is no earthly object in making any subject such, unless we can provide that one shall not interfere with another. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will fix some day for the debate upon this subject to terminate.

Mr. BOCOCK. I will say, in reply to my friend from Alabama, that when the House shall go into the discussion of this subject in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I shall propose a resolution terminating debate upon it, leaving the House to fix its own time; but I do not wish now, in advance, without knowing what discussion members of the House may wish to have upon the subject, to fix any such limitation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind gentlemen that discussion is not in order.

The question was taken; and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BERNHISEL obtained the floor.

Mr. BOCOCK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken, and the latter motion was agreed to.

TERRITORIAL LIBRARIES.

Mr. BERNHISEL, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making a small appropriation to increase the territorial libraries of Minnesota, Oregon, Utah, and New Mexico; and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

MAILS FROM NEW YORK TO WASHINGTON.

Mr. FARLEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution, which I think is somewhat national in its character. If objection be made I will then move that the rules be suspended, for the purpose I have indicated:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire whether greater certainty, dispatch, and economy, cannot be secured in the transmission of the mails between the cities of New York and Washington, via the cities of Philadelphia and Baltimore; also to inquire into the expediency of the establishment by Congress of an additional post route by means of a railroad, in as direct a line as may be between the first-named cities, connecting with the other two; the said committee to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. LILLY. I object.

Mr. FARLEY. I move, then, that the rules be suspended, for the purpose I have indicated; and on that motion call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered. The question was then taken; and the motion to suspend the rules was not agreed to—yeas 81, nays 74; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dent, Dickinson, Disney, Dunbar, Eastman, Edmonds, English, Farley, Flagg, Franklin, Fuller, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grover, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hibbard, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Lindsey, Lyon, McCulloch, Macy, Matteson, Mayall, Meacham, Smith Miller, Morgan, Murray, Norton, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Simmons, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Upham, Walley, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, and Yates—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Barry, Belcher, Bennett, Bliss, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Caruthers, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Curtis, Dawson, Dick, Dowdell, Eddy, Elliott, Ellison, Everhart, Faulkner, Fenton, Goode, Hamilton, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Hughes, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lane, Lilly, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Milson, Morrison, Nichols, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Shannon, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Walsh, David B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—74.

So the rules were not suspended.

CUSTOM-HOUSE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution: Resolved, That House Bill No. 280, reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, be made the special order immediately after House Bill No. 52 is disposed of.

That is the custom-house appropriation bill. It is proposed to take it up immediately after the disposition of the bill which was made the special order for to-morrow, on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Boccock]; and, if the Chair will pardon me merely in the expression of a remark, that bill has been discussed and amended, and I am satisfied that we may recur to it and put it on its passage immediately.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object to the resolution. Mr. PHILLIPS. I move that the rules be suspended, for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. PRESTON. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion. Gentlemen over the way have promised to pass the bill and they have not done it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAVEN. I should like to ask the honorable gentleman from Alabama if he would not be willing to withdraw his motion to suspend the rules, and move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take up the custom-house bill?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will pursue that course. I withdraw the motion to suspend the rules, and move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MAURICE. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. PHILLIPS's motion; and, on a division, there were—yeas 100, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HAMILTON in the chair.)

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated that the bill first in order upon the Calendar was House bill (No. 48) "making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1855."

Mr. PRESTON. I understood that the object in going into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was to take up the custom-house appropriation bill. I therefore move to postpone the other business on the Calendar, and to take up that bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. The practice, I think, is for the committee to vote whether they will take up the first bill, if any gentleman objects to its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The first bill on the Calendar is No. 48. If there is any objection to taking it up, the committee must vote upon it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. What is the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know if it is not in order, when in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to move to take up a general appropriation bill without first disposing of the business that precedes it on the Calendar?

The CHAIRMAN. A general appropriation bill is first in order on the Calendar, and the question will be put on taking it up.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Does the Chair decide that it is not in order, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to move to take up a general appropriation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then I move to take up the general appropriation bill for the construction of custom-houses and marine hospitals.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a general appropriation bill, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I appeal from that decision.

Mr. PRESTON. I think I have the floor by the recognition of the Chair. Do I understand the Chair as declaring that the House did not go into the Committee of the Whole with a view of taking up the custom-house bill, according to the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN], and which was acceded to by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS]?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the gentleman from Kentucky that the Committee of the Whole can take up whatever bill it thinks proper. They have full power to do so.

Mr. PRESTON. I move that we take up the custom-house bill.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. PRESTON. I object to the first bill upon the Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. What bill is it?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the civil and diplomatic bill, and the question now is, shall this bill be taken up for the consideration of the committee?

Mr. DEAN demanded tellers, which were ordered; and Messrs. HASTINGS and VAIL were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 72, noes 70.

So the committee agreed to take up the bill.

Several MEMBERS. Read the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to dispense with the first reading of the bill, and that it be read by sections for amendment.

Mr. PRESTON. I call for the regular reading of the bill, inasmuch as the object for which the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union has been defeated. The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. After the first section had been read—

Mr. HOUSTON. I again move, Mr. Chairman, that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the motion to rise was not agreed to.

Mr. CUTTING. I move that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Chairman I do not feel disposed to interpose any further objection to the motion, to dispense with the first reading of the bill; I therefore withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let us commence its consideration, then, by reading the first section for amendment.

The first section of the bill was read, as follows:

"Be it enacted, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereafter expressed, for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855, namely:

"Legislative.—For compensation and mileage of Senators, $106,862 80."

Mr. CUTTING. I move to strike out the section of the bill that has been just read.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. Chairman, on Tuesday last, after the morning hour had expired, and the House had gone to the business upon the Speaker's table, a motion was made by the chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. RICHARDSON] to refer the Senate bill relative to the organization of a government for the Territory of Nebraska to the standing committee of which he was the head. On the other hand, for reasons which I gave to the House, I submitted a proposition that that bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Upon that occasion the House listened to a clear and distinct argument against my proposition, from the chairman of the Committee on Territories, [Mr. RICHARDSON.] It was an argument which sought to set the House upon their guard against the character of the motion I had submitted. The intimation contained in it, in language by no means disrespectful, however, was that a secret enmity existed which prompted my action. The chairman of the Committee on Territories urged his proposition with zeal and candor. I also submitted the reasons which, in my judgment, rendered a reference to the Committee of the Whole suitable and proper. In so doing, I desired to express, and I thought I had expressed myself, with perfect frankness, and with entire clearness in regard to the great subject before us. The reasons urged by me why the bill ought to be sent to the Committee of the Whole, were satisfactory to a large majority of the House. Upon that occasion I observed that there was not a gentleman upon this floor, who has considered the great principles of the measure, who was a stronger or more zealous advocate of them than I was.

I urged, however, objections to the bill itself, and declared that in its present shape it could not receive my support; nor, in my humble judgment, that of a majority of the House. While, therefore, I distinctly asserted my adhesion to the cardinal principles which were supposed to be contained in it, I was equally frank and equally candid in saying that the bill required amendment, and a thorough examination, before it could receive that support which, in my opinion, its principles entitled it to. In making that motion, I am not conscious of having employed any language disrespectful to any member of this House; more especially I have no recollection of having attempted to convey insinuations against the moral honesty of any gentleman who differed from me upon that occasion.

After the subject had been disposed of, and after the lapse of some two days, a gentleman from a slaveholding State, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] who had had no lot or part in this discussion, thought it not incompatible with his character as a leading member of this House, to volunteer an attack upon me and to assail my motives. It is true he disclaimed any intention to impeach them. He, a gentleman who so much admires candor and frankness, and who was so eager to strip the cover from a secret enemy; he, while he thus assailed me, professed to say he meant to cast no imputation on my motives, and yet gave us the illustration of a friend with a murderous stiletto in his hand, ready to plunge it into the heart of him around whom his arm was thrown. He meant no imputation against me! That gentleman thought he could employ happily the illustration I used sometime since in reference to a deceit practiced upon an aged and infirm patriarch of old, and declared that I was the Jacob who was practicing a cheat upon this House. But he meant not to assail my motives! Oh, no! This candid, frank, honorable member, who despises double dealing so much, meant in all this no imputations upon me!

Mr. Chairman, I take the liberty of differing with the gentleman from Kentucky. He came into this House with concentrated wrath, with bitterness upon his lips, to assail me, a member of this House, for having, in my place, and upon my responsibility as a Representative upon this floor, stated my views as to the direction this bill ought to take. I proclaimed to the House that we at the North were to take the brunt of the difficulties, of the outcries that would be raised. I proclaimed that the bill, in my opinion, if properly understood, was favorable to the North; and declared that I thought I could satisfy my constituents of the fact, if a full and ample opportunity was given to discuss the measure.

Sir, I was amazed that a gentleman from a slaveholding State, where all his constituents were united upon this subject, who will take him to their arms and press him to their bosoms for his advocacy of this measure—that he, coming from that part of the Union, should have been the person to complain of northern men friendly to the principles of this bill, who desired merely a fair opportunity for discussion. Was that becoming a Representative from the South? Was that such a course as a leading gentleman from that section of the country could be expected to have taken? Was he warranted in taking it? Why, sir, it seems to me that those sentiments which ought to be cherished by every gentleman worthy of a seat in this body, would have prompted such a course as would have given those of us, who, in 1854, (as in 1848,) will have to take the whole brunt of the difficulty at home, a fair opportunity of placing our views upon the measure before our constituents.

This gentleman has seen fit to upbraid and stigmatize me for asking that simple, humble privilege. It was unexpected to me for more reasons than one. That gentleman had made a favorable impression upon my friends at home. They are men whose friendships are always firm and reliable; and in the hour of his greatest need, he has had no more prompt and efficient men to aid him and bid him God speed, than those same gentlemen who are associated at home with me, and who are the attempted victims of that member.

Mr. Chairman, let us, for a moment, consider the grounds upon which the member from Kentucky undertook to put this matter. He charged me with having made a motion as a secret enemy of the bill; he charged me with having professed friendship for the bill, and at the same time taking a course which would occasion its destruction. When did that gentleman hear me declare that I was friendly to the Senate bill? He was present. He heard me declare my opposition to it in the shape in which it came from the Senate, and my belief that not only myself, but a majority of this House, would be found against it until amended; and yet he charged me with pretending to be in favor of it. Has not that gentleman sufficient perspicacity of understanding to know the difference between the principles involved in a measure and the bill which professes to carry them out? And when I declared to the House, before the motion was put, that I was against the bill, but in favor of the measures which it professed to enact, how could that gentleman rise upon this floor, two days afterwards, and undertake to declare that I had professed to be the friend of this bill? The charge is against the fact, against the record, against the published reports of what I did say.

But again: What was the ground of the complaint of the gentleman from Kentucky? That I was consigning this measure to the tomb of the Capulets, by sending it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, from which it could never again, as he alleged, be retrieved. Was that gentleman sincere in that belief? If so, and this measure could never again come before this body, where was the need of an argument by the gentleman of an hour for the purpose of proving that the bill ought to pass? Why that consumption of the time of this House if the gentleman really in his heart believed it would never again be touched? It was time wasted. It was time thrown away; and it was hardly worth his while to have persisted in keeping this committee together, when they desired to rise, for the purpose of prolonging remarks beyond an attack upon me merely to satisfy the committee that they ought to pass the bill, if he believed in his heart that it was never to be acted on at all. No, Mr. Chairman; no gentleman acquainted with the orders on the Calendar—no gentleman who had them before him, as the member from Kentucky had, could for a moment have believed that sending this bill to the Committee of the Whole was to defer action for this session. Why, had he not just heard the chairman of the Committee on Territories [Mr. RICHARDSON] move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the very purpose of taking up the Nebraska bill? That very morning, on a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the chairman of the Committee on Territories gave as a reason that he wished to go down to the Nebraska bill reported by his committee and discuss it. Did the chairman of that committee undertake to make a motion so preposterous, if it were true that there was no earthly chance of getting at it? And how came the gentleman from Kentucky then to intimate to this House, that that which the chairman of the Committee on Territories had just asked the House to do, was a matter beyond possibility or chance? Did not the gentleman know when that motion was made, that it would, if carried, have practical results?

But, again: A frank, and manly, and honorable gentleman who desires to argue and discuss these matters on the facts, rises in his place two days afterwards, and utters a speech which, he will pardon me for saying, was not merely inflammatory in style, but exaggerated in facts. Why, he declared in his place upon this floor that there were scores and scores of bills ahead of it. Sir, there was not one score ahead of it. There were some eighteen or nineteen bills and resolutions, all told, large and small, of great and little degree, ahead of it, including all the appropriation bills which are subject to the control of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, of which the gentleman is one. Then why, with that fact in print staring him in the face, did he declare that there were scores and scores of bills ahead of it?

Why, says the gentleman from Kentucky, there is a mountain upon the bill which can never be removed. A mountain upon it! It was the active imagination of the gentleman that raised mountains and created scores and scores of bills. On the fact, and on the record, there was only the small number that I have stated. When we go into committee, as we shall do, and take up the House bill for the organization of the Territories of Nebraska and Kansas, the gentleman from Kentucky ought to know that it will be accomplishing the project of the chairman of the Committee on Territories.

Does not the gentleman from Kentucky know that it was a prearranged and preconceived understanding that we should go into committee on the House bill because it stood high upon the Calendar, and amend and report it to the House? And wherein was the inconvenience of that course? The Senate bill would have to be amended in one particular, at all events, or it never could pass this House; and being amended in that particular, would have had to be returned to the Senate. Now, I ask the gentleman, if it was the understanding that the House bill should be discussed, amended, reported, and sent to the Senate, by what authority he proclaims to the country that I, a friend of the measure, have undertaken to commit it to its tomb by placing it where there is a mountain upon it, and to send that imputation abroad under the responsibility of his name, of his station, and of his supposed connection with the Administration? Its effect is to create a false impression on the public mind. What, I ask, was the motive of the gentleman from Kentucky in stating matters which, being sent over the wires and through the public press, created the impression that I had done an act which had rendered it impossible even to discuss the bill in committee? Why, I presume he knew—I certainly knew, and the chairman of the Committee on Territories knew—it had been announced by him in the presence and hearing of the gentleman that his wish was to discuss the House bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know how far the gentleman from New York means to assume by any silence of mine, that he is stating correctly the position that I occupy in relation to this bill; but I deem it due to myself to say that there was no arrangement—as has been stated in the public press, and by letter-writers—come to at a caucus of the friends of the bill.

Mr. CUTTING. I did not say so.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No such thing ever took place.

Mr. CUTTING. I did not pretend to say anything of the sort.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The remarks of the gentleman might lead to the inference that it was true. My plan was this, and I will state it to the gentleman and to the country, for I have got no concealments to make; while we had the bill from the Senate upon the Speaker's table, in my judgment we could discuss the bill reported by the Committee on Territories, and perfect it.

Mr. CUTTING. Where?

Mr. RICHARDSON. In Committee of the Whole, certainly. I will state to the gentleman truly what were my views about the position of the bills. We had the bill from the Senate on the Speaker's table, where we could reach it directly almost at any time. We could then discuss the whole question in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and when we had got through with that discussion, if, in consequence of factious opposition, the bill from the Committee on Territories could not be brought into the House, then we had another remedy by which we could bring the House to a vote upon the Senate bill.

Mr. CUTTING. It is conceded, then, by the chairman of the Committee on Territories, that, as I have observed, it was his intention to have discussed the House bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to have reported that bill after it had been amended.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. CUTTING. That is all I said.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman speaks of the discussion of the House bill, and not of the Senate bill. The reference of the Senate bill, as I stated the other day, places it in a position where it cannot be reached. With that bill referred so that it cannot be reached in the House, it is very doubtful when we shall reach even the House bill. The French spoliation bill, and all the general appropriation bills—eighteen in number—are ahead of it on the Calendar.

Mr. CUTTING. Do not let us trifle with an important subject. In the name of God, if you had discussed the House bill in Committee of the Whole, amended and reported it, why would you want to discuss the Senate bill also? What had the Senate bill to do with it? Of what earthly consequence was it where it stood? Suppose there was not merely one mountain, but two of them, on the Senate bills—suppose Pelion upon Ossa—what then? If you had discussed the House bill and reported that, of what earthly consequence was it whether the Senate bill were reached or not? Why, I am amazed, upon a subject like this, that gentlemen should descend to criticism, and complaints so idle, and without meaning. When I remarked that it was the design to discuss the House bill, and it was known that it stood high upon the Calendar, I think that the assault of the gentleman from Kentucky, was unprovoked and unjustifiable. It seems to me that there must have been some other reason, some other consideration which has evoked the wrath of the gentleman from Kentucky to so extraordinary a degree. I thought I observed, during the discussion, that he appeared to shake and quake with fear, because of the outcries "of an infuriated mob," that had been heard from Massachusetts, and I thought, when he alluded to the answering bugle from Illinois, that there might be some apprehension upon the minds of gentlemen if we went into committee and did not dispose of this bill upon the Speaker's table, that we might hear from more "infuriated mobs," and louder tones of the bugle still than had yet reached this Hall. Why, are we to be drawn off from our propriety because we hear the voice and uprising of a mob? Are we to be turned aside from our appropriate and bounden duties to investigate this measure because the bugle comes from the West? No, Mr. Chairman, whatever fears may have prompted the gentleman from Kentucky in making his unwarrantable assault upon me, I partake of them not in the least degree. The bugle note alluded to was encouraging to him, whilst the indignant cries that had alarmed his ears came from a portion of the country to which I am to return, and which I am to meet, quell, and subdue if I can; and if they brought any terrors to me, it seems to me that the gentleman from Kentucky need not have partaken of them. We shall hear more of them, and we who return to breast the storm at the North, and the current of fanaticism, as I have upon other occasions done, are not in the least degree intimidated or alarmed by any of these symptoms that seem to have shaken the gentleman from Kentucky.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in my remarks at the time I moved to send this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I gave reasons why it should go there, and in what respects it required amendments. I expected that a gentleman who would have taken the trouble to think over this matter for a couple of days would at least have come here not merely with imputations as to motives, but with arguments to resist or explode my reasons. I declared that I required to amend the bill by striking out the CLAYTON clause. Did the gentleman from Kentucky say one word in answer by way of argument? Did he reason on the subject? I told the House that, in my judgment, the BADGER proviso meant more than was intended to be generally understood. By way of answer to this the gentleman complained that I had applied to it the term of "BADGER amendment," or "BADGER proviso." Why, Mr. Chairman, is this proviso so much a subject of reproach that it becomes unpleasant to a public man to have his name connected with it? In my judgment it is not so. Why then did the gentleman say that it was a sort of slur cast upon the distinguished Senator from North Carolina to have linked his name—as it will be indissolubly linked—with the proviso to which he stood godfather, and became its sponsor? He has fulfilled his duties in regard to it with fidelity from the time he undertook it until now. He has not shrunk from it; and it seems to me that there was no necessity for any feeling on the part of the gentleman from Kentucky in consequence of my having called it the "BADGER proviso." Sir, I went further, and declared that it in my opinion—as far as that opinion has been made up without full investigation—the "BADGER proviso," did annul laws not enacted by Congress. I submitted that the true principle of non-intervention by Congress meant that it should not by its action change the status, or condition of a Territory in relation to slavery. I observed that in my opinion this proviso did declare that the laws existing before 1803 should no longer be in force; and I submitted for the consideration of the House—and more especially for the consideration of gentlemen from the South—whether or not that did not contravene the great provision of this bill.

I will in a few minutes explain myself more fully in regard to this matter; but I end what I have to say to the gentleman from Kentucky for that unnecessary, volunteered assault upon my motives, by observing that I would have liked to have heard him say some words in reply to the construction which I put upon the "BADGER proviso." I should have liked to have heard some expression of his views in respect to a proposition which was suggested on this floor for the consideration of those who came from his part of the Union. I observed that I thought there must be some motive not avowed for the extraordinary assault upon me. I had declared myself upon this floor, to be a friend of the measure, and forthwith I am assailed. I declared my adherence to the principle. Forthwith the Administration press comes out with a universal cry. Why is it that, approving of the principles of the bill, the organ of the Administration, conducted, it is said, by the Clerk of this House, and who is associated with the printer of this body—how comes it that a friend of the measure, and of the principles of it, should have been selected as a victim? Was it desired to drive me off, and with me those friends who had given me their friendship and support? Is it desired, by this attempt, to assassinate those men who stand by me?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, (interrupting.) I ask whether the gentleman intends to apply those remarks to me?

Mr. CUTTING. No, sir; unless the gentleman so far considers himself a portion of the Union newspaper as to make the remark as applicable to him as it is to the Union.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. At the time the gentleman's remarks were made I was engaged in taking notes, and simply heard the words; and I desire to ask the gentleman whether he intended to apply the remark to me?

Mr. CUTTING. I do not. I myself only am charged with being the assassin. I am the one whom the gentleman depicted, with the arm of friendship thrown around the measure, but with the dagger of the assassin in hand, ready to strike the fatal blow.

If I had used this language in reference to the gentleman from Kentucky, it would have been simply restoring to the gentleman, in kind and manner, that which he had thought himself at liberty to visit upon me. From that time to this, I have been the constant object of attack for my conduct upon this floor. What does it mean? There is a meaning in it. When I look to the State of New York and see that portion of the press there who are opposing this measure with all their vigor and force, receiving still the public patronage; when I see the whole State filled with office-holders who are opposing the measure with the utmost vehemence, at public meetings and in private, and find that they are still continued in office, still cherished, still protected, I am forced to ask, Why is it that the enemies of the bill are rewarded, and its friends assailed?

What meaning will the country attach to such a course? The Administration desires to carry the bill, and at the same time attempts to cut down and crush out those who are in favor of its principles, and reward those who openly and unequivocally oppose it. It becomes a test question when a gentleman from New York, in favor of its principles, moves to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for discussion and for amendment merely. While the Concord Patriot, the organ of the Administration in New Hampshire, disclaims the measure as a Democratic test, it at the same time denies that it forms any portion of the Democratic creed. When I consider all these extraordinary acts, and perceive how quick offense is taken against one who, like me, has constantly fought in favor of the principle, and on the other hand I see the Administration take to its bosom and give aid and comfort to those who are opposed to it, I am compelled to suppose that there must be some other motive at the bottom of this attack than that which upon the face of it appears.

One more word, and I have done with this branch of the subject. There is but one ground upon which the Democracy of the North can stand. They cannot stand upon the Wilmot proviso, which legislates slavery out of a Territory; nor upon legislation which establishes it in a Territory. They can do neither the one nor the other; but they can stand upon the ground that you shall neither do the one nor the other. They can stand upon the ground of non-intervention. They can stand upon the popular principle of allowing the people of an organized Territory to judge for themselves upon that and all other subjects. They can stand, as I before observed, first, upon this great popular right, and next, upon Congressional non-intervention. Leave the institution of slavery to those who are to live under it, who are either to prosper or languish by it. Upon that ground we can stand. Those are the principles I advocate, and if they are found in the bill I shall vote for it. If, in my opinion, they are not there, I will state the fact candidly, for the purpose of coming to a distinct and plain understanding between the different sections of the country, as to what the character of this measure is, so that there may be no reproaches hereafter, either by the one or the other, on the ground that there was a misunderstanding as to the precise principle it did contain. This brings me to discuss somewhat the character of the measure in controversy.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. At this point I ask the gentleman from New York to allow me to interrupt him.

Mr. CUTTING. Certainly, I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I had an aversion to interrupting the gentleman during the progress of his personal explanation. But now, while his remarks are fresh upon my mind, I should be very much gratified if the gentleman would allow me to respond.

Mr. CUTTING. I will give way to the gentleman for that purpose with pleasure, if it is the distinct understanding upon the part of the committee that whatever time he occupies shall not be deducted from my hour.

A general assent to the proposition was expressed all over the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. Such an arrangement can be made only by the unanimous consent of the committee.

No objection was made, and—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE proceeded. I have not many remarks to make, but I prefer, while the subject is fresh upon my mind, to respond to a portion of the speech of the gentleman from New York. I preferred not to interrupt him during the progress of these remarks. Sir, I have listened to them, long and wordy, very wordy, as they were, but, Mr. Chairman, not meeting a single position which I took the other day; and I am amazed at the flagrant manner in which he has attempted to torture and twist my words out of their proper and legitimate meanings. I will give you one or two examples, among the many in his speech, of this proclivity to make a case by total perversion. I spoke of the gentleman stigmatizing as the "BADGER proviso" the amendment offered by that gentleman in the Senate, and applied it to the point that it was very odd that a gentleman coming from a non-slaveholding State should object to an amendment of this character, upon the ground that it did not do justice to the South, and suggested that his object might have been to defeat the amendment, and thus array northern votes against the bill. How does he use it now? I will not say that the gentleman from New York uses it like a lawyer, but I will say that he does not use it like a statesman. He now attempts to draw the inference that I charged him with attempting to put a slur on Mr. BADGER, of the Senate! What is this but avoiding the main point, and endeavoring to lead the mind off upon one irrelevant and personal?

Take another example. The gentleman said that in my speech the other day I referred to the notes from Boston, and the notes from the West, and seemed to be alarmed at the demonstration—

Mr. CUTTING, (in his seat.) Bugle notes from the West.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes, sir; and seemed to be alarmed at this demonstration, and wished to hurry the bill through, in order to prevent full discussion. If any gentleman will take the trouble to look at my printed remarks, or remembers them as uttered, he will see that it was at the close of my speech I remarked that the result of the discussion at the North would be to bring the people there to the principle of the bill; and that, although a portion of New England might choose to go off, and turn her back upon her own original doctrines, yet New England was not the Union; but that the center, and particularly the West, would be found on the principle of the bill. That is what I said. Is there any ground there for the gentleman from New York to charge that I was alarmed at these "bugles," and wanted to force the bill through? None on earth, sir. On the contrary, does it not indicate that I had free confidence in the result of discussion; and did I not say in terms that I was in favor of free debate? This passes ingenuity. It is something more than that.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman said that I appeared in the House, after considering the subject two days, to attack and stigmatize his motives. The reason I did not make my speech as soon as he finished his is, that at the conclusion of his own he magnanimously moved the previous question, so that nobody had an opportunity to reply. At the first moment I could get the floor I took it. So the interval of two days is due to the previous question moved by the gentleman himself; and yet, with characteristic disregard of these facts, which are notorious to the House, he now complains that I waited two days to answer his speech. I did not choose to interrupt him while he was speaking, for the purpose of denying that I had attacked his motives, because I really thought that as he had fixed up his speech in that way it would be cruel to interrupt him in delivering it to the committee. As his whole speech, by an ingenious twist, was made to turn on the assertion that I had attacked his motives in the House of Representatives, if I had knocked that underpinning from him he would have had nothing to say at all, so far as the personal aspect of the matter is concerned, and I did not want to spoil a speech elaborately gotten up.

Now, does not every gentleman here who listened to what I said, remember that I stated, that with the motives of the gentleman I had nothing to do? but that I spoke of the objects and the effect of his movement, characterizing it as a movement to kill the bill, and spoke of the strange fact that the gentleman was surrounded by every political Abolitionist in this Hall, and received their congratulations at the success of his motion? One word in this connection, on another point which the gentleman thinks may have been rather personal. When he uttered the word "assassin" to-day, I asked him (misunderstanding, it appears, his remark) whether he intended to apply it to me. He said that he did not; but that it would have been replying in kind to the remark which I made the other day if he had done so.

Since the gentleman has made this explanation, I will state that I did not intend to charge him with playing the part of assassin intentionally, for the reason that I did not choose to pry into his motives; but I said—and I cannot recall it—that the act, in all its effects, was the act of one who would throw one arm around another, as if in friendly embrace, and with the other stab him to the heart, just as I say that the effect of his movement throughout was to kill the bill. He asks me if I have not perspicacity of understanding enough to see his argument. I ask him whether he has not perspicacity of understanding enough to see a difference between a clear exposure of the effects of a movement and an attack on the motives of the mover. I will not go into an argument with the gentleman as to his motives. I repeat, what I said before, I have nothing to do with them. But, if I chose to go over the facts of the case, I do not think the gentleman would get much advantage in the argument as to what his motives really were. Of course, when he asserts that he had a particular motive, I will not deny his words. But leaving us to judge of his motives exclusively by his conduct, there can be no two opinions in the House as to what they must have been.

Now, sir, let me turn aside for one moment from the verbiage of the gentleman from New York, and, in a practical way, call the attention of the committee to the facts as they then existed. Here was a bill from the Senate lying upon the Speaker's table in this House. We had not yet gone to the Speaker's table. There it was, snug and safe, under the control of the House. There was another bill—one that had originated in this House—which had been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—the bill from the Committee on Territories. Those two bills—one on the Speaker's table and the other in the Committee of the Whole—would give the friends of the Nebraska measure—not of its details, but of the principles—a double chance. One was to take up the bill in Committee of the Whole, reported from the Committee on Territories, and lying high on the Calendar, discuss it, mature it, and pass it, if they could. There was also the chance to go to the Speaker's table, take up the Senate bill, and discuss it, if they chose, in the House of Representatives. There was, therefore, a double chance for the friends of the measure.

Under these circumstances the gentleman from New York, in alliance, not with the friends of the measure, but with its open and avowed and bitter enemies, refuses to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—where he ought to have gone, if he wanted to take up and discuss the Nebraska bill. He votes against going into the Committee of the Whole, and then himself moves to go to the business on the Speaker's table. He, and those acting with him, succeed. They never rest until they reach the Senate bill, and then, by a sudden and general concert of movement, it is discovered what the object of the whole proceeding all day had been. The gentleman rises, makes a speech in favor of referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole, then moves the previous question, and does not allow the friends of the measure to expose the effect of his motion. What was the effect of it? I say that it sent the bill to the foot of the Calendar, and that, in the regular course of legislation, you will never reach it this session. And I ask the gentleman if he had not "perspicacity" enough to understand, and experience enough in the House to know, that that would be the result?

Again, the gentleman says that there are only nineteen or twenty bills before it on the Calendar, and that I said there were scores of bills. I have no recollection of saying scores of bills; I did not find such a statement in my notes; I do not find it in my printed remarks; and the gentleman cannot eke out his speech by making language for me. I said it was put at the foot of the Calendar, and would never be reached. Does not the gentleman know perfectly well that the struggle in the House, when gentlemen want to kill a measure at this stage of the session, is, always, to send it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? It is immaterial whether there are a score of bills only, or two score before it, the effect of the gentleman's motion was to put the bill at the foot of the Calendar, and in either case it cannot be regularly reached.

Mr. ENGLISH. I will state for the information of the gentleman that I learn from the Clerk that there are fifty bills on the Calendar before the Senate Nebraska bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Ah! fifty bills, are there? I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. CUTTING. Before the House bill?

Mr. ENGLISH. No—before the Senate bill?

Mr. CUTTING. Ah! the Senate bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, look there! I will nail the gentleman to the counter just here. "Before the House bill," says he. Now, what is the inference from that? Why, he gives up now that we can ever reach the Senate bill, but he would have us to understand that he meant that we could mature the House bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. But did not the gentleman say that his very object in moving to refer the Senate bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, was that it might be reached there, and discussed, and that the Badger amendment, among others, in that bill might be looked into? Certainly he did—certainly. It is useless for him to shake his head; it would not do for him to raise that question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will my friend from Kentucky allow me to remind him that the Badger amendment is not in the House bill at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Of course, it is not, and yet the gentleman gave, as the reason for his motion, that his object was to have that amendment discussed in the Committee of the Whole. Nor is the Clayton amendment in the House bill, yet it will be remembered that he wanted the Senate bill referred, to discuss that amendment also. Sir, the reasons assigned by the gentleman from New York are all evasive; the style of debate which he has assumed to-day would suit a bad action in a court much better than an important public question upon the floor of an American Congress. I ask the gentleman from New York, I ask the committee, if the movement was a friendly one, how came it to be opposed by the friends of the bill, with some exceptions, and to be sustained by all the enemies of the bill? How came the intensely national gentleman from New York—and I was happy to regard him as a national gentleman—to be acting in alliance with the enemies of the bill, with the Free-Soilers and Abolitionists—I mean no disrespect to them—upon this floor? How came he to receive their congratulations afterwards? How came their presses to take up the cry, and applaud the gentleman from New York for his adroitness in referring the bill to the Committee of the Whole, which they regard as fatal to it? Why, all the refinements and subtleties of all the special pleaders on earth, from now until the crack of doom, will never get out of a plain man's head the fact that the movement was intended to kill the bill.

But the gentleman says, if this was the effect, why did I devote one hour to an argument in favor of the bill? I ask the gentleman again if he is not parliamentary enough to understand that a particular bill may be killed by being put at the foot of the Calendar, but that the same bill, in substance, by other forms of legislation, may be brought again before the House? I tell him that the Nebraska bill can be revived, perhaps not totidem verbis, since it is on the Calendar, but in substance and effect.

As I rose for a personal explanation merely, I will pass on and call the attention of the committee to another remark of the gentleman in regard to myself. "What could have been the motive of the gentleman from Kentucky?" said he. "There must have been some motive not apparent for his assault. Why was it that the gentleman from Kentucky assailed me, a friend of this measure, for this movement, and does not assail its enemies? Why, at the same time, does it happen that the press in this city take up the cry? Why have I been denounced for this movement? Was it to drive me off, a national man, a friend of the measure, in order to gratify the feelings of gentlemen at the other end of the avenue?" The meaning of all this, and much more from the gentleman to the same effect, covered up as it was by inuendo and buried in verbiage, is just this, that I was to carry out some purpose of this Administration to drive the gentleman from New York from the support of the bill, and accordingly that I acted in concert with parties in this city, and papers friendly to the Administration, to deprive the bill of his valuable services. I have a brief but sufficient answer to all this. I wish the gentleman from New York could purge himself of these low personal feelings, and look at public measures upon their merits, without regard to the position of others in connection with them. What a spectacle does a public man present who is governed on great questions by the low ambition of thwarting others instead of by the high rule of the general good?

Will the gentleman from New York avow that any act of any Administration—that forty Presidents or forty Cabinets—could drive him from his firm self-poised center on any public question on which he had formed his opinion? For myself, sir, I tell him that his insinuation was wholly gratuitous. I believe that the present Administration is honestly in favor of this measure. I was glad of it; and will support them as long as they stand by it. But if they had been against the measure, I would be no less for it; and if the worst enemy I had on earth was in favor of a measure which I believe to be right, he could not drive me from it, for that would make me his slave. No, sir, he could not drive me from its support.

Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman from New York distinctly to understand that I have no more connection with this Administration than any other gentleman on this floor; that I owe it nothing, and that I expect to owe it nothing, beyond the obligations due from us all to those who execute the laws with fidelity. I tell the gentleman to cool his diseased and fevered fancy; that I am not aware that anybody wants to drive him from the support of this measure; certainly the Administration has never so far forgotten its own character and my position as to make such a request. Does this indicate the gentleman's notion of the duties belonging to the representative character? Sir, my personal pretensions are humble enough; but I tell him that, clothed with the majesty of the people I represent, I stand here in my place to-day the peer of Presidents and of Cabinets. [Applause in the Hall and galleries.] Let the gentleman put this idea out of his head; let him suppose that the gentleman from Kentucky can be animated by higher motives of action than hostility to men in his support of or opposition to measures; and that no President and no Cabinet can make him go for what he believes to be wrong, or drive him from the support of what he believes to be right. No, sir; so far from desiring—and I may as well state it here—so far from desiring that the gentleman should be driven from the support of this bill, it was with the profoundest grief and mortification that I witnessed his course the other day. I had listened to debates here for days, and weeks almost, on the part of that gentleman and others, in which he traced the public course of what is called the National party of New York and of the other party; and though I was opposed to bringing that question on the floor of Congress, I could not, as a southern man, refuse my sympathy and good feeling to those men at the North who had always stood by our constitutional rights. So far from ever making war upon those who are technically called "Hards," my sympathy and feelings were ever with them. Hence the bruise, hence the wound, hence the mortification which pervaded that part of the Hall friendly to the bill, and especially that part from the South, when they saw the gentleman from New York turn a sharp corner, turn his back upon his former course—enter into alliance with the enemies of the measure, Abolitionists and all, and play the leading part in a scheme which every man in the House with five grains of common sense must know was intended or calculated to smother it.

Sir, all the ingenuity, all the verbiage, that forty lawyers, who had had a practice of forty years each, could pile upon it could not remove the few salient striking points which worked conviction in the minds both of friend and enemy of the measure that the act of the gentleman from New York was an act of hostility.

One other thing, Mr. Chairman, and only one other. I am not sure that I understood the gentleman from New York, after classifying himself and all the "Hards" together, as if he was speaking for them all; though I do not suppose the gentleman is authorized to speak for anybody but himself—most people are not—

Mr. WALSH, (in a low voice.) He has no authority to speak for one of them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman from New York said that I was the last individual in this House who ought to have made what he called that "assault" upon him; because, said he, "in the day of the gentleman's greatest need, the 'Hards' of New York were those who came to his aid." The innuendo is so very deep that I do not clearly comprehend it; and I therefore call upon the gentleman to explain it.

Mr. CUTTING. An explanation being asked for by the gentleman himself, will now naturally be given. I am informed that, during the canvass in Kentucky, it being intimated that funds would be needed in order to accomplish the success of the gentleman, we—my friends in New York, the Hards—made up a subscription of some $1,500, and transmitted the fund to Kentucky, to be employed for the benefit of the gentleman who is now the "peer of Presidents and Cabinets."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Yes, sir; and the peer of the gentleman from New York; fully, and in every respect, his peer. [Applause in the Hall, and cries of "Order! Order!"]

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me a moment to respond to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will yield to the gentleman soon. I desire to say another word just here in further reply.

Mr. WALSH. I only wish a moment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. I believe I have as good a right to speak for the "Hards" of New York as any gentleman upon this floor, or off of it. I have stood, sir, and stemmed the torrent of treason at the North when gentlemen who have subsequently attempted to speak for them have skulked from crossing the threshold of places where meetings were held. I do not want an imputation of this character thrown out by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUTTING,] to go forth unexplained to the world. When we came here, we protested at the course pursued by the Administration, in interfering with our local affairs in New York; and now one of my colleagues states that a portion of those who cooperated with him have been guilty of the same act, in interfering with the local affairs of Kentucky.

Mr. CUTTING. Is that all that the gentleman from New York rose for?

Mr. WALSH. That is all now. I shall be on hand again by-and-by.

Mr. CUTTING. It is always "by-and-by," with that gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not want a telegraphic dispatch sent out of this city to the effect that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] ostentatiously assumed to be the peer of Presidents and of Cabinets; but I repeat, in every matter concerning my legislative duty, I stand surrounded by the majesty of my constituents, and as such, am the peer of both Presidents and Cabinets.

As to the personal matter introduced by the gentleman from New York, that I had received aid from the "Hards" of New York—

Mr. CUTTING, (interrupting.) State my proposition as I gave it. You called upon me distinctly, and—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, (resuming.) The gentleman in his speech to which I am now replying, said I ought to be the last man in this House to say anything unkind to them, because that in the day of my greatest need, they had afforded me aid.

Mr. CUTTING. That you are the last person from whom I expected it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. An unimportant verbal difference. The point was this, that I was not the man to do it, because in the day of my greatest need the "Hards" of New York had rendered to me valuable aid.

The language and the manner were so pointed that no gentleman in this House could fail to perceive that the member from New York meant something more than appeared upon the surface; and as I never choose that innuendoes of that sort shall go unexplained, I demanded what he meant. "Well," said he, "if the gentleman calls for it, I will tell him;" and then, with his characteristic candor, he protests that this statement was extracted from him upon the floor of this House? And what was his statement when he came to it! That he has understood that during my last canvass intimations were sent to the city of New York that funds were required in that race; and that in response to the call, his friends, the Hards of New York, made up about $1,500, and sent them on to Kentucky to promote my election.

Mr. Chairman, before I reply to this statement, I have to say that it was his business to know the truth of what he uttered before he made such a statement upon this floor. Sir, I never asked for money from New York, nor did I ever receive any. Neither, sir, I was engaged in an arduous and heated canvass, and was but little at home. My friends managed the canvass for me while I was traversing the district by day and by night, addressing assemblies of the people. I do not undertake to say what the fact may be in regard to this contemptible charge—it is enough to say that it touches me personally nowhere—and that I asked from them nothing, and received nothing. No, sir; I came here not by the aid of money, but in spite of it; and as I am obliged to make some allusion to the facts connected with that canvass, I have to say that I happen to represent a district in which the money power of the Commonwealth is concentrated, and that money power in the hands of my opponents. It was loudly proclaimed in the public streets of the city in which I live that I should be defeated if it cost $50,000 to do it; and I can tell the member from New York that at least $30,000 were spent for that purpose, and, as the event shows, spent in vain. No, sir, I was elected by a majority of more than five hundred votes—a number greater than all Wall street could control in my district. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have been thinking, even while making these remarks, what is the proper course to pursue towards a man who can so far outrage all propriety as to bring such a matter before this House. I had intended, at one time, to characterize his conduct in terms of the greatest severity, but perhaps it is well enough to omit it. Perhaps the advantage I have gained, and the united condemnation of all honorable men, will be punishment enough, if, indeed, he has the sensibility to feel it. I dare say that such a thing was never before heard of in the House of Representatives—never. Why, sir, I never associated with a man who would make a reference of that sort at all, still less with one who would make it solely on rumor, and then, when called on to explain himself, would attempt to throw the responsibility of introducing it into the House upon the gentleman against whom the innuendo was leveled.

But, sir, I have trespassed long enough upon the indulgence of the committee. I submit, in conclusion, that the member from New York has been revealed to the House in alliance with the enemies of this measure, and their selected instrument in leading a movement to smother it, and that all his verbosity and evasions have failed to extricate him. If he is really the friend of the measure, he will have abundant opportunities to show it. For myself, being sincerely its friend, I should rejoice to unite with him in voting for it. I feel, sir, that I have discharged my duty, as one of the humblest of its advocates, in exposing a line of conduct calculated to destroy it.

Mr. CUTTING. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I am, sir.

Mr. CUTTING. I have given, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Kentucky an opportunity to indulge in one of the most violent, one of the most inflammatory, one of the most personal assaults that has ever been known upon this floor. I offered at the time to give the gentleman, while his rage was boiling over, the opportunity to let the hot words roll out. When I asked that the other day, after he had got through with his remarks in regard to me, a colleague from New York thought it worthy of him to undertake to object and prevent me from getting the floor.

Now, what is the answer the gentleman from Kentucky gives? I charged him with having assailed my motives. I charged him, at the same time, with having undertaken to deny it. The committee have heard his answer. I ask whether, from the beginning to the end, it has not been an impeachment and imputation on my intentions and my motives in making that motion? I ask the gentleman from Kentucky how he can reconcile it to himself to disclaim any attack on me when he follows it up in the manner which we have all witnessed this afternoon, declaring that my intention and my motive was to destroy the bill, or the measure to which I professed friendship?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Does the gentleman say, in the presence of the committee, that I said any such thing?

Mr. CUTTING. I submit it to the committee

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Does the gentleman say that I—

[Cries of "Order!" from all sides of the Hall.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. No, Mr. Chairman, I want the facts.

[Renewed cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will please preserve order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not intend to say anything disrespectful. I call the attention of the gentleman to the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. CUTTING. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman has said to the committee within the last minute, that I said that he had the intention and the motive to destroy the bill. Now I ask him to point to the occasion when I made that remark.

Mr. CUTTING. I submit to this committee that the whole tenor and scope of the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky was an attack on my motives in making the motion that I did. It is in vain for him to attempt to escape from it by disclaiming such an imputation. The facts are before the committee, and I say to him that I scorn his imputation. I stand here not superior, but his equal on this floor, having for myself a reputation as dear, if not so lofty, as that of the member from Kentucky; I stand here the representative of a constituency of which I am now the impersonation, so far as regards my district; and when the gentleman undertakes by indirection to assail or to impeach the reasons of my action and the objects of my course, I hurl back upon him, with the indignation which they deserve, that which is so unwarrantable and so without ground.

I have stated frankly why I made the motion. When I made it I observed that the bill required amendment; that it must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to be amended; and that, unless it was amended, in my humble judgment, it could not pass the House. Was there anything indirect in that? Was there anything covert? Was it not plain and palpable? How dare the gentleman, then, upon this floor, in the presence of those who heard me, undertake to assert that I had professed friendship for the measure, with a view to kill and assassinate it, by sending it to the bottom of the Calendar? And then, when I remark that the Committee of the Whole have under their control the House bill which can be taken up, discussed, amended, and reported to the House, he retreats, and escapes, and skulks behind the Senate bill?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will ask the gentleman from New York—I suppose we are nearly at the end of this personal explanation—to withdraw that last word.

Mr. CUTTING. I withdraw nothing that I have uttered. What I have said has been in answer to the most violent and the most personal attack that has been witnessed upon this floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If the gentleman says I skulk, he says what is false, and he knows it.

[Great sensation, and cries of "Order!"]

Mr. CUTTING. I do not, sir, upon this floor, answer remarks such as the member from Kentucky has just made. It belongs to a different arena. It is not here that I will desecrate my lips by undertaking to retort on it in the manner which it deserves. But, said the member from Kentucky, the gentleman from New York undertakes to be more southern than the South; to out-Herod Herod; and he observed that I assailed the Badger proviso as unjust to the South. Sir, I owe nothing to the South. I have no desire to curry favor with that section of the country. My desire was simply to let the South understand what was my interpretation of that proviso; and that, understanding it fully, and each gentleman knowing what it meant, we might have legislation now as a guide for legislation in future. I wanted to have that proviso understood, for the purpose of ascertaining what would be the application of it in case Cuba comes in—what would be the interpretation if, by an act of Congress following this, we were to declare that no laws, usages, or regulations affecting that country were any longer to be in force? I desired it understood also in reference to those Mexican provinces that might come into the Union hereafter. I wanted to know whether, when we legislate for New Leon, Coahuila, Tamaulipas, and Sonora, the principle involved in this bill is to be applied to them—the great principle of non-congressional interference—the principle of the right of those provinces to form laws for themselves. That was the object of the motion; a higher one, a more statesmanlike one, if the member from Kentucky will allow me to say so, than the course of imputing base and improper views and objects to others. I wanted to place the bill upon the highest ground of discussion; I wanted to place it upon principles which we could all understand, and by which we could be regulated for the future—not having one principle north of the line of 36° 30', and another principle south of that line.

Now, as I understand the Badger amendment, it annulled all laws of Spain and France establishing or permitting slavery. I agree with that provision; I will vote for it, and stand by it, with the perfect understanding that all the gentlemen from the South understand it in the same way; but I want no more of these after-claps, such as they have had in the Senate. I do not desire, after this bill shall have passed, to have the "Globe" filled with caveats and protests against its interpretation. We have two distinguished Senators, one from South Carolina, who protests, according to my understanding of his language, that this bill does not contain the principle of non-intervention by Congress. I understand him to say, that it does not contain a concession of the principle that the people of the Territories have the right to form their own laws. I understand him to take the ground, that this bill is applicable to Nebraska, and Nebraska alone—that it has no reference whatever to the future; and when they come to legislate in the future for other Territories, that Congress, possessing the right of intervention, and possessing the right of prescribing how those Territories are to be governed, shall, according to the location, place, and circumstances, carry out their legislation. The Senators to whom I have referred deny the principle of the bill. They deny the ground upon which it has been carried through. I desire now to call the attention of the committee to this subject, so that we may understand it. I say that the provision in question annuls French and Spanish laws. Am I right in that construction? If you agree to it for all time; if you agree to it in regard to the future, then, as far as I am concerned, I am prepared, not only to vote for that provision, but to recommend it as earnestly and zealously as possible to the consideration and adoption of the people of the North.

One word more. The gentleman from Kentucky is still vindictive and full of acrimony, because this Senate measure was taken from the Speaker's table, where the gentleman says we had it snug and safe. What does he mean by "snug and safe?" What does he mean by saying that it was under the control of the committee, or some members of this House? What I meant was, that it should be taken from the place where it was snug and safe, and sent to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, so that it would be out of the power of anybody upon this floor to move the previous question, and stop that full and free discussion which, in my judgment, this measure demands.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I desire, in passing, to say that I never said it was under the control of certain members of this House.

Mr. CUTTING. Under the control of the friends of the bill, then. I meant that there should be upon this subject full, fair, open, and frank discussion. I meant that there should be no resort to parliamentary tact. I knew that we should reach the House bill, and then, as far as we from the North were concerned, we could not be prevented from laying our views prominently and frankly before the country. I appeal to the good sense and feeling of this committee, in what respect, in what possible shape, can there be anything like a reasonable, a rational objection to the course which was adopted in that respect? Why keep a bill upon the Speaker's table, where the strictest rules of parliamentary debate and parliamentary maneuver can always be resorted to? Why, when you meant to discuss the bill in the House, not have discussed it fully, and amend it, as I said before, and there end it?

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word more, and I have done. It is neither in the power of the Administration, nor of the member from Kentucky, nor of any other person in this House, to drive me off from an advocacy of the principle which I deem right. But, at the same time, while I am avowing that which is my rule of action and my rule of conduct, to have gentlemen get up on this floor to whom I thought I might have looked with confidence for support, at all events for an abstinence from irrational exhibition of temper and ill-feeling—I say it did deeply wound and mortify me to find a gentleman who was esteemed by those whom I knew at home—who had looked to him as a friend—to find him who had been unassailed, unattacked, coming here to make a volunteer assault upon me. I thought that he was the last gentleman on this floor that should have been guilty of that act—not merely with regard to the circumstance that he knew that my friends had been his friends—although he says he knows nothing of the particular circumstance to which he compelled me to allude specifically, but because he had known and heard me, over and again, avow this principle as that which I deemed sound.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, that I have been under the necessity of making these explanations. I shall, hereafter, take no note of them. I regret, too, that a colleague of mine from New York, [Mr. WALSH], should have thought it necessary to have got up on this floor to have made certain suggestions entirely outside of the question we were discussing, and having no reference to it. I had supposed that that gentleman, from the intimacy which subsisted between us, in regard to public matters, had concurred expressly in the propriety of sending the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I understood him to assent directly and distinctly to it, on asking him whether or not discussion was not necessary, and whether or not it was not proper to take the bill from the table, in order to avoid any possible chance of having the discussion brought either to a premature close, or having it so restricted that we could not place fully and fairly all our views before our constituents. I counted on the support of my colleague, and regret that he felt authorized to act in opposition to his own express assent and consent in reference to that course.

Sir, I have done. I do not mean in future to permit either articles written by the Clerk of this House, or by the Union newspaper, or by gentlemen from any portion of the country, to drive me from that position which I intend to assume and maintain, if I am able. I mean to discuss, if I can, this question as a measure of statesmanship, in the best manner that my powers will enable me, with a sincere desire of accomplishing the passage of the bill in that shape which, in my humble judgment, will give the most satisfaction to the country, and put at rest forever the fanaticism and the outcries which now prevail throughout the land. It is my desire again to accomplish a return to peace and harmony; and I would suggest to gentlemen on this floor who are anxious for the passage of the bill that it is not the best mode of accomplishing that object by assailing those who proclaim themselves to be favorable to its principles, and favorable to all its great and creditable demands. It seems to me that it would answer a better purpose—if they really desire the success of the bill—that they should turn their batteries anywhere else, rather than to endeavor by them to destroy its friends.

Mr. YATES obtained the floor.

Mr. DEAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois be good enough to yield me the floor for the purpose of enabling me to make a motion?

Mr. YATES. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. DEAN. Then I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee [Mr. HAMILTON] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had, according to order, had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill (No. 48) making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 31, 1855, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to, and

The House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 28, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill to establish additional land districts in the Territory of Minnesota.

THE MEXICAN FRAUDS.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, during the last Congress a select committee, of which Mr. Soule was chairman, was appointed by the Senate, to which were referred memorials on the files of the Senate in relation to the proceedings of the Board of Commissioners on the claims against Mexico. Before a report was made, at the conclusion of the last special session, although the basis of a report had been agreed upon, Mr. Soule was appointed to a mission abroad. I was a member of the committee, and now, as such, beg leave to submit the report of that committee. I will read the arrangement of the papers which I desire to lay before the Senate; and I further ask that they may be printed:

First. The report of the committee.

Second. The journal of the committee.

Third. The testimony taken before the Committee.

Fourth. Documents and papers referred to in the journal and testimony.

Fifth. The journal and report of the commissioners sent to Mexico by the committee to examine into the Gardiner and Mears cases.

Also, testimony, documents, and papers accompanying the same.

A number of documents and papers, not deemed material to the elucidation of the matters referred to by the committee, will be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Senate. Although the documents look very formidable, when printed the volume will not be a very large one. The books presented, being the book of testimony and the journal, are not full.

I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to submit this report, and I ask that it may be laid upon the table, and printed.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a few remarks in connection with the report of the select committee on the claims under the Mexican treaty, before any order is made for its printing. I was a member of that committee, and I ask to be heard, because I think, in justice to the committee, it is right that what might look like apparent delay or negligence on our part should be fully explained.

The petitions were referred to us about two years ago. There were some sixty-three or sixty-four of these petitions. Of course, the general mode of proceeding in the action of the committee in that, as in other cases, was regulated by the determination and view of the chairman of the committee. Immediately after our organization we directed a notice to be forwarded to all the petitioners, with a view to elicit any testimony which they might have sustaining their grounds of complaint. In answer to these notices, we also received information which led us necessarily into the investigation of the claims of Gardiner and Mears. They occupied the greatest portion of our time. The examination of the witnesses in these cases superinduced so strong a conviction of fraud, that, arriving at the conclusion that the matter could be determined beyond controversy by sending a commission to Mexico to ascertain the existence or non-existence of the mines for which the damage was claimed, the committee determined on that course. As the Executive wished also to be represented in that commission, unavoidable delays were occasioned in sending it out.

After the return of the commission, (which caused the greatest delay,) the committee, during the special Executive session of the Senate last spring, having completed their labors, agreed upon the basis of their report, and the heads of it were noted by the honorable chairman of the committee, [Mr. Soule.] He had then, I believe, been appointed Minister to Spain; but had not yet accepted the appointment; and he undertook to prepare, from the determinations of the committee, the report; and, by order of the Senate, that report was to be printed in the vacation.

From reasons of which I have no knowledge, he left the country without performing that duty, and without any communication whatever to any member of the committee. I have no doubt, from what I have heard, that his reason was a good one; that, as the case of Gardiner had not yet been disposed of, and as there was an action of criminal jurisprudence pending, in which the defendant ought not to be prejudiced by any ex parte statement on the part of the Government, he thought it was wiser not to file that report in vacation until that case should be determined. I presume that must have been the reason why, contrary to his engagement with the committee, the honorable gentleman who then represented the State of Louisiana in the Senate did not make the report, in accordance with the determination of the committee. If such was the reason which existed in his mind, I think it was sufficient. But it placed us in this obviously-awkward predicament: that when we returned here at this session of Congress, no member of the committee had the slightest idea that the report had not been prepared according to their determination. It then fell upon the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD,] as the member of the committee who was next in order in the selection of the Senate, to prepare a report. That, of course, required a great deal of labor, in addition to what had been previously encountered on his part, and rendered a revision of the testimony necessary, in order to arrive at proper conclusions. This is the reason why the report of the committee has been so long delayed.

There is another reason, however, Mr. President, and that is this: Immediately on going into the investigation of the complaints of the petitioners, I will state for myself that I adopted two general rules. I considered that the duty which devolved upon us was mainly to ascertain whether the complaints of the petitioners were well grounded, and required a revision of their claims by the appointment of a new commission; because that was what the petitioners asked for. In order to determine that question, it seemed to me that there was but one course, and that was, to look over the whole series of decisions—to compare the evidence in each case where complaint was made with the memorial of the petitioner, and the adjudication and opinion delivered by the board. The committee did that; and the Senate may well understand that it was a labor of no slight extent.

For my own part, I think I can say with safety I examined the opinions of that commission in at least fifty-five out of the sixty-three cases to which the petitions referred. I made this examination in order to determine whether the general conclusions of the commission showed such laxity or such disregard of the rights of the petitioners that we would be justified in saying, there had been such a non-performance of duty that we must recommend to the Senate a revision of the claims which had been previously acted upon. In that investigation, I found but one solitary case, myself, in which I could say that, as against the petitioners, the commissioners had allowed less than they were entitled to; and therefore, necessarily, (and the committee were unanimous in that,) we could find in the decisions of the commissioners as against the claimants no sufficient grounds whatever to impeach those decisions and require a revision of the action of the commissioners for the benefit of the petitioners. We therefore determined against recommending any additional commission.

But there was another class of cases. I also looked at those cases, and I believe the committee did, on this principle: that if there was a plain and palpable mistake in law in any one decision, as against the petitioner, on the face of the petition itself, without going into a detail of the facts and reasoning on which it was founded, the committee would, in such particular case, feel themselves justified in recommending that it should be reheard before the accounting officers of the Treasury. The result of that mode of investigation was, that in two cases the committee arrived at the conclusion that they ought to be reheard, and it is their intention to report a bill for that purpose.

One was the case of Mr. Jarrero, in which the mistake consisted in this: The commission decided, at first, that a claim made by an American citizen, which was of Mexican origin though held by an American citizen at the time of the conclusion of the treaty, was not within its terms; and therefore they rejected it, I think, on strong grounds; but, contrary to their principle as established in that class of cases, in the case of Mr. Jarrero, though the claim, they say, is an undoubted claim, because it was held by him they rejected it. What the form of transfer was did not appear before the committee; but there was an American claim, American in its origin, of which the benefit would go to Mr. Jarrero, whether as collateral security or absolutely the committee have no knowledge. But I take the statement of the commissioners. They rejected even the hearing of that claim, as we thought, clearly in violation of a plain principle of justice. Hence we thought that claim ought to be reheard by the accounting officers, in order to determine whether or not it was a valid claim under the treaty.

That is one case. In the other case there was a portion of a claim of Mr. Levy, which a majority of the committee believed stood upon the same principles as regarded the propriety of a rehearing. These are the only two cases in which we have come to the conclusion that the petitioners ought to be reheard.

When, however, I make the remark, that, as against the memorials of the petitioners and their statements of facts, the committee could discover no ground for relief whatever, I couple it with this further fact, that, in my own opinion, (and I believe the opinion of the Senate is so expressed in their report,) there was eminent ability displayed in the general investigations and the opinions of the commissioners; but I am sorry to say myself, that, as regards the cases of Gardiner and Mears, it was not displayed. The opinions of the committee, and the conclusions they draw from these cases, are as mild as could be drawn.

Independently of these two cases, there is also one other case at least, where the decision was in favor of the allowance of the claim against the United States, in which I am unable to appreciate or understand the distinction in which, by possibility, a lawyer could have arrived at the result at which these commissioners arrived in the allowance of that claim. It was a claim of Aaron Leggett, which had previously been before the mixed commission, and upon which the American and Mexican commissioners had differed. One had rejected the claim in toto, and the other had admitted it to the amount of over $400,000. The umpire heard the case, decided it, and allowed the claim to the extent of $39,000. The commissioners, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, admitted that it was not within their jurisdiction; that they had no right, under the treaty, to revise the decisions made by the umpire; and yet they drew as fanciful a distinction as could possibly be drawn, for the purpose of making out an original claim against the Government of Mexico, and so revising the decision of the umpire, and allowing an additional amount for injuries sustained, under a claim which had been adjudicated under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

Sir, I state these facts generally, without going into details; but I confess all that I read, and all the cases which I examined in reference to the proceedings of the commissioners in the case of Aaron Leggett, was most unfavorable. There was no testimony whatever before the committee in regard to it, and this is nothing but the result at which I arrived, as to the almost legal impossibility of the conclusion which had been arrived at by the commissioners in that case.

Mr. BROWN. This report is the result of a tedious investigation into a matter which has created a great deal of public excitement and talk. When printed it will be sought for very generally. I suggest, therefore, to the Senator from Pennsylvania, the propriety of asking the publication of a few extra copies.

Mr. BRODHEAD. That can be done hereafter.

Mr. BROWN. But I thought this was the proper time to make the order.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Before the vote is taken on the order to print, I beg to make a remark respecting the case of Mr. Leggett, to which my colleague on the committee [Mr. BAYARD] has referred. I concur with him in the opinion that there was no jurisdiction over that case in the last Board of Commissioners, organized under the treaty of 1848 with Mexico; that although Mr. Leggett may have had injustice done to him by the mixed commission, which I deny, still the matter had passed in rem judicatum, and the last Board could not properly take jurisdiction of the case. Yet, as there appeared to be no fraud, no concealment, no undue influence in the case, on the part of those who presented it, we make no special recommendation in regard to it. Ninety-nine thousand dollars were allowed him by the mixed commission, and $107,000 by the last. There appeared, however, to be no evidence of fraud, but only a misconception in the case.

The report was ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Board of Directors of the Mississippi Valley Railroad Company, asking a grant of land; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RUSK presented a document in relation to the claim of Catharine Arnold, widow of Ripley A. Arnold, and officer of the second regiment of dragoons, to a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the memorial of John S. Rhea, praying to be released from responsibility, for a sum of money stolen while in his custody as collector of the customs for the district of Brazos Santiago, Texas; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the special order, the deficiency bill.

Mr. PETTIT. I shall be compelled to resist that, so far as I can, until I have an opportunity of presenting a petition and report. I have been here trying all day to get in the petition and report which I desire to present.

Mr. HUNTER. I would yield to the Senator with pleasure, but I know that there are some others in the same condition as himself; and the hour which was set apart for the consideration of the deficiency bill having arrived I consider it to be my duty to call for its consideration. I should like to have an hour or an hour and a half for it to-day.

Mr. PETTIT. It is just as necessary, and it is as much in order, to make a report now as it is to attend to that bill. Let us have until one o'clock to attend to morning business. I desire but a few minutes to submit a report, and have it ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that, under the rule, no other business being pending, the Senator from Virginia has a right to call for the special order. The deficiency bill was made the special order for half-past twelve o'clock to-day. The Senate, however, if it sees proper, can determine to postpone it, so as to take up other business.

Mr. PETTIT. It was not made the special order.

Several SENATORS. It was.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am inclined to think that there is some misapprehension in regard to that point.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the Journal read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will state my recollection of the matter. The bill was postponed until half-past twelve o'clock to-day, but I think it was not made the special order.

Several SENATORS. Yes, it was.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill cannot, however, be advanced by acting in this way. I ask the honorable Senator from Virginia to allow me to make a report.

Mr. HUNTER. I know that the bill cannot be advanced if gentlemen choose to debate as to what is the order of business. We can very well spend an hour to-day, as we did yesterday, in that manner of proceeding. The bill was made the special order for half-past twelve o'clock to-day, as I understand; the Journal, however, will show the fact.

The PRESIDENT. That part of the Journal will be read.

The Secretary read the following, from the Journal:

"After debate, on the motion of Mr. MASON, 'Ordered, That the further consideration of the bill be postponed until half past twelve to-morrow.'"

Mr. SHIELDS. I believe my recollection is right.

Mr. PETTIT. It was not made the special order for this hour.

Mr. HUNTER. Is it necessary to move to postpone the prior orders to take up the bill?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly; as the bill was not made the special order.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I make that motion.

Mr. PETTIT. I object to it. I want to have an opportunity to make a report.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 25, noes 10.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1854, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. HAMLIN, to add to the following amendment reported from the Committee on Finance:

"For the purchase of a new site for the custom-house in San Francisco $250,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his judgment the public interest will thereby be promoted, to apply this appropriation, and as much as may be necessary of former appropriations, for the erection of a custom-house on the land reserved for said purpose, to the purchase of a building or buildings, for a custom-house and other public offices; and the said Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to take all legal proceedings which may be necessary or advisable to maintain and secure the possession and title of the United States to the lot heretofore selected for the site of a custom-house;" the words:

For rebuilding the custom-house at Portland, Maine, $200,000; said building to contain accommodations for a post office, and rooms for the United States courts.

Mr. GWIN. I am instructed, by the Committee on Finance, to withdraw the amendment which was under consideration yesterday, in reference to the purchase of a new site for a custom-house in San Francisco. That subject was brought before the Senate, because the committee believed it to be important to the Government of the United States that the power proposed to be given by the amendment should be conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury; but inasmuch as it may embarrass the bill, and lead to other amendments which may jeopardize it in the other House, I am instructed by the committee to withdraw it. It was brought forward, not at the instigation or suggestion of the representatives of that State, but under the impression that it was important to the Government of the United States to have the power conferred on the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to withdraw the amendment reported from the Committee on Finance, to which he alludes.

No objection was made.

The PRESIDENT. The amendment, together with the amendment to the amendment, is withdrawn.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the propriety of an amendment respecting an appropriation for the continuance of the water-works in this city. I understand that progress cannot be made with the work unless an appropriation be made. An appropriation was made at the last session to bring water into the city of Washington, but unless an additional appropriation be made at this time I understand the work will not be advanced during the summer months.

Mr. HUNTER. I will suggest to the Senator that if he desires to bring up that subject, the proper time will be after the amendments reported from the committee have been disposed of.

The question recurred on the next amendment of the Committee on Finance, which had been excepted from the general vote on the amendments. It was to add the following additional section:

"Sec. — And be it further enacted, That before any payment shall hereafter be made to any invalid pensioner, whose name shall have been upon the pension list two years, he shall produce to the agent for paying pensions to whom he shall apply for payment the affidavit of two surgeons or physicians, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, stating, from personal examination, the continuance of the disability, describing it, for which the pension was originally granted, and the date of such disability at the time of making such affidavit, and every two years after the date of such affidavit he shall, before receiving any further payment, produce to said agent a similar affidavit; and if in said affidavit the disability shall be stated at a rate below that for which the pension was originally granted, he shall only be paid at the rate stated in said affidavit—said affidavit shall be filed by said agents, and carefully preserved, and copies thereof shall be transmitted, with the semi-annual returns of said agents, to the Commissioner of Pensions, who shall file them with the original papers of said pensioner, respectively: Provided, That when the pension shall have been originally granted by a special act of Congress, or for a total disability for the loss of a limb, or other cause, which cannot be removed, either in whole or in part, the above affidavit shall not be required: And provided further, That if any person entitled to an invalid pension shall be in the possession of a salaried civil office, his pension shall be suspended during the time of his employment in said civil office."

Mr. ADAMS. In a very few words I will state my reasons for objecting to the amendment, and asking the Senate to refuse to concur in it. I wish to suggest what I consider an impropriety in requiring the pensioners every two years to renew the certificates of their disability. It will be exceedingly troublesome and inconvenient if it be required of a pensioner. I think the Committee on Finance have proceeded upon the supposition, especially in the last clause, to which I have heretofore objected, that these pensions are granted as favors and bounties to those who have suffered in the service of the country. I look upon them in a very different light. I view them as a compensation, as pay for services rendered and injuries sustained in the service of the country. If you require an invalid pensioner every two years to obtain the certificates of two surgeons, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, so as to make it evidence at the Department before the pension agent, you impose a very heavy burden, and a troublesome and inconvenient duty upon the pensioner, and you will be trammeling the payment of the debt, as I conceive, unnecessarily.

To the last clause I have still stronger objections. It provides that any person receiving a pension, who may be in the receipt of a salary which is conferred upon him either by the General Government, or by the people among whom he lives, shall have his pension suspended during the time he is in receipt of his salary. Now what reason is there for that? If the disability under which he labors entitles him to the compensation which is fixed by the existing laws, why will you take it from him because his fellow-citizens think proper to confer upon him an office? I see no reason, no propriety, no justice, in such a provision. My idea of our pension system is a different thing. I would myself rather pay every man who served the country in any capacity a sum sufficient, at the end of his services, to settle up and be even with him, and his children, and his grandchildren. It would be a great advantage to the country if that could be done; but as we have adopted the system under which we are now acting, I see no propriety in trammeling the payment of the debt in the way the amendment proposes.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to amend the amendment by inserting, after the words "civil office," the words "under the United States," so that the clause will read:

"That if any person entitled to an invalid pension shall be in the possession of a salaried civil office under the United States, his pension shall be suspended during the time of his employment in said civil office."

I can understand why a pension ought not to be paid to a person who accepts a civil office under the United States. That would be pensioning our own officers. If they have health, and strength, and capacity to perform an office which they choose to accept, I think the pension ought to be suspended; but I cannot understand the application of the rule as regards the action of the States. If a State chooses, in addition to the pension of the officer, to give him some office of which he can perform the duties, I do not think we should interfere in reference to that. I therefore move the amendment which I have suggested.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know that I have any objection to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. I desire to state, in regard to the amendment reported from the committee, the propriety of which is disputed, that it was made at the request, and on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior—that is, all of it save the last provision, which requires that the invalid pension shall cease when the pensioner receives the perquisites of a civil office. All the rest of the amendment has been earnestly recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. In relation to it he says, in a letter dated January 17:

"The third relates to the payment of invalid pensions. Existing pension laws authorize the allowance of an increase of pensions, proportionate to the increase of the disability, but does not provide for a diminution of the amount of pension, in proportion to the decrease of disability. There are, no doubt, many persons now on the pension rolls who have more or less recovered from the disability, on account of which pensions were allowed them, and the object of the inclosed amendment, marked C, is to provide for a biennial examination of pensioners of this class, by two approved surgeons, and to regulate the amount of pensions to be paid, in proportion to the disability which may be found to exist at the periods of examination."

I have also another letter upon the same subject from the Commissioner of Pensions:

PENSION OFFICE, March 17, 1854.

SIR: Upon examining our registers, I find the examination of the invalid pensioners in North Carolina and Illinois resulted in striking from the roll fifty-six names, a part of which were erased January 17, 1852, and the balance February 15, 1853. Since that time fifteen of this number have been restored in whole or in part, leaving forty-one who have not yet been restored. Besides these, there are some instances where the pensions have been reduced, and the pensioners have not been stricken from the rolls. It is believed that similar results will follow similar examinations in all the States.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
L. P. WALDO, Commissioner.
Hon. R. McCLELLAND, Secretary of the Interior.

I am informed, by the Secretary of the Interior, that he has reason to believe that great frauds are practiced in the manner in which the invalid pensions are obtained. Many of them seem to have been obtained for disabilities which did not continue, and for diseases of which the pensioners were cured in a short time; and it is to reach this evil that he proposes a biennial examination. He says, that some of the examinations upon which pensions were granted were made by persons utterly incompetent to decide upon the nature of the disease; and he proposes to introduce some system by which it can be ascertained whether the diseases are such as to bring them within the pension laws. There have also been cases of forgeries in relation to applications for pensions, of a character which would shock and alarm the public mind if they were brought to light. The Secretary believes that frauds exist to an extent which renders it necessary to throw some such safeguard as this around the system, in order that the benefit of the laws may be drawn only by those who deserve it. Surely there can be no objection to that. If we confine the system to those only who deserve it, there can be no objection to such safeguards and checks as will enable us to detect the fraudulent applications. Unless there is some provision of this sort, there is no mode of reaching these cases in which the parties have been cured of the partial and temporary disabilities upon which they have obtained pensions. I am told there are many such cases arising out of the Mexican war. The parties come home, and make application for a pension on account of disability and disease, and, after obtaining the pension, were cured, and return to more active life. The very cases to which the Commissioner of Pensions refers show the importance of having these examinations, so that frauds may be detected. A number of such frauds have been detected by him.

In relation to the last provision which the Secretary did not recommend, but which has been reported under the recommendation of the Committee on Finance, I have but a few words to say. It will be for the Senate to determine whether persons who are receiving the perquisites of a civil office, and very often large salaries too, should also draw, in addition to those salaries and perquisites, an invalid pension. I had supposed that these pensions were designed to provide for persons who were disabled, by injuries contracted in the service of the country, either partially or wholly, from obtaining the means of subsistence for themselves; but whenever they can discharge the duties of lucrative offices, and when those offices are bestowed upon them by the United States, it seemed to us that that ought to be sufficient, and that they ought not to draw a pension as long as they discharge the duties and receive the emoluments of those offices. It is, therefore, proposed, in such cases, to suspend the allowance of the pension until the parties are removed from the office, in which case they will be allowed to draw the pension again. This is a matter which, it seems to me, does not admit of argument. I certainly shall only state the case to the Senate, and they may do as they please in regard to it. It may be that the Senate will think that the amendment ought to be limited to salaries of a certain class and amount; but surely I think there can be no difference of opinion as to the propriety of prohibiting those who are drawing large salaries in the discharge of the duties of a civil office under the United States, from drawing also a pension.

Mr. PEARCE. I differ entirely from the Senator from Mississippi in regard to the character of an invalid pension. It is not a debt; and the payment of it to the pensioner is not the payment of a debt. It is in almost every case a gratuity; or, at all events, a gratuitous indemnity to the soldier for injuries which he has sustained while in the military service of the country, and which, more or less, incapacitate him for obtaining a livelihood by active labor. That is the principle of the system, at all events. We do not give pensions, except to those who are injured, and to those who are so injured as to be more or less deprived of the physical ability to earn a livelihood. If that is the principle of our pension system, surely both parts of the amendment are right; the first one, because we know that applicants for pensions are very often examined immediately after their wounds have been received, and while they are yet suffering from their direct and necessary consequences. At such a time there may be an apparent incapacity to obtain a livelihood, which, after a little while, disappears, and the party is restored to health and vigor. He is no longer incapable of obtaining a livelihood, and therefore the principle on which the pension was granted fails, and the pension ought to fail too. The very same principle would sanction the other part of the amendment. We have carried out this principle in our legislation heretofore in regard to Navy pensions. We do not allow invalids who have naval pensions—captains, commanders, lieutenants—to receive pensions while they are receiving full pay. If any such officer of the Navy is entitled to a pension, on account of a wound or other disability, it ceases, by law, during the time that he is so engaged in duty as to receive full pay, and for a very good reason.

It is supposed, while on the pension list, that he is incapable of performing the full duty which will insure him full pay; and when, therefore, he is under no incapacity, but can answer all the demands of his profession, he is not entitled to receive the pension which is intended as an indemnity for physical inability to perform that duty. It seems to me, therefore, manifestly proper that we should agree to both portions of the amendment.

I do not know that it was in the contemplation of the committee to suspend the pension of any pensioner who may be receiving the emoluments of an office under one of the States. That was not my view of it. I supposed that the amendment referred to those who hold office under the Government of the United States. I have, of course, therefore, no objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment.

It does seem to me, unless we intend to pension everybody who serves the Government in a military capacity, and consider that there is no longer any patriotic spirit among our people which will induce a man to serve the country because it is his country—unless we are willing to pension every man who enters the service of the United States, and give him a gratuity over and above his pay while in the service, you must make this amendment. I think the pension system has grown up to be larger than it ought to be. It is high time to diminish it in all proper cases; and the amendment is a step which should be taken in that direction. It will stop the pension when the actual disability ceases for which alone it was given; and it will not allow a man to receive this indemnity for injuries supposed to disqualify him for full exertion of his faculties, when the fact is that he is enjoying emoluments which are properly earned by men who, being in the possession of unimpaired physical abilities, can perform the duties of a salaried office.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I hope the Senate will refuse to concur in the whole of the section which is reported as an amendment by the Committee on Finance. The duty which is imposed upon the old pensioners, who receive this small pittance from the Government for incurring disease in the service of the country, in order to obtain the allowance of the pension, is, in the first place, an onerous one. It is a small pittance. It is nothing compared with the suffering which they endured. Most of the pensioners who are in the West are at such a great distance from the officers to which they must apply for the pension, that it is a great trouble and expense to them to procure it originally; and to require them to go over the same thing every two years, is a hardship which ought not to be imposed upon them.

It seems to me, sir, that this is a matter which should have been referred originally to the Committee on Pensions. If any provision is necessary in regard to it, it should have originated with that committee, and not with the Committee on Finance. It is a matter which legitimately comes within the duties of the former committee, and it should have been referred to them, just in the same way as matters relating to the public lands, to commerce, and to other subjects, are referred to the committees which are appointed by the Senate for the consideration of such measures. The Senator from Virginia says that frauds have been committed in obtaining the certificate to show that the man is disabled. If fraud is originally committed, is it not probable that it will be committed again? If false documents were resorted to in the first place to establish the right of a party to a pension, will they not be applied in a second case. But every physician who certifies to the disability of a man who has served his country, has to procure a certificate that he is reputable in his profession as a physician, before the pension can be obtained founded upon that certificate; but now, by this amendment, two surgeons or physicians are required to sign the certificate. Sir, it will be a great hardship to impose upon the pensioners. I hope the whole amendment, and especially the last clause in it, which is not recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, that in relation to withdrawing the pension from one who holds an office, will be rejected. I would like to know what compensation can be made to a friend of mine, whom I now have in my eye, with his right arm stricken from his body, for a loss of that kind? Can the small pittance which he receives of sixteen dollars a month compensate him for the loss of that arm?

The Senator from Maryland says that these pensions are not to be looked upon as compensation, that they are gratuities; and he says that officers in the Navy are not allowed to receive a compensation and a pension at the same time. But it must be recollected that an officer in the Army or Navy has provision made for him, because the moment he enters the service he has soldiers or seamen to attend to his wants while he is in the line of his duty. It is not so with the pensioner who is not on duty.

I repeat, sir, this matter has never been referred to the Committee on Pensions, to which it appears to me it should have been referred. I hope the amendment will be rejected; and I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand the motion of the honorable Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] and the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. JONES,] is to strike out the whole of this section?

Mr. ADAMS. That is not the question. The question is on concurring in the amendment reported from the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I move to strike out the last clause of it.

Mr. ADAMS. That is not now in order, as an amendment to the amendment is already pending. The question is on concurring in the amendment; and I ask the Senate to refuse to concur in it.

Mr. HUNTER. It is in order to amend an amendment. The Senator from Iowa can move to amend the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I want to strike the whole of it out.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question which is pending. The Senator from Delaware proposes to amend the amendment of the committee, by adding after the words "civil office" the words "under the United States." That is the proposition which is now before the Senate.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is an amendment to the amendment. The motion, then, of the Senator from Mississippi is to strike this out; or is it not to concur in it?

Mr. ADAMS. It is not to concur.

Mr. SHIELDS. If I understand the Senator from Virginia, the object of the amendment, as stated by the Secretary of the Interior, is twofold: first, to deprive those pensioners who hold a civil office under the United States of their pensions; and second, to prescribe a kind of sliding scale by which, under the report of a commission to be instituted every two years to ascertain how much of the original disability exists, you are to reduce the pension, and proportionate it to the nature and character of the disability at each returning period.

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir; the object is to have a reexamination every two years—to have a biennial examination, to see whether the pensioners are entitled or not; to see whether their disability continues, or whether it has ceased to exist.

Mr. SHIELDS. In other words, there is to be a biennial commission for examination. That examination is to be instituted for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the pensioner at the time. If the disability has wholly ceased, the pension is wholly to cease; if the disability has partly ceased, the pension is to cease in proportion, as I understand it. That is the first object of the amendment. The second object is to deprive any man who receives any amount of pension from holding any office under the General Government. The honorable Senator from Virginia is not the author of this amendment, and I am glad of it, for I was a little surprised when I saw it offered first. I at first imagined that it originated with him, but I see that it does not. It originates in a very confused notion about these pensions. That, I must say, with all my respect for the honorable Secretary of the Interior. I agree with that Secretary, and I agree with the honorable Senator, that there have been immense frauds committed in relation to these pensions; but I deny that the amendment touches any one of those frauds. On the contrary, the amendment, if adopted into a law, will affect the honest and the provident pensioners, but not those who commit frauds. These frauds originate in the Pension Bureau, and not in the pension laws. I have almost been disgusted with the manner in which pensions are now obtained. An honest, simple-minded soldier comes from the battle-field to this city; if his certificate of disability is not in exact form, his pension is rejected. But, sir, a fellow comes here who fabricates the testimony and the evidence to hand, and that man goes and obtains a pension.

A SENATOR. The system is rotten.

Mr. SHIELDS. Rotten! it is rotten to its foundation. I know it. I went to the bureau not many weeks ago with a poor soldier who had become blind in the service—who had fought through six battles, and who had become stone blind in the service. I could not get a pension for him. Why? The poor soldier could not get a certificate of the place where he had become blind. He had been growing blind gradually for six years, and of course no surgeon could give him a certificate; neither could he get a certificate that he got blind in the line of his duty. Why? Because no man could tell exactly the point at which he had become blind; but if he could have got a certificate, saying that his blindness occurred at a particular time and place in the line of his duty, he would have got a pension. Sir, I ask, are you not bound to imply that a man in the Army, discharging his duty as a soldier, suffers in the line of his duty? But I will not go through with that.

What I want to say here is this: That the amendment of the committee, as it now stands, would produce one of the most curious things which could be presented. Every two years you are to have an examination of the pensioners. Each pensioner is to be called upon to make affidavits in regard to the condition of his disability. If this examination results in satisfying the Department that the disability has wholly ceased, the pension is also to cease, according to the amendment; yet, sir, a week after that the disability may recur again. The man may, at the time of the examination, to all appearances, be a hearty man, and yet a week after be an invalid, and, according to the amendment, he could never get a pension again. No law can give him a pension after that. And, sir, let me ask what is the amount of the pension in consideration of which it is proposed to deprive these poor pensioners?

Eight dollars a month for a total disability; and now it is proposed that when that total disability becomes a partial disability, you shall give him but four dollars, or even less, according to a sliding scale; and you call that economy. You bring it down to a quarter of a dollar a month; and that is economy. That, sir, is just in character with all our legislation here. We can gamble away millions; but when it comes to a widow's or a poor soldier's pension, we are greatly economical. I hear more speeches made in the Senate about these pensions than I do when twenty millions of dollars are involved. We are all the time hearing about economy. Economy is preached to us every day here; and this is the extent of that economy. Sir, get at your fraudulent pensions, and strike them out of existence. But this amendment does not do that. Why does not the Commissioner of Pensions investigate these fraudulent pensions, and correct them? He says he has done it to a certain extent in North Carolina and Illinois. I know that in Illinois he has done great injustice; and he is restoring some pensions again. But I repeat, that is not the object of this amendment. It is not to deprive fraudulent pensioners of their pensions; but the object is to take away from the pensioner, according to the supposed condition of the person at the time, the little pittance which you have already given him. That is the object. You want to cut down his eight dollars a month, and that you call economy. Sir, there is no economy in it. It does not deserve the name of economy.

But the amendment comes to this further point, that you will not give a man a pension because he holds some little civil office under the Government of the United States. I know of no man, I can think of none now, who holds any important office under the Government of the United States, and who also receives a pension; but I know of several pensioners, some in my own State, who are postmasters of poor, little, petty post offices, and why? Because those post offices are too unimportant, and too insignificant for any man to hold unless he has some other means of business by which he may obtain support; and yet by this amendment you will deprive the individual of his little pension because he happens to be a postmaster in a little village. That will be the effect of it. You will take away his eight dollars a month—and that is the extent of your economy, mark you—you will take away the eight dollars a month from the poor soldier, because he happens to be a postmaster in a little village. Sir, can any man live on eight dollars a month anywhere? These poor pensioners are compelled to resort to a thousand expedients to obtain the means of a livelihood, in addition to the little pension which you confer upon them—to work, to keep little shops, to be postmasters, to be anything and everything; and yet you will take away the eight dollars a month. But that is not all. You compel the poor old soldier, who has received his pension for a wound, or disability, every two years to make an affidavit that he is still a disabled man; and he not only must make the affidavit himself, but he must get the certificate of two others, that he is disabled, and after he gets that from two surgeons, and sends it on, the commission is then to try him and see if he is a disabled man. That is the way you are to treat the old soldier, and that is economy. We have enough of that kind of economy every day. I agree with the Secretary of the Interior, and with the Commissioner of Pensions, that the whole pension system requires revision; but not this little, petty, tinkering revision. Nothing of that kind will do. We want an equal system, and a just system.

Let me show you the character of this amendment. One of its provisos reads as follows:

"Provided, That when a pension shall have been originally granted by a special act of Congress, or for a total disability, for the loss of a limb or other cause, which cannot be removed, either in whole or in part, the above affidavit shall not be required."

Now, if the honorable Senator from Virginia had as much occasion to examine this matter as I have, he would see that that portion of the pension system which has been most grossly abused is left untouched by the amendment. Pensions given by Congress, in special cases, at random, sometimes to the amount of thirty dollars a month, and sometimes fifteen dollars, for there is no system in it, the amendment does not touch; but it goes to the poor pensioners who have no influence in Congress, who have never come before Congress, and who could not get a pension if they did come. It takes away their eight dollars a month, and that is the whole amount of it. The amendment does not touch one of those outrageous pensions which sometimes pass this body; but it touches the class of pensioners who are the most worthy of relief, and for whom I have constantly struggled. Now I should like to see what amount we will economize in two years by this; I would like to see a feature of that kind presented to us. I wish the Secretary of the Interior would give us what he supposes will be the probable amount saved to the Treasury of the United States by the operation of the amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to say a few words on this amendment. I shall rejoice, under ordinary circumstances, to see my friend from Virginia turn reformer. There are many evils here, as well as elsewhere, which ought to be corrected. I was silly enough, the other day, to attempt to drive back one which, during the last three or four years, has been steadily creeping into the Senate. There is scarcely, I believe, a standing committee in this body, which is not provided with a clerk, and not more than three or four of those committees have ordinarily business enough to employ the members themselves; yet the other day, when I made an attempt to prevent the appointment of a clerk to one of those committees, which rarely meets more than once a year, and oftentimes not that, I failed; but now, sir, the Senator from Virginia, I think it probable, seeing that there is some man placed upon the pension roll at eight dollars a month, when he ought to receive only four dollars a month, proposes to get rid of that by the amendment which he has reported. Here is an attempt to deprive the soldiers of their pensions, upon the pretense that they may have partially recovered from the disability under which they were originally placed upon the pension rolls. It is an attempt made, I say, to cut down their eight dollars to four dollars a month. Sir, it is very probable that legislation upon this subject is necessary, but if that legislation be necessary, one would very naturally suppose that the Committee on Pensions, who have charge of this subject, who appear to understand all the laws connected with your Pension Department, would be the proper committee to devise the remedy. I grant there may be abuses prevailing under the pension laws of this Government, and gross frauds may have been practiced, but if those frauds are to be remedied, and if proper legislation is to be adopted, let it be made the special duty of my friend from Iowa, [Mr. JONES,] who is at the head of that committee, to devise the necessary legislation.

Are we in possession of the facts which are necessary to enable us to decide upon this question. Upon the bare suggestion of the Committee on Finance, you are now asked to adopt an important provision, deeply affecting a large class of valuable citizens who have gone forth to the field of battle and exposed their lives in defending the honor of your country. It would be supposed that they were naturally entitled to the protection and guardian care of the Government, and that they would not be the first to be touched by a system of economy which is to be adopted in this Senate. The last provision of the amendment declares that if any person who has been placed upon the invalid pension rolls, shall afterwards receive a compensation as a salaried officer of the Government, his pension shall be stopped. Sir, I say it with all proper respect, I would cut off my right hand before I would vote for so cruel an amendment. I know not what the opinions of other Senators may be, but I will never, under any circumstances, vote for so gross an outrage as is contained in the three lines of that amendment. Merely because a man who has been placed upon your pension rolls having lost a limb, perhaps upon the battle-field, and is receiving his eight dollars a month, gets a little salaried office, which brings him in some four or five dollars additional, you propose to strip him of his pension, and call that, in the language of my friend from Illinois, "economy." Now, Mr. President, there is such a thing as stopping at the spigot and letting out at the bung-hole; but that is a system of economy which should never receive our sanction. If the Senator from Virginia will bring in a system of legislation here that shall correct the abuses that have been practiced under our present laws; if he will bring in a system that will do justice to all those men who have served the country, it shall receive my support; but it must be in different language from that which is contained in this amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, the Senators from Illinois and California have admitted that frauds do exist under the pension laws. The Senator from Illinois represents them as being almost as great as they are represented to be by the Secretary of the Interior; and yet, when he comes to consider a system in regard to which he admits the existence of such immense frauds, he does not choose to consider it as a question of moral or political propriety, but as one of money; and when a provision is introduced to meet the case of those frauds, he chooses to regard it as a matter, not of morals, but of money. Is it not of immense importance that we should introduce purity into the affairs of this Government? It is difficult, I know, to detect frauds; but is it not of immense importance, when you can detect them, that they should be exposed?—and is not that the precise object of the amendment? Does it propose to cut off the pension from any man who is entitled—from any man who is really disabled? Not at all, but only from those who are not disabled, who have obtained the pension improperly, or whose disabilities have ceased. The Senator says it will not reach the case of frauds. What method is so likely as the one which subjects the pensioner to the examination of physicians? What is so likely to reach the case of frauds as to take the opinion of experts to see whether a disease exists which disables the man? And yet gentlemen choose to say, out of zeal for the old soldier, that it is to take from him what legitimately belongs to him. No, sir; it is not. It is a protection to the system. If you will guard the system, and throw around it such provisions as will enable us to apply it to those who deserve it, and to throw out those who do not deserve it, it will benefit the worthy pensioners.

It is known to those who have looked into this matter—and the Senator from Illinois professes to know all about it; the Secretary of the Interior has confused notions upon the subject, so has the Commissioner of Pensions; and he alone seems to have clear views in relation to it; and he must know, if he has examined this matter—that there have been cases of fraud, and of immense fraud. The Commissioner of Pensions reports cases in the Senator's own State. Is it not then proper—is it not a matter of importance, to adopt some system, which shall enable the Secretary to separate the spurious from the real and the deserving cases? What does the amendment propose to do? Simply to require the pensioner biennially to present the certificate of two surgeons, of two persons who are capable of judging of the matter, in regard to his disease. That is all of it.

But the Senator complains that an exception is made in regard to special cases—cases in relation to which special acts have been passed by Congress. I did not hear the Secretary of the Interior say why it was he proposed this exception; but I presume it was in deference to the will of the Legislature. These pensions are very often granted, I admit, not upon any rule; and he, therefore, could provide no general means by which to tell whether they came within the intent of the Legislature or not. All he could do was to strike at the evils practiced under the whole system; and in doing so, he proves himself to be a friend of the system.

But the Senator from California objects that the provision is not matured by the Committee on Pensions. It was matured by the Secretary of the Interior after experience in regard to the matter. If it had proposed to go into a systematic arrangement of the pension laws of the country, I should have felt that it should go to the Committee on Pensions; but it was only designed to enable the Department to meet particular cases of fraud.

Now, in regard to the provision which proposes to suspend the invalid pension of those persons who receive salaries in the discharge of civil offices, the Senators have chosen to consider an extreme case, and to argue the question upon an extreme case; they consider a postmaster who gets little or nothing, and say, in that case, is the man to lose his pension? Perhaps the provision, in that regard, ought to have some amendment; but the Senators take care to avoid other cases in which I think they would themselves admit that the injustice is not so clear. How is it in regard to men who receive the salaries of Governors, it may be, of Territories, who receive salaries to the amount of one, two, or perhaps three thousand dollars? Is it not perfectly just that their pensions should be suspended while they receive those salaries? Would not that be a matter of justice? And yet the Senators propose to do nothing to reach such cases; but, arguing upon the extreme supposition that the provision is only applied to those who receive a small amount in the discharge of small offices, they attack the amendment.

It seems to me that justice to the system itself requires that it should be pruned of abuses; but the moment an attempt is made to do so, that attempt is resisted upon the grounds that it is an invasion of the rights of the old soldiers. An invasion of the rights of the soldiers to propose to establish rules and provisions by which you may detect fraudulent applications, and by which you can secure to those who deserve it, not only the pecuniary provision made by the country, but its sympathy and affection! Sir, I maintain that it is of immense importance to every country to preserve the purity of its administration, to detect and expose fraud wherever it exists, and to convey to the heart and mind of every man in the country, if it can be done, the conviction, that if attempts are made to defraud the country, they will be detected and exposed. How to measure that in money I do not know. It may be for the Senator from Illinois, who seems to have a money standard for all these matters, to say how it is to be estimated in money; I cannot. I have been induced to believe that it is a question more of morals than of money; and believing that, I accord very cheerfully with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia one question. I believe he objects to all amendments being made to a deficiency bill, unless they are strictly for a deficiency. Now, I desire that he shall inform the Senate how it was that the Committee on Finance, uniformly acting upon that rule, have brought in as an amendment a general provision affecting the pension laws of the United States? I desire to know whether he calls that a deficiency?

Mr. HUNTER. I will say to the Senator from California that it has been the practice for years past in special cases, which require immediate action, to legislate to some extent upon general appropriation bills. It is only in cases in which it is deemed that there is necessity for immediate action that such things are done. I admit that, though it is a general practice, it is an improper one.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think there are few Senators in this body who have voted more liberally for the extension of the pension laws than myself. There are few who have been more liberal in the construction of our duties in reference to those who are entitled to a pension than myself; but while I have thus pursued that policy, I trust I shall be the last Senator here who will prevent the correction of any existing evil which shall grow out of the system as it now is. If I understand my friend from California, [Mr. WELLER,] he says that there were supposed, and, in his judgment, actual and existing evils in this body which he sought to remedy a few days since. But the Senate took a different view of the matter, and did not concur with him. The Senator, however, still retains his former opinion; and, if I understand him aright, he follows it by admitting that there are evils existing in the pension system. The deduction, therefore, which I draw from his suggestion is, that the Senate having refused to correct an evil here which he proposed to correct, he will not now correct an evil which he admits to exist in another Department of the Government. I think that is the position in which my friend has placed himself.

Mr. WELLER. I do not wish my friend to do me injustice in relation to my remarks. I said that I attempted, a short time since, to correct an abuse which did exist in this body. I also stated that if legislation was necessary upon the subject of this amendment, the way to provide for it was by some general measure, and that that should fall within the peculiar province of the Committee on Pensions. I objected to bringing it in as an amendment to the deficiency bill; and I said that if there were abuses, I did not choose to make myself prominent in attempting to correct them, because the only effort of that kind which I had made in the Senate had been a most signal failure. When I attempted to resist the creation of mere sinecures, my friend from Maine would not stand by me; and, as a natural consequence, I will not stand by him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I do not see that the explanation of my friend from California relieves him materially from the position in which, as I thought, he placed himself by his previous remarks. He seeks now to have the remedy by a general system of legislation. I think the provision here is general; I think it will meet every class of cases coming under the head of "invalid pensions." It is a general provision of law, and is therefore precisely that course which the Senator himself suggests should be taken.

Now, sir, what does this section provide? It provides simply that, once in two years, the pensioner shall present to the pension agent the certificate of two surgeons that the disability for which he received a pension remains as it was when the pension was originally granted. That is all there is of it. Is this onerous? Is it burdensome? We all know precisely what these certificates are. They are the certificates of two accredited physicians or surgeons in the country. They are such as are taken when the pensions are procured. The certificates of surgeons and physicians in good standing in the community are those which are always taken at the Department. The invalid pensioner, therefore, has only to procure the certificate of two known surgeons in his neighborhood, and present it once in two years at the time his pension shall become due. To do this, but very little time will be required, and very little expense will have to be incurred.

We are told in terms, both by the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, that there are numerous cases now existing where invalid pensions were granted for what was supposed to be permanent disability, and which, it is presumed, has turned out to be only temporary disability. And now Senators object to a provision which shall reach that class of cases. The amendment of the committee has this extent; no more; saving and excepting that there are two other classes of pensions which are granted by Congress under special laws, with which they do not propose to meddle, for the reason which has, I think, been very well stated by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] that, as they are predicated upon no fixed rule, no fixed remedy can be applied.

Now, sir, I think the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHIELDS] has, in his sweeping charges against the Pension Bureau, done it injustice—unintentionally, I have no doubt. I think my friend from Illinois has been too general and too sweeping in the charges which he has made against that Bureau. He says that many and numerous frauds have been committed upon it. That is undoubtedly true; and when that Senator proclaims to the world that frauds have been committed upon that Bureau, it is but a proclamation which shows the necessity of vigilance on the part of the officer at its head against frauds upon the Government; and I am myself satisfied that, from the existence of these very frauds which have been perpetrated, there has been a greater degree of scrupulous exercised by the Commissioner of Pensions. It may be, perhaps, that he is compelled, in some instances, to refuse a pension where the evidence is not entirely clear and perfect; where he might possibly do it under other circumstances, if no frauds had been committed. In other words, the existence of these very frauds has compelled him, in justice to the Government, to enforce a more rigid rule than he otherwise would.

Nobody knows better than the Senator from Illinois that it is utterly impossible to trace the disability, in many cases, to causes which occurred while the soldier was in the line of his duty. Blindness, lameness, and a vast variety of diseases may come upon the person, which are really to be attributed to a disease which existed while the individual was in the service and in the line of his duty. Still, from the want of the evidence which the law and the rules under that law have prescribed, it is sometimes found to be impossible to establish, by such evidence as is necessary, the right to a pension in these cases. It is impossible, frequently, to trace back effects to causes; and it may be, and it is true, that the Commissioner has sometimes been rigid in the exercise of the rules laid down. When the Senator from Illinois himself tells us that frauds are committed, I think he complains harshly and unjustly, and without just provocation, of the administration of the Commissioner of Pensions. In relation to the last clause of this amendment of the committee, I think it should be retained with an amendment; but if no amendment be made, I shall certainly vote to strike it out.

Mr. HUNTER. Move an amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would limit it to persons holding offices under the United States, whose compensation, as such, is more than $1,200 a year; but to apply the restriction to those who may be holding small and inferior offices under the Government would be unjust. Sir, I have now in my mind's eye an individual who discharges well duties which have been assigned to him under the Government, and for which he receives a small compensation. I should feel unwilling to see him turned out of that employment or deprived of his pension, when I know, and everybody knows, that he discharges his duties properly and faithfully. There are a great many cases of that sort. I will therefore move to amend the last clause of the committee's amendment by adding after the word "office" the words "exceeding $1,200 per annum."

Mr. HUNTER. I am willing to agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. NORRIS in the chair.) An amendment to the amendment is already pending.

Mr. HAMLIN. I was not aware of that. Then I give notice that I shall move that amendment at the proper time.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have a few words to say in reply to the Senators from Maine and Virginia.

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senator will yield me the floor, in order that I may move to postpone the further consideration of the bill so that we may go into Executive session.

Mr. SHIELDS. I cannot yield; I must reply now. The honorable Senator from Virginia, if I understood him—perhaps I may have misunderstood him—said with a kind of sneer, which is not usual with that honorable Senator, that I attempted to show that I knew everything about the pension laws, and that the Pension Bureau knew nothing. I understood the Senator to state, with some kind of sneer, that I assumed to know everything about the pension laws.

Mr. HUNTER. I certainly meant no sneer. I inferred from what the Senator said that he supposed the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Pensions, and the Committee on Finance, all had confused opinions upon this subject. I inferred that from his argument; but I certainly meant no sneer.

Mr. SHIELDS. As I happened to differ from the Committee on Finance, the Commissioner of Pensions, and the Secretary of the Interior, of course I could not say they were right. If a Senator attempts to oppose any proposition presented by them, he cannot oppose it and say at the same time that they are right.

Sir, it happens to be my peculiar fortune, or misfortune, as the case may be, to be applied to very generally to get pensions for invalid soldiers. I find that I am a kind of general agent here, and I do more of that business than I like to do.

Every day calls of that kind are made upon me. Hence I have to go up to the Pension Bureau and examine these cases; and that, perhaps, has enabled me to examine this question more carefully than I should otherwise have done. I think that, in this case, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions have failed to prescribe a remedy for the evil which they present, and which I, to some extent, admit. That is the difference between us.

But, sir, the honorable Senator from Virginia says that I do not regard this in the proper light; that I consider it as a question of money, instead of a question of morals. It may be a question of morals to the honorable Senator, and to me; but I think it will appear to the poor pensioner as a question of money, affecting his pension. We may talk about morals; but he will think of his little pension. I am thinking of the pensioner and of his pension. I am neither thinking of the money nor of the morals, so far as this matter is concerned; but I am simply taking the case of the poor pensioner.

It is stated by the Bureau, and I admit the statement to some extent, that there are frauds in the granting of pensions. The laws are correct; the legislation upon the subject is correct; but the difficulty is, I will say, in the administration of those laws. I can state to the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] that when I state the frauds are in the administration, I do not mean that the Commissioner of Pensions commits any fraud, but frauds are practiced upon him by false testimony, by false affidavits, by false certificates. This is not because the Commissioner himself either assents to, or would allow frauds, but because he is imposed upon.

I state, further, and I venture to say the Commissioner will bear me out in this, that where frauds are perpetrated, the evidence is of the most conclusive kind; that in all cases of fraud the testimony is made perfect; the ceremonies are all performed; the testimony is brought up to the mark; and the Commissioner acts upon these cases as any Commissioner would. But now he finds out that he has granted pensions upon fraudulent certificates. Now, how does he propose to remedy that? Why, sir, to call up all the pensioners in the United States, from Maine to California, inclusive, every two years—to bring them up as you would bring up so many horses, and have them examined by two surgeons. In order to detect the frauds which the Commissioner says have been committed in a few cases, he proposes to bring up, every two years, all the old pensioners in the United States, to have their bodies examined by two surgeons, and certificates and affidavits brought forward; and unless they are all found to be precisely what they were when the original testimony was taken, their pensions are to cease. Thus the pension system is to be changed every two years. That is his remedy, as proposed by this amendment. I say the remedy proposed is an improper one, and that there should be some other way of getting at these frauds. Where a fraudulent case exists, act upon that case; but do not, under the idea that you are going to detect these frauds, call up all your pensioners and have them examined every two years, and require them to produce new certificates.

Now, sir, I say that if you pass this provision into law, which I hope and believe will not be done, and then attempt to carry it into execution, the result will be that the poor, honest pensioners will be struck off the roll, and all the fraudulent ones will be left. Those who act fraudulently can easily procure the necessary certificates; whereas, the poor, ignorant soldier who fights the battles of your country and is wounded, will find great difficulty in doing so. I know that these are the men who now find difficulty in getting pensions at all. I say that the proposed remedy will make the matter worse than it is now; that it is really no remedy at all. If the Commissioner wishes to get at these frauds, let him make out a list of what he supposes to be fraudulent cases; let him present that list to Congress, and let us institute an investigation; but let us not go into this system of requiring all the pensioners to be examined in this way; compelling the poor pensioner, wherever he may be, to go and get two surgeons to certify to his disability, under penalty of losing his pension. Sir, this is all wrong. In some districts of the country the poor soldiers find it difficult to get their original pensions in this way; but it is very curious kind of legislation to require all your poor old pensioners to go before two surgeons and get their certificates. This board of examination, if I may so call it, is in order to detect a few frauds.

Sir, I think the honorable Senator from Virginia is mistaken. I repeat, this provision, which is intended as a remedy for frauds, will not accomplish the purpose at all. Its effect will be precisely this: Those who have pensions will be obliged, every two years, to go through the same process which was necessary in the first place to enable them to get a pension—a process of swearing, of affidavits, and certificates. It will require the Bureau to reexamine and reinvestigate biennially whether or not the pensions of your old pensioners should be discontinued. I am anxious to save the honest pensioners and rid the pension system of fraud, and I will unite with the honorable Senator from Virginia, or any other Senator, to accomplish that object. If the Commissioner of Pensions should send here a list of cases which he believed to be fraudulent, and should ask us to institute a commission for their investigation, I would go for it. But, in my opinion, it is bad legislation to commence in this way to act upon all the pensioners of the nation in order to eliminate a few fraudulent cases. From the knowledge which I have of the manner in which pensions are obtained, I am convinced that the very men whom you intend to catch by this provision will every one elude you; and the men who will be deprived of their pensions are the poor, ignorant, honest soldiers, who are really entitled to the little pittance of eight dollars a month, which they now receive.

Mr. MASON obtained the floor.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask the Senator from Virginia to allow me to make a very few remarks, to correct some errors in regard to this subject.

Mr. MASON. I would do so with great pleasure, but the debate will be continued, if not upon this amendment, upon others. I move to postpone the further consideration of the subject, with a view to go into Executive session.

Mr. HUNTER. It is not my purpose to debate the question of the order of business, but I wish to suggest to my colleague whether it would not be better for him to withdraw his motion, and let us go through with the bill?

Mr. MASON. There is not the slightest probability of getting through the bill to-day, if we were to sit here until midnight.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I must ask that this bill be postponed until one o'clock to-morrow, and be then made the special order for one hour, so that I may not be in the way of petitions and reports.

Several SENATORS. No objection.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until one o'clock to-morrow, and that it be made the special order then for one hour.

Mr. MASON. I yield to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the joint resolution of the Senate "authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the expenses of codifying and revising the revenue laws," with an amendment.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 28, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER presented to the House a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting to the House therewith a report from the Secretary of the Interior, containing so much of the information called for by a resolution of the House of the 17th instant as is practicable and compatible with the public interest to furnish at the present time, respecting the proceedings which have been had, and negotiations entered into, for extinguishing the Indian titles to lands west of the States of Missouri and Iowa.

Mr. BENTON. I move that the communication be laid upon the table, and printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the document had better go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I move that reference of it.

Mr. BENTON. I would say to the gentleman from Alabama that I have already moved that it be laid upon the table, and printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Missouri, I believe, introduced the resolution, to which this communication is a response, and as he has made that motion, I withdraw mine.

So the report was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

RECOVERY OF ASSETS OF BANKRUPTS.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave, and introduced a bill of the following title; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill to authorize the recovery of the estates of bankrupts which have been concealed, or not specified in the schedule rendered by him.

REVISION OF REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. OLDS. Oh, no. Let us have a morning hour.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I ask my colleague to withdraw that motion for a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will withdraw it, if the gentleman wishes the floor for only a moment.

Mr. JONES. Some time last week, by the unanimous consent of the House, the Senate bill, appropriating $10,000 for revising the revenue laws, was before the House, and was then referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. The committee are now prepared to report a bill, which will be satisfactory, I think, to the whole House. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow that report to be made, and to have the subject taken up and disposed of. It can be done in a few minutes; and if it be not done now, the matter may be on hand a long time.

Mr. OLDS. I must object, because I am anxious to make a report from a committee of which I am a member. I dislike to be obliged to object; but if this course is to be pursued, I shall never get the opportunity to do so. We had better adhere to the regular business of the morning hour.

Mr. JONES. It will not take ten minutes to dispose of the matter; and I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, that if it consumes more than that, I will withdraw it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I yielded to this gentleman, and withdrew my motion only with the understanding that the gentleman should be allowed to present the report. I understand objection is made.

Mr. OLDS. I withdraw my objection.

No further objection being made,

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a substitute for the bill which was referred to them; which was read for information.

The substitute provides that there be appropriated out of the Treasury $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for preparing a general revenue law, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate passed in January, 1853; and that the Secretary of the Treasury allow other necessary expenses, and report to Congress, at its meeting in December next, the items of such pay and expenditure.

The SPEAKER. According to the practice of the House, the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think it was understood, at the time of the reference of the Senate bill to the Committee of Ways and Means, that when it should be again reported to the House, that it would be acted upon without additional reference. It has been to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union already, and discussed, and the only action of the Committee of Ways and Means in reference to it, as the House will see at once, has been to reduce the amount, and to require the Secretary of the Treasury to report to Congress, at its meeting in December next, the items embracing the expenditures which will be made under the joint resolution.

The amendment is of such a character as will, I think, remove the objections heretofore made against the joint resolution. I suppose the sense of the House was pretty well expressed the other day upon the propriety of passing some measure of this kind.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were the other day discharged from the further consideration of this joint resolution, and the House then by a two-thirds vote suspended the rule requiring it to be considered first in the Committee of the Whole House. That is the history of the action of the House in relation to this measure; but how far that action will apply to it in the shape in which it now comes from the Committee of Ways and Means is questionable. If there be no objection, however, the resolution and amendment will now be considered.

Mr. HAVEN. I would refer the Chair to the 133d rule; which is the one governing this matter, and is the following:

"All proceedings touching appropriations of money shall be first discussed in a Committee of the Whole House."

Now, sir, this is a proceeding touching an appropriation of money, and has been in Committee of the Whole. I think, therefore, it may very properly come up now and be acted on in the House.

The SPEAKER. It was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but has never been considered there. The Chair thinks that, by a strict construction of the rule, the resolution and amendment should go to a Committee of the Whole House for its first consideration. It is competent, however, for the House, by unanimous consent, to dispense with its consideration there. If there be no objection, the question will be upon the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now renew the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MURRAY. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Printing. I ask if it is not a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged question; but the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is also privileged, and must be first put.

Mr. HUGHES. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to give way for a moment. I expect to absent myself from the House for some days, and I desire to present three or four bills which I hold in my hand, for the purpose of having them referred.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not object, if no one else does.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose to report them from a committee, or to present them originally?

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to report them from the Committee on Private Land Claims, of which I am a member.

Mr. OLDS. I must object. I am very anxious to make reports from the committee to which I belong, and I cannot permit other committees to come in out of their order and make reports.

The SPEAKER. The bills can only be reported by unanimous consent; and objection is made.

Mr. CHANDLER. I insist, then, upon my motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HENN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what is his object in going into Committee of the Whole during the morning hour? Why not allow the committees to be called for reports?

Mr. CHANDLER. My object is to afford an opportunity to the gentleman from Illinois to present his opinions upon the subject on which he desires to speak.

Mr. OLDS. His opinions will not spoil by keeping.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remark to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, in consequence of the special order in committee, the bill on which the gentleman from Illinois has the floor will not be under consideration.

Mr. CHANDLER. The special order does not take effect until one o'clock, which is the reason why I desired to give the gentleman an opportunity to speak before that time.

The question was then put on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and, on a division, there were—ayes 80—

Mr. OLDS. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion, so that we may see who are opposed to receiving reports from the standing committees of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the yeas and nays be ordered, the call will exhaust what is remaining of the morning hour.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is agreed to.

So the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HAMILTON in the chair.)

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The civil and diplomatic appropriation bill is still under consideration; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. YATES said that he intended to address the committee on the subject of the Nebraska bill, and more especially on that portion of it which proposes to repeal the Missouri compromise. Opposition could come with propriety from Illinois, as no voice from that State had yet been raised against the bill. The most prominent champion of the measure in the Senate is from Illinois, as well as his colleague in the House, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] the chairman of the Committee on Territories.

One of the glorious traits of the Northwest was, that it had enjoyed, to an almost inappreciable extent, the benefits of the restriction which it was now proposed to repeal. He referred to the ordinance of 1787; and he should be the last one to deprive a sister Commonwealth, hereafter to come into the Union, of freedom in the race to glory. Whatever may be the glory or infamy of the measure, so in that glory or infamy Illinois must partly participate.

The Missouri compromise quieted the slavery agitation which at that time existed; and the measures of 1850, it was said, had settled the question finally, and it was declared that this was to be a business Congress. But it was reserved for a northern man, and he from Illinois, to cast the firebrands of discord into these peaceful councils; to revive and open a war so disastrous to the peace of our Union, which God alone can tell when and where the strife will terminate.

With regard to the Missouri compromise, the South was true to its plighted faith; but it was for a northern man to anticipate the wants of the South, and revive sectional war and agitation. And now they had the chagrin to hear, to the discomfiture of the North, that the South will not refuse our generous offer; and the whole North are to be made responsible for this surrender, by a northern Senator, of rights so dear to the North. No hand was prepared to disturb that compromise until this Nebraska bill was introduced.

He then proceeded to speak of Henry Clay as the great pacificator, saying that if Clay were here, in all the majestic proportions of his manly form, and clothed in the panoply of his immortal eloquence, he would rebuke this attempt to repeal the sacred compact. He made further remarks on this subject.

After Mr. YATES had been speaking for half an hour, the Chairman's hammer fell, one o'clock having arrived, being the hour fixed for the consideration of the special order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that, by the special order of the House, the committee is now required to pass from the consideration of this bill. The gentleman from Illinois can, therefore, only proceed with his speech by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOCOCK. I am perfectly willing that the special order shall be postponed until the gentleman from Illinois has concluded his speech.

Mr. KEITT. I trust the gentleman will be allowed to proceed.

[General cries of "Go on!" and "Agreed!"]
The CHAIRMAN. Is it the pleasure of the committee that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to proceed?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. KEITT. We can accomplish the same purpose by taking up the special order, if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOCOCK] will allow the gentleman from Illinois to go on with his remarks.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope that course will be pursued.

STEAM FRIGATES FOR THE NAVY.

The CHAIRMAN. That course will be adopted. The bill now before the committee for consideration is the special order, being bill No. 52, "to authorize the construction of six first-class steam frigates, and for other purposes;" on which the gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOCOCK. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] can proceed, if the time he may occupy is not to come out of my hour.

The CHAIRMAN. That arrangement can be made by the unanimous consent of the committee only.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. There is no unanimous consent, if I am a member.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Illinois cannot proceed; the gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOCOCK. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman shall proceed and finish his speech, provided I can have the floor for an hour when he has concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. That course is objected to by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH], and therefore the gentleman from Illinois cannot proceed in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to submit a point of order to the Chair. The special order is now before us for consideration; and if the gentleman from Virginia does not claim the floor, the gentleman from Illinois has a right to occupy it; and I presume there will be no difficulty in the gentleman from Virginia obtaining it afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has assigned the floor to the gentleman from Virginia now, he being entitled to it.

Mr. BOCOCK. I am very unwilling to take the floor from the gentleman from Illinois; but the Chair has awarded the floor to me, and if I give it up now, I may not be able to get it again.

Mr. KEITT. Then I would suggest, that when the gentleman from Virginia has done, the gentleman from Illinois should be allowed to finish his speech.

Mr. HUNT. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will be allowed to go on now; it is the generous and the proper course, and I hope that no gentleman upon this floor will object to his finishing the speech which he has commenced. I believe there is no objection now.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection was made, and it is still pending.

Mr. HUNT. I think the objection is withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia withdraw his objection?

Mr. SMITH. Why, no, sir; I understand that we have taken up another bill. A proposition is made to let the gentleman from Illinois go on with his remarks, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs waiving his right to the floor for the time being. What difficulty is there, then? I think, myself, that it is a very bad practice to disturb the regular order of business, as we are continually doing.

Mr. HUNT. Courtesy is a good practice, and might be properly observed on this occasion.

Mr. YATES then resumed and concluded his speech, in opposition to the Nebraska bill.

[His remarks, withheld for revision, will be published in the Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will now be read.
Mr. BOCOCK. I move to dispense with the reading.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOCOCK obtained the floor.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I rise to a question of order. It seems to me that we should be encroaching too much upon our excellent friend from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON], now in the chair, if he was required to preside over our deliberations in the consideration of two bills—this one, and the one which we have just laid aside—which will probably occupy more than a month. I therefore move that the committee do now rise, so as to enable the Speaker to relieve the gentleman.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose there will be no difficulty about that. When a chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union has reported a bill to the House, he is generally regarded by the Speaker as having discharged the duty for which he was called; and if the gentleman who now occupies the chair should report this bill to the House, the presumption is that it would terminate his labors.

Mr. TAYLOR. Very well; then I withdraw my motion.

Mr. BOCOCK called the attention of the committee to the bill under consideration, which he said provided for the construction of six first-class steam frigates, to be provided with screw propellers, and properly armed and equipped for service; said vessels and machinery to be built by contract, or in the Government navy-yards, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem most advisable for the public interest.

He explained that the bill had been framed in such form as to conciliate, if possible, all classes and shades of opinion. The Committee on Naval Affairs differed in opinion as to whether these vessels and their machinery should be built by contract or in the Government navy-yards. This difference of opinion doubtless existed among the members of the House; and to compromise the matter, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to pursue that course which he might deem most advisable. This, in his opinion, should be done; for the Secretary of the Navy would enjoy, in the investigation of the subject, many advantages which the House did not possess.

He then proceeded to show that the increase of the Navy had not been in proportion to the growth of the country and the extension of its commerce. Including all kinds of vessels, we had some seventy-two now in service. Thirty-five years was about as long as a vessel-of-war could be supposed to last. If the whole Navy was to be replaced in that length of time, two vessels should be built every year for the purpose of supplying the vacancies of those which had become unfit for service by reason of natural decay.

Now, no ship had been constructed since 1847, seven years ago; and at the rate of building two vessels every year, according to his argument, it would be necessary now immediately to construct fourteen ships-of-war. He dwelt at some length on the importance of the present crisis in European affairs, and the position of the United States towards the European Powers now, and with reference to the future, as arguments in favor of a regular and greater increase of the American Navy.

Mr. LYON said that, representing a moral district, an agricultural constituency, whose interests were deeply concerned in this measure, he should speak to an amendment, which he should offer at the proper time, for an increase of the Navy to twelve instead of six war steam frigates.

He then, in an animated manner, advocated this proposed increase of our Navy. He referred to the various outrages committed upon our citizens by foreign Governments, which, he said, would not be arrested without an addition to the Navy. He contended that this increase was also necessary for the protection of our commerce, and that the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy should be carried out by Congress.

[These speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. FRANKLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Maryland will give way, I will move that the committee rise.

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. FRANKLIN. I do not yield the floor for that purpose, but prefer to proceed with my speech now.

Mr. F. said he was one of those who voted to refer the Senate Nebraska bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Although he announced himself in favor of the principle of non-intervention, yet the proviso of the bill which came to the House from the Senate was so odious to him that he would prefer to consign it to the deep bosom of the ocean rather than it should pass the House. He then criticised the proviso, contending that it intervened in the question of slavery by Congress.

[This speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BARKSDALE obtained the floor.

Mr. DEAN. Will the gentleman give way for a motion that the committee do now rise? It is getting late.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. DEAN. Then I submit the motion to rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. HAMILTON] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill No. 48, being a bill "making appropriation for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1855," until the hour fixed for the consideration of the special order, when the committee took up the special order, House bill No. 52, being a bill "authorizing the construction of six first-class steam frigates, and for other purposes," and come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. JAMES C. ALLEN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his motion for a moment. There are some bills on the Speaker's table which I am very desirous to have referred, and it will not take more than a minute or two to dispose of them.

Mr. ALLEN. I will withdraw my motion for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, with a view of taking up and referring some bills from the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. COBB. I object.

The Speaker not hearing the objection, a bill "making grants of the public lands to the several States of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons" was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first time by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the taking up of that bill.

Mr. COBB. And so do I. When it is taken off the Speaker's table, I want it to be put upon its passage at once.

The SPEAKER. The Chair proceeded to the business on the Speaker's table by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. COBB. I objected, but the Chair did not hear me.

The bill was then read a second time by its title.

Mr. JONES. As the bill is before the House, I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HENDRICKS. On that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at twenty-five minutes to four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, twelve o'clock.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 29, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas

Foster and others, praying that the pensions allowed by the act of July 7, 1838, to a certain class of widows, and subsequently continued for life, may be allowed for an interval of two years, which was omitted in continuing the pensions, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of the widow of C. L. Williamson, late a commander in the Navy, praying to be allowed the pension which her husband received during his life, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom were referred documents in relation to the claim of Sylvanus Culver, heir of Samuel Pearson, to a patent for land for which a warrant was issued to said Pearson, and lost or mislaid, but never patented, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, for his relief; which was read and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Manuel Hernandez, praying a tract of land equivalent to one purchased by him, the title to which was confirmed by the commissioners of land claims in Florida, but the land subsequently sold by the United States to another person, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill from the House of Representatives to provide for the distribution of arms to the several States and Territories, reported it back, with amendments. He asked for its immediate consideration, but objection was made.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, recommending a reprint of D. D. Owen's report of a survey of the mineral lands in Iowa, Wisconsin, and northern Illinois, reported adversely thereon; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution allowing the use of a certain portion of the census returns for the preparation of a work on the manufactures of the United States, submitted an adverse report thereon.

PATENT OFFICE AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Printing have directed me to report in favor of printing thirty-seven thousand five hundred copies of the agricultural portion of the Patent Office report. I will say, that this will make the whole number of both portions of the Patent Office report precisely equal to that which was printed last year. We have reduced the mechanical part five thousand, and increased the agricultural part by the same number. If there be no objection, I ask that the question may now be taken, on the following order, which I have been directed to report from the Committee on Printing:

Ordered, That there be printed, for the use of the Senate, thirty-seven thousand five hundred additional copies of the agricultural portion of the Patent Office report, with the plates accompanying the same, two thousand five hundred of which shall be for the use of the Patent Office.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that will not be considered now. I move that the further consideration of the order be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

SURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back, with an amendment, the bill to provide for the surveys of the public lands in the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes. I give notice that I shall call up the bill for consideration at a very early day, as it is intended to establish a land system for that distant Territory, which is now suffering for the want of it.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, it was Ordered, That the documents relating to the claim of James Myer be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion by Mr. MORTON, it was Ordered, That the petition of Robert Joyner be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was Ordered, That the petition of Seneca G. Simmons, praying compensation for services as secretary to the commissioners for the Creek and Osage Indians, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was Ordered, That the petition of Seneca G. Simmons, relating to certain public money stolen from his possession, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill to establish additional land districts in the Territory of Minnesota was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REVISION OF REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the expenses of codifying and revising the revenue laws.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the joint resolution, with the amendment of the House thereto, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, was received by Mr. WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had approved and signed the following acts:

An act to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes; and

An act for the relief of George G. Bishop and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill from the Senate for the benefit of citizens and occupants of the town of Council Bluffs, in Iowa.

CADETS AT WEST POINT.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution from the House of Representatives, explanatory of the law regulating the number of cadets to be appointed to the Military Academy at West Point, have directed me to report it back without amendment, and to ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution as in committee of the whole.

It proposes to resolve that, whenever, by a rearrangement of the congressional districts in any State, more than one cadet shall be thrown into the same congressional district, there shall notwithstanding be appointed, in the manner now prescribed by law, one cadet for every other district from which there may be no cadet at the institution, to be entered at the commencement of its next regular session.

Mr. RUSK. I should like to understand this joint resolution, and I hope the honorable Senator will give us some explanation what it is intended to remedy.

Mr. SHIELDS. This is a joint resolution from the House, providing for giving cadets to those new congressional districts which have none under the present construction of the law. That is the object.

Mr. CASS. Does it increase the number of cadets?

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CASS. I will not argue the point, but I merely wish to say, that I have not been furnished with the slightest evidence to show that there is any necessity for this increase; and I think it is better that a congressional district should go without a cadet until it can be regularly supplied, rather than create an office which the public service does not need.

Mr. SHIELDS. I had hoped that we should have disposed of this resolution without discussion, so as to avoid the consumption of time; but I will state to the honorable Senator from Michigan what will be its operation: By the rearrangement of the congressional districts, two and sometimes three cadets have been thrown into one district. This has been occasioned by cutting off a new district from two or three old ones. The present law requires that the cadet should live in the district from which he is appointed. The effect is to leave many new districts at the present time without any cadet. This resolution is to enable the Department to fill up the cadets by having one from each new district. It does not add to the ultimate number of cadets, because when the term of these additional cadets shall expire, they will go out of course, and there can be only one new appointment from each district. Ultimately, then, the effect is, not to increase the number of cadets, but to put the new districts on the same footing with the old.

Mr. RUSK. I think the joint resolution covers more ground than the honorable Senator supposes, as he will see when he comes to examine it closely. It provides "that nothing in any act of Congress now contained shall be construed to deprive any congressional district in the United States of its right to a cadet at the Military Academy at West Point." That may be perfectly right; but then it goes on to say, "but that whenever, by a rearrangement of congressional districts in any State, more than one cadet shall be thrown into the same congressional district, notwithstanding said fact, there shall be appointed, in the manner now prescribed by law, one cadet for every other district from which there may be no cadet at said institution, to be entered at the commencement of its next regular session."

Now, sir, take, for instance, the case of the State where there are two congressional districts: "Whenever by rearrangement of the congressional districts in any State"—which can be, and is always, done by act of the Legislature of the State—"more than one cadet shall be thrown into the same congressional district," there is to be, notwithstanding this fact, a cadet for the other district. Then, whenever the Legislature of a State in which there are two congressional districts rearranges those districts in such a way that both the cadets who have been appointed are thrown into the same district, a new cadet is authorized to be appointed from the other district; and thus a State with two Representatives in the other House would have three cadets at West Point.

Mr. GWIN. That difficulty cannot arise, because they are rearranged but once in every ten years, under the census as then taken.

Mr. RUSK. Oh, no! The Legislatures of the States oftentimes make a rearrangement.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the resolution lie upon the table; and I hope in making that motion I shall not be misunderstood. I will call it up to-morrow; but I desire now to have the deficiency bill considered.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope not. I think there will be no—

The PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. SHIELDS. Therefore I ask the honorable Senator to withdraw it. I have no special anxiety for this bill as to whether it passes or not. I desire, however, to put it in such a form as to obviate the objections presented.

Mr. GWIN. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. SHIELDS. I want to let the resolution pass over for the present, in order to make it so clear that every Senator may understand it.

Mr. GWIN. Very well; let it be postponed.

The further consideration of the joint resolution was then postponed until to-morrow.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

On the motion of Mr. GWIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1854, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. BAYARD, to insert in the following amendment reported from the Committee on Finance—

"SEC. —. And be it further enacted, That before any payment shall hereafter be made to any invalid pensioner, whose name shall have been upon the pension list two years, he shall produce to the agent for paying pensions to whom he shall apply for payment the affidavit of two surgeons or physicians, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, stating, from personal examination, the continuance of the disability, describing it, for which the pension was originally granted, and the date of such disability at the time of making such affidavit; and every two years after the date of such affidavit he shall, before receiving any further payment, produce to said agent a similar affidavit; and if in said affidavit the disability shall be stated at a rate below that for which the pension was originally granted, he shall only be paid at the rate stated in said affidavit.—said affidavit shall be filed by said agents, and carefully preserved, and copies thereof shall be transmitted, with the semi-annual returns of said agents, to the Commissioner of Pensions, who shall file them with the original papers of said pensioner, respectively: Provided, That when the pension shall have been originally granted by a special act of Congress, or for a total disability for the loss of limb, or other cause, which cannot be removed, either in whole or in part, the above affidavit shall not be required: And provided further, That if any person entitled to an invalid pension shall be in the possession of a salaried civil office, his pension shall be suspended during the time of his employment in said civil office."

—after the words "salaried civil office," the words "under the United States."

Mr. PEARCE. The Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS] yesterday seemed to me to misunderstand the spirit and character of the provision now under consideration, which was proposed by the Committee on Finance as an amendment to the bill. It was spoken of as a petty tinkering economy, and as a gross outrage upon the rights of a valuable class of our citizens. Now, sir, the word economy, I know, is scarcely a parliamentary word, and its use here may almost be considered absurd. The committee did not make that blunder, nor urge this amendment upon the score of economy. It may have occurred to some of them that some economical reform would result from it; but they were too wise to present that as a motive to a body so abundantly liberal as this. They submitted the amendment for the reason that it was required by the plain and obvious principles of the pension laws. A pension is given for a disability. It is the disability which is the sole reason for the bestowal of the pension; and can any one tell me why, when the disability ceases, the pension shall not cease too? If it does not, then the result contradicts the principle of the system, and you create a gross inequality, and do great injustice. If when one man, who has been pensioned because of a disability, and who recovers entirely from that disability, is to have his pension continued, how are you to do justice to him whose disability does continue? There is no equality, no equity in making the same allowance in the two cases. If the amendment should not be adopted, the man who recovers entirely from the wounds or diseases which at first entitled him to the pension, will be continued on the pension roll, though perfectly sound, and the man who is shot to pieces, who loses an arm or other limb, and becomes totally and forever incapacitated from any active employment, will receive no more than the man who is as sound as the day he entered the army. Certainly, sir, this is not equality. If you wish to be impartial between these two classes, you must stop the pension in the one case, or double it in the other.

The amendment proposes—what? Only to apply the principle which is already acted upon by the pension system. It is to stop the pension when the disability stops; and how can you do that except by having an examination? The Senator from Illinois spoke of the examination as a degrading thing, and of the affidavit as if it too were degrading. Why, sir, the pensioner has to make his affidavit, and submit to an examination, before he can get a pension originally; and is it more degrading to go through the same ceremony again, when he desires the continuance of that pension, than it was when he first made the application?

Then we are told that the amendment will put the pensioner to great expense every two years, because he may live a distance from the medical men who are to decide upon his case. No such thing is contemplated. The pensioner, wherever he may be, can easily resort to medical men, and obtain the necessary certificate. Doctors, I believe, are about as plenty as blackberries throughout the country; and I will say that I think the faculty almost everywhere are well educated, intelligent, and humane people, who are ever ready to perform, without pay, such offices as will be required by these pensioners. I will venture to say, that, so far from the honest pensioner being cheated out of his allowance, he will not have the slightest difficulty in obtaining, and that without fee, the evidence on which his pension is to be continued. It is a duty to humanity which the faculty cheerfully render.

There are two exceptions contained in the amendment of which some complaint is made. One is, that where the pension shall have been originally granted for a total disability for the loss of a limb, or where the party has sustained some other injury of so permanent a character as to be necessarily remediless, the affidavit shall not be required. It is obvious that, where that is the case, there is no necessity for the affidavit. Then there is another class in which these forms are dispensed with. I mean the class of pensioners provided for by special acts of Congress. The reason of that is, that those persons who receive pensions, under special acts of Congress, are not entitled to them under the general law, but are allowed because of special merits, real or supposed, which are not indicated in the law. They get them by application here, failing to get them at the proper Department, because they cannot bring their cases within any recognized principles. Nobody can say for what reason they were granted. You cannot go behind the act of Congress; and if you were to require the affidavit and certificate in such cases, it is very likely that you might require an impossibility, the party having received his pension from the special liberality of Congress, and without being able to show at any time a case within the principles of the general law. For that reason the affidavit is excepted in that case also.

Now, sir, the question before us is simply this: Whether we shall apply the principle which lies at the foundation of the pension system or not? The Senator from Illinois himself admits that there is a vast number of cases in which the pension is received, though without the sanction of the principle. Take, for example, one case which may be suggested, where parties were pensioned not for wounds, but for diseases. Many cases occurred during the late war with Mexico in which soldiers were prostrated by the dysentery or diarrhea, and obtained pensions accordingly. Now, these diseases are such as either kill, or are cured in a moderate time. They do not linger through a long life. The pensioner may have been rendered incapable by them of obtaining his livelihood at the time of application, and most probably by the time the two years roll around, he will be either no more, or will be cured of the disease. Every professional man, I apprehend, will admit that. But if the disease be removed, is it not proper that the pension should cease? and how can you ascertain whether the disability has ceased, unless you require the party to submit to an examination?

The Senator himself admits that we ought to strike at the root of the whole matter, and reform the entire system. But how can you reform it, except in this way? I defy you to produce any plan to reform the evil other than by a medical examination; and that is all that the amendment proposes. The other day I heard of the case of a man who applied for a post office—an office, one would suppose, which requires the use of a man's eyes. He was ascertained at the time he made the application to be actually in receipt of a pension for blindness, and yet in the full possession of all the faculty of vision required by the employment which he was seeking. Do you think a pension ought to be continued in that case? Yet it must be continued, unless you adopt some such provision as this. No, sir, this amendment is a gross outrage upon no one, though it will prevent many outrages upon the Treasury. It is not intended to subject the honest pensioner to any difficulty which can be avoided, but to discriminate his case from that of the man who draws his pension without the legal consideration. You should either adopt it or dispense with the principle altogether, and say that the pension shall continue without reference to the disability.

Now, in regard to the provision that the pension shall be suspended during the period that the pensioner is in the enjoyment of the emoluments of a "salaried civil office." This is the language of the amendment. The Senator from Illinois seems to suppose that that will strike from the roll every pensioner, throughout his State and other sections of the country, who may happen to be employed as postmaster of some little village, the receipts of which office amount to less than his pension. But the amendment does not touch such a case. That is not a "salaried civil office." A salary is a stated annual compensation for services. That is the meaning of it. It is not hypercritical to make that distinction; it is plain and obvious. A postmaster receives his pay in the way of commissions; and it is only in regard to the postmasters in the cities, where the commissions amount to larger sums than the law allows a postmaster to receive, and therefore fixes his compensation at less, that we could say it is in any sense a salaried office. It is very obvious that when they receive commissions merely to small amounts, they are not salaried civil officers, and therefore the amendment does not touch them. I do not know, indeed, that it will touch any of that numerous class of employees who may rather be considered laborers than salaried officers. For officers under the United States must be appointed either by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, or under some law vesting the appointment in the head of a Department. The language of the Constitution is:

"But the Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments."

Any other than those persons who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or by the courts, or heads of Departments, in virtue of some law vesting the appointment in them, are not officers in the sense of the Constitution, and therefore not officers in the sense of the law. I suppose, indeed, that all the class of employees whose appointment is made by the heads of the Bureaus and such other officers, would not come within the principle of this amendment. It will not, therefore, touch the classes of employees with small compensation. It might touch persons who receive $1,000 a year; and I think, myself, that a man who receives a salary of $1,000 a year ought not to be pensioned.

Now, sir, this principle has been applied to the Navy by the Navy pension bill of 1841, which contains the following section:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no officer, seaman, or marine, entitled to a pension from the Navy pension fund, who receives pay from the public Treasury, shall receive more from the said fund than is sufficient to make the whole amount received from the above-named sources equal to the pay fixed by law for the grade to which the officer, seaman, or marine may belong as an officer in the services in which he may be engaged during the year, so that no officer shall receive pay at the same time both as a pensioner and an officer in the service."

In the construction of this provision it might be doubtful, perhaps, as to whether a seaman or marine could have a pension while in the service; but the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER,] when Secretary of the Navy, gave the construction to the law that he could not. I have his decision here:

"The case of seamen and marines seems to present peculiar difficulties, and I regret the hard consequences to them of the decision I have been compelled to form. They cannot, when in service, receive more than their pay, because there is no discrimination by law between their compensation when on duty and when unemployed. Hence it seems to follow that no seaman or marine, while in the service and receiving pay, can receive any payment at all on account of a pension."

Mr. SHIELDS. That is the rule already existing in the Army. A man cannot draw a pension and draw pay in the Army at the same time.

Mr. PEARCE. Very well; that only strengthens the argument. The amendment does not propose to make any change in that regard. It is to carry the principle a little further, and apply to persons occupying civil offices the same rule which is already applied to those in the military service. I cannot, for the life of me, see what reason there is why any distinction should be attempted to be set up between the two, in favor of the civil employee. If there is any reason for a distinction, it should exempt the officer, while engaged in the military or naval service, from its operation; because, I presume, they are subject to more hardships while engaged on duty in military and naval service than those who hold civil office.

These are the whole objects of the amendment. It does not propose to inflict any hardship or any act of degradation upon the pensioners. It is to apply a principle; and if you do not apply it, you had better abolish the pension system, or adopt some new principle. If you leave matters as they are, you indirectly sanction the drawing of pensions to which the parties are not entitled upon a principle of indemnity.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am not dealing with the intention of the amendment. I am trying to deal with the amendment as it stands; and if the honorable Senator from Maryland, and the honorable Senator from Virginia, will give me their attention, I think I can show them why it is an improper amendment.

In the first place, an invalid soldier who has been discharged cannot obtain any pension unless he gets a certificate of two surgeons as to the nature of the disability, the time when the disability occurred, the place where it occurred, and that it occurred in the line of his duty, and, I will repeat, also, the nature and amount of the disability. When that is certified he can obtain his pension. Now, the amendment is intended, honorable Senators say, to relieve the pension system of frauds. I want to show to every man who will give me his attention on the subject, that it will not operate as the honorable Senators believe it will. That is my objection. It will disappoint the Senators in its operation, and I will show you why. It provides that every two years the invalid pensioner shall have a reexamination of his condition by two surgeons. The two surgeons must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. In the first place, then, the Secretary of the Interior approves of the two surgeons, and the invalid pensioner, no matter where he lives in a State, has to go to those two surgeons who are approved by the Secretary of the Interior, to have himself examined. The pensioner receives eight dollars a month. Now, I want the attention of Senators to show the working of this provision.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator will allow me, I think I can explain that matter. He supposes that the provision requires that the Secretary of the Interior shall approve of the surgeons before the examination. Now, I suppose there will be some departmental regulation on the subject—perhaps, that the surgeons shall be approved by the agent who pays the pension.

Mr. SHIELDS. Oh, no; by the Secretary of the Interior. The surgeons must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, I tell the honorable Senator, either beforehand or otherwise.

Mr. HUNTER. They will be approved upon some rule to be established by him. Suppose he establishes the rule that the pension agent who pays the pensioner shall decide whether they are sufficient, and whether the examination made by them is sufficient, that would come under the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am not proceeding on any supposition. I am taking the amendment as it now stands.

Mr. RUSK. If the honorable Senator will allow me, I think I can compromise the difficulty between the two Senators, and save time.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will continue a few words further, and then I shall have done. The two surgeons have to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior—it matters not whether beforehand or afterwards. Their certificates will be of no avail unless the Secretary of the Interior approves them. What are they to certify? I ask honorable Senators to turn to the amendment and see what it is. They are to certify on oath—make an affidavit—of the continuance of the disability. Whatever the disability was, they are to certify that it still continues. Still further, they are to describe it, and they are to certify the date of the disability. I only want to show the nature of the amendment. How can two surgeons, now living, say in the State of Virginia, to whom an invalid pensioner applies, certify to the date of a disability which occurred on the field of Buena Vista? Who can tell the date on which, or the place where, it occurred? Why, sir, the man who commanded the soldier at the time—not the surgeon, but his captain, or colonel, or whoever commanded him at the time. Yet the two surgeons, by this amendment, are not only to certify the condition of his body at the particular time when they examine him, but they are to say upon oath how, and where, and at what time the disability arose. I only mention this to show that this thing has not been considered properly. "The date of such disability at the time of making such affidavit." These surgeons are to make the affidavit, or the poor fellow cannot get a pension. I know how it will be. If they do not bring his case within the very letter of the law the pension will be rejected. And let me say one thing, which every lawyer understands: that in proportion as you multiply regulations and rules, in such proportion do you touch the honest and simple-minded, and let rogues go through. Do you not agree with me?

A SENATOR. Exactly.

Mr. SHIELDS. I tell you further, that the difficulty about this Bureau has been that they have piled up regulations to an enormous height, so that no lawyer or layman, if you may use the word, can comprehend them; and as for the poor soldier comprehending them, the thing is impossible. If he gets anything he has to go to an agent who makes it his profession. That agent must get up the affidavit, and then he gets the pension. I have gotten many of these pensions, and that is the reason I understand this; for I have to be a general agent for the poor pensioners who have nothing in the world to depend upon, and I never charge them anything. Go down to my room, and you will find them there every day, and I am more, oftentimes, at that business than at anything else. I take a pride in doing it. I feel it to be my duty. I see how they are treated, and cheated, and abused; and I go to the Bureau and preach, and pray; and try to get something out of them; and I find, as I stated before, that a poor fellow, who is now blind, and who was discharged because he was blind, cannot get a pension, because two surgeons cannot certify when he became blind, for he was five years getting blind; or whether he got blind in the line of his duty, though he was five years getting blind, and was ten years in the Army. I mention this to show you how these things are conducted. I understand them, I think.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question on this subject, and in connection with this point?

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. It depends very much upon the character of the disability. Was it disease or were they wounds?

Mr. SHIELDS. To what does the Senator allude?

Mr. BUTLER. The disability of the invalid you mention. Does it arise from a temporary disease or a permanent disability?

Mr. SHIELDS. It was blindness, arising from what they call disease, of course.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to know what has been the rule on the subject. Have pensions been refused to those who have come from the Mexican war with wasting diseases of which many died, and, poor fellows, many of them without help? Do those who come home with such wasting diseases not receive a pension?

Mr. SHIELDS. They get pensions for those diseases.

Mr. BUTLER. And if they continue, I think they ought to get them. But I can only say, in connection with that matter, that I never heard of an application being rejected.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have no doubt the honorable Senator states the truth; but I will give a reason for that. The gallant regiment which left the honorable Senator's State eleven hundred strong, came back with only two hundred and fifty alive.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. And those who returned of course could stand anything either in battle or anywhere else.

Mr. BUTLER. Why, the colonel was very nearly dead for two years.

Mr. SHIELDS. But I am only now pointing out the defects of this amendment. The surgeons are required to make an affidavit, the same affidavit that they would make if they had been on the battle-field—a thing which it is impossible for them to do—or the poor fellow cannot get a pension.

But I now go on to the next point on which my honorable friend from Maryland has touched. I certainly would not take any more interest in this matter than any other Senator, if I did not feel convinced that it will operate, not as the Senators intend, but as a hardship upon the pensioners. Perhaps I used hard expressions yesterday. I spoke about the "economy" of this thing. Sir, I think it is this: It is economizing by taking away that little paltry pittance which is now allowed to the poor, broken-down soldiers, which only amounts to eight dollars a month at best. It does not touch the large pensioners at all. Not one of them—generals or colonels—will be stricken off the list, but it will only be the poor, miserable soldiers who get eight dollars a month. Now, sir, I tell you it will take their whole pay for two years to pay the expenses of the proceeding which you prescribe shall be performed. Sometimes the agents ask $100 for getting a man a pension. And now you are going to declare that he shall go through this complicated proceeding of getting two surgeons to make such certificates, and make them on oath. They must swear as to his present condition, that he is still disabled, how much he is disabled, where the disability arose, how it arose, and the date of such disability.

Mr. BAYARD. I suggest to the Senator that he does not give the proper construction to the clause "the date of such disability at the time of making such affidavit." I should think that that applied, not to the time when the disability commenced, but to the date of the examination when it was ascertained that the disability continued to exist.

Mr. STUART. No doubt of it.

Mr. BAYARD. And then the amendment does not say that the surgeons shall certify how the disability arose.

Mr. SHIELDS. It is like the rest of the amendment, all liable to mistake. It further says:

"And every two years after the date of such affidavit, he shall, before receiving any further payment, produce to said agent a similar affidavit, and if in said affidavit the disability shall be stated at a rate below that for which the pension was originally granted, he shall be paid at the rate stated in said affidavit."

That is, if he receives eight dollars a month now, and it is certified that his disability is not a total one, the amount will be reduced and cut down to six, or five, or four dollars. That is the kind of economy I spoke of. It is economizing upon small matters, and economizing off poor creatures who cannot afford it. But I will go to another provision:

"That when the pension shall have been originally granted by a special act of Congress."

I want the honorable Senator's attention to this, for it seems that a good many mistakes are made here. Here is an exception. If the pension is granted by a special act of Congress, of course the examination fails, and I agree that it ought to do so, but we should make the rule equal. Those who receive such a pension ought to be examined by this body every two years, if you would carry out the rule and make it general. I believe there are as many fraudulent pensions granted by Congress as by the Bureau. But, under the amendment, you cannot touch them. It leaves them out. "Or for a total disability for the loss of a limb." That is right enough. If a man loses a limb there is no chance that the limb will grow on again. It will be of no use to examine on that point. That would be all right if it stopped there; but it says, "for total disability for the loss of a limb, or other cause;" that is, for any other cause!

I should like to know if any other cause does not cover every case; and whether this part of the amendment in reality does not destroy the first part? First, it is said the surgeons are to examine pensioners, and ascertain whether their case is one of total disability; then comes in the proviso, which says they are not to examine those who have lost a limb, or who are totally disabled from any other cause. Can the honorable Senator from Virginia make sense of that? Can he show how the exception and the rule agree? I do not know that I am understood, but it seems a strange amendment. It provides, first, for examining all the invalid pensioners in the United States, to ascertain whether the total disability continues or not; and then it goes on and excepts out of that provision men who have lost a limb, or who have been totally disabled from any other cause. The Senator shakes his head; but that is the language of the amendment. I do not know what construction may be put upon it, for it will be likely to receive a great many constructions.

"The loss of a limb or other cause which cannot be removed, either in whole or in part." Who is to judge whether the cause cannot be removed? They are not to be examined when the cause is such that it cannot be removed, either in whole or in part. They are not, in such cases, to go to the surgeons at all. How is the pensioner to know whether he is included in that? Who is to tell him? How is he to tell whether the disability can be removed or not? We know that the loss of a limb, or anything of that kind, cannot be removed; but it includes other disabilities from other causes. There is one disease which was very common in those who came through the campaign in Mexico. It comes on one month, when the man will be lying in his bed, hardly able to rise, and then the next month he may be going about, as strong as any of us. The surgeon comes to that man and finds him at the time the disease has left him, for it is an occasional disease, and he certifies that he is not disabled, and of course that the pension should cease. The next day he is down with the disease again. How are we to provide for that case?

My honorable friend from Maryland says the latter part of the amendment is a very fine thing, and that it is very right that a man who has a pension ought not, while in the receipt of the pension, to hold an office of any importance. I put a case to that Senator: A man has lost his arm—I know of such a case, and I give it as an example—he has got a little office. I do not say it is worth $1,200 a year. He can perform the duties of that office quite as well as if he had two arms. He has a little pension of $150 a year. How is he put on a footing of equality with others, when you take away that pension? He has to pay a servant. He has to pay to be helped at his meals and to bed. What does he get the pension for? To make up for the loss of his arm, which he has incurred in the cause of his country. He has suffered the loss of his arm, and he receives the pension of $150 a year for that. That amount is not sufficient for his support; and yet you are asked to take that away from him, because he is able to hold a little, paltry office. He has to depend upon another to help him in all the necessary duties of life, and that is what the pension is given him for. Will you take it from him?

I take it that such a thing has never been attempted before: It is wrong. If you confer these pensions upon persons for performing services for the country, and for the injuries which they have received in performing these services, in God's name let them keep the pension. If others have got their pensions fraudulently, deprive them of them, but do not cut off the poor, old pensioners of the country. Do not compel them every two years to gather up before surgeons, to get certificates and affidavits from them as to their disability; do not compel them to go through all the formality they had originally to adopt to get the pension.

Sir, I repeat what I started with, and I repeat it from a knowledge of this system: that when you bring up these poor, old pensioners, and make them get these certificates, you will see that the honest men on the roll will be cut off and the rogues will get through. That is what we always find. When you make complicated regulations of any kind, all that these fellows have to do is to swear up to the regulations and they get through, and you only cut off the poor, simple, ignorant old soldier who does not understand the regulations, who fought for his country, who was injured in the service, and who finds himself, under the regulations, deprived of his pension, and he cannot tell how, for he never will find out the way in which it has been done.

Mr. STUART. I did not intend to enter into this question; but it seems to me that it has been, by the Senator from Illinois, somewhat unfairly presented to the Senate. I think his criticism upon the amendment is rather too finely drawn, and he has attacked some of the very best provisions which are contained in it. I suppose that the object of the amendment is twofold. The first is to ascertain periodically who are entitled, under the principles adopted by this Government, to receive pensions. The second is, as far as you can by this incidental process, to prevent frauds upon the Government. It will not be denied by anybody that when the cause for which a pension was granted has ceased the pension itself should cease. However much there may be of feeling, there is very little logic in an argument which does not admit this conclusion.

Now, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the disability continues, the Pension Bureau, with the sanction of the Department of the Interior, has submitted this general proposition: What are the means proposed to be employed in order to ascertain this? Why, sir, the provision which the Senator from Illinois takes to be the severest is clearly the best in the proposition. It is that which confines the certificates of surgeons to such men as shall meet the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. There is no question about the propriety of this, because it takes away from a dishonest man the power to get his relative, or somebody else who is interested, to make out for him a certificate which is not true, thereby defrauding and cheating the Government. It will be seen, by a single review of this statement, that it is one of the safest propositions in the amendment, for the Government, and for the bona fide pensioner, for I deny that it is an object for the honest pensioner of the country to have the law in such a condition that frauds can be perpetrated under it.

The modus operandi has been inquired into, and it has been asked how will this be done? The Secretary of the Interior undoubtedly will instruct the pension agents, who make these payments, to report to him the names of surgeons residing in the proper localities, who are men qualified in all respects to make this certificate. There will be no inconvenience growing out of it. The pensioner will not have to travel any further, perhaps, in order to procure the certificate than he has to go in his ordinary business every week. But there will be a certainty about it. You will have men of known character, and of acknowledged qualifications, to make the certificate. To what will they certify? They are to certify simply that the disability for which the pension was claimed, and upon which it was originally granted, still continues a disability. If it does not, then the very ground on which the pension was granted in the first place has ceased to exist, and the pension ought to cease also.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to say a few words on this point incidentally. The Senators who have argued the question against the adoption of this amendment have all of them yielded to the suggestion that great frauds are perpetrated. They acknowledge the necessity of adopting some means to prevent them in future. Let us inquire how this is to be done? If we cannot adopt the suggestions which emanate from the Department having the subject in charge, how shall we ever get at any remedy? Are we to say that this is a measure which will amount to nothing, and which we will vote against, while at the same time we will not suggest anything as a substitute for it? Shall we undertake to say that we understand this matter better than the Secretary of the Interior, that we will put no plan in operation for preventing these frauds, but that we will simply sit here and vote down every suggestion that comes from the Department? I have not been able to satisfy myself that that course would be very wise. I prefer, so far as I can do so properly, to aid the several Departments of this Government in such measures as they see fit to suggest for the prevention of the vast frauds which are being committed upon the Treasury of the country.

Sir, it is almost becoming a trade to plunder the Government. It is known that organizations are got up, many of them emanating from this city, which are as complete as the organization of the Navy, or of the Army, ramifying all through the country, for the purpose of plundering the public Treasury. Knowing these things, I avow my willingness, at any and all times, when any one of the Departments of this Government shall suggest a remedy, to try it, and see what it will do. And I cannot but think that the remedy suggested in this case will turn out to be a very effective one.

If it had no other effect than that which is incident to the mutations of office, the change of the justices and others who are to take the affidavits, who go out of office every three or four years, furnishes one means of detection; because, although you might find a dishonest man who would connive at the taking of a wrong affidavit to-day, he might be out of office next year, and an honest man be put in his place.

I am not desirous of detaining the Senate upon this question. I rose only to answer briefly some of the suggestions which have been made on the other side. Before I take my seat, however, I wish to say, that I do not like the last clause of this amendment, and I shall vote at the proper time for a proposition to strike it out; though, I confess, it would be very much improved by the adoption of the amendments suggested by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] and the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.] My reason is this: the cases which would occur under it, in any event, are very few indeed, where a man receiving a pension would hold a salaried office, within the meaning of the amendment. Generally, I am willing to say, that if a man who has served his country has been so fortunate as to get an office anywhere he should have it, and have his pension too, so long as his disability lasts. I prefer, therefore, that that portion of the amendment should be stricken out; but in respect to the residue of the amendment, without detaining the Senate further than I have already done, to point out how it may occur, I think I can say that there are in it elements which will save the Treasury a very large amount of money; and, what is of equal importance, it will save something in regard to the morals of this country. The loss of the money is much the smaller question. In my judgment, if it prevents frauds and perjury it will do much more to benefit the lasting stability of this country.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I am anxious to get on with the bill, and I shall only say what I believe it is necessary to say for the purpose of explaining this amendment. I confess the opposition to it has somewhat surprised me, for it seemed to me to be so obviously a remedy suggested by the Department to prevent frauds, which I am sure every Senator would desire to prevent, that I had supposed no one would oppose it. I thought some might suggest amendments, and I have heard amendments suggested which I believe to be proper, and which I am willing to accede to; but I imagined that I should have the assistance of the whole Senate in maturing the amendment in some shape which would be acceptable to them, and would answer the purpose designed.

Of the fact of the existence of great frauds there can be no sort of doubt. We are informed, by the Secretary of the Interior, that they exist, and the Senator from Illinois says he believes there have been great frauds. Within a very few moments, I have received from the Pension Office a statement which will show that there are matters which deserve the attention of the Senate, and that these frauds have reached a point which require our intervention. Here is the statement:

"The following is an extract from the official report of the agent sent by this office to Illinois to examine the persons who were upon the list of invalid pensions in that State, dated February 9, 1853:

"In the course of our tour we visited some twenty-five or thirty counties, and ascertained that a very large majority of the pensioners were stout, able-bodied men, suffering from no physical debility whatever. Out of seventy or eighty persons examined sixty-four were found not to be entitled to pensions. A large majority of these obtained their pensions fraudulently, having always been healthy men. As a general rule, they made no objection when told that they would be stricken from the roll, and seemed only solicitous to avoid a Government prosecution. The excuse they generally gave for practicing these frauds was, that they had been called on by certain agents, who assured them that, under existing laws of Congress, they were entitled. They generally protested their own innocence of all design to commit fraud. The result of the examinations made by Dr. Elkin and myself will be an annual saving to the Government of some $5,000 or $6,000."

Mr. President, I am informed, by the Commissioner of Pensions, that in many of these cases which were discovered, not merely in Illinois but elsewhere, which have been suspended, a protest has been entered that there was no authority to suspend. It is contended that this examination, which was instituted by the predecessor of the present Secretary of the Interior, was perhaps not instituted according to law; or that if it was so instituted, the Department had no right to act upon the evidence after it was furnished. Consequently, in some cases which are still suspended, an angry correspondence has been going on between the claimants themselves and the Pension Office.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator permit me to say a word? These same cases are now coming back to the office, and are being reinstated every day. I have had some of them reinstated myself. It is done, because it is said the examination was a defective one; and these persons complain of it as a great outrage. I acknowledge that there are fraudulent cases; but I say the Bureau is reinstating the cases referred to.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator is mistaken. I am informed by the Commissioner that very few have been reinstated, though some of them have been.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have had some reinstated myself.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator will find, when he comes to look at the matter, that a very small proportion of them has been reinstated. I have understood so from the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions. Now, sir, if these frauds exist, I ask if it is not the duty of the Government to provide some means for looking into them?

Mr. SHIELDS. I agree with the Senator; it is. Mr. HUNTER. This is not a question of money. It is not a question of economy... It is a question of public morals. It is due to the pension system itself. If you would save that system, you must purify it.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator permit me to point out what I think is the best mode of proceeding? Let the Department select one of its best surgeons, and send him to each State. Let him go round making these examinations, and not require every pensioner to go to two surgeons. Let the Government send a surgeon, or employ a surgeon in each State, and let him examine the pensioners, and report to the Department. Let the matter be thoroughly investigated; then we shall have the frauds before us.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I give some credit myself to the Department for understanding something of the best mode of transacting their business. As far as I can see, the mode which they propose is the best that could be devised. Why, sir, what means are so certain of ascertaining fraud as to examine the person of the invalid pensioner, to have him examined by those who are capable, by surgeons or physicians to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior? It does not follow that this provision is to be executed in the most onerous manner. Gentlemen imagine a mode in which the Secretary of the Interior is to execute it by which the pensioner is to be burdened. Are there not other modes in which it would operate as no improper burden upon the pensioner? And is it not to be presumed that the Secretary of the Interior will adopt such regulations as will make it work in the easiest and best possible manner for the pensioners themselves?

In point of fact, I believe, according to their own construction, gentlemen would require that the pension agent who lives in each State should decide on the credibility of the surgeons who are to make the examinations. This is the mode in which they think the law will be executed. If the object is a good one, and that be a better amendment, why does not the Senator from Illinois propose some provision by which he may make it work so as to get rid of the inconveniences which he apprehends? Why oppose the whole remedy which is suggested, and leave no means of preventing and checking these frauds? According to the construction put on the present law by some of those pensioners, it is maintained that the Secretary of the Interior has no right to withhold their pensions, although he may be convinced, on clear evidence, that they are not entitled to them. It is to do away with this difficulty, it is to make known to the pensioners, and those who get up those claims, that the eye of the Government is upon them; that there is danger, if they should commit frauds that they will be detected, that this provision is recommended.

But, sir, the Senator from Illinois says "no;" he thinks this will operate as an inconvenience to the poor pensioners who are really entitled, and that the cunning fellows who commit the frauds will get around it. The same argument would apply to the original examination. He might as well say that these cunning fellows can elude any safeguards which we may endeavor to throw around this system. Does it follow, therefore, that we are bound to throw none around it? If so, all you have to do is to let any man claim a pension, and give it to him without inquiry, and say it is useless to require investigation, because fraudulent men know how to get around any safeguards which you may impose. If, on the contrary, it be necessary to have any safeguards at all, we increase them by adding to the number of these examinations.

But, sir, it is said that the examination is likely to be burdensome to the pensioners. That is not the opinion of the Department, and I do not think it can be proved to be so on any sound construction of this provision itself. For what has he to do? He has now to make his affidavit annually in regard to his personal identity, in order to draw his pension from the pension agent. What will it cost him in addition to that to make the affidavit here prescribed? What will it cost him to procure the certificate of the physicians? I am told they rarely ever charge; I never heard an instance in which one charged in my country for these services. I am told that it is not a common thing for these to charge for them. I am informed, by the Commissioner of Pensions, that he has known but few instances where a charge has been made, and then it was but a dollar. He thinks that, by possibility, the whole charge of this reexamination of the pensioner could not be over five dollars. Now, can a pensioner complain when, for the protection of this system, we make him do something in order to prove title? In order that we may impose as little burden upon him as possible, I am willing to agree to the suggestion made by the Commissioner of Pensions himself—to strike out from the amendment that provision which requires that the examination shall be biennial. Let us provide for but one examination, and if the results of that do not satisfy us, we need not continue the system; but if its results prove to be wholesome we can continue it. I am willing to strike out that portion of it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will agree to do that, for I am as anxious to get rid of fraudulent cases as the honorable Senator, or the Bureau, because they are throwing discredit upon the whole system. But I will state what I think is a much better plan. I have examined the matter, and I have come to the conclusion that it would be better to authorize the Bureau to appoint one or two able surgeons in each State, and let them make the examination and send in their reports. I can show the Senate why this is so. As the honorable Senator proposes to amend the amendment, it will still stand as operating to repeat the same process by which the pensioner originally obtained his pension. The same course by which a fraudulent pension was originally obtained will be repeated. How is the pension obtained now? The man goes to two surgeons in his own neighborhood—they may be any kind of surgeons—they may be root doctors; and he gets their certificate and the member of Congress certifies that they are surgeons in full practice. Upon these certificates the pension is obtained. I only mention this to show the honorable Senator that this is but a repetition of the original examination, leaving open precisely the same door for fraud which existed in the first place. I suggest to him to accept the amendment which I now propose: to appoint one or two surgeons of approved ability in each State. Let them make a thorough personal examination, ascertain the circumstances, and report to the Bureau. This, then, will rid our system of all its evils. I will go for such a provision.

Mr. HUNTER. I think that, with the amendment which we have proposed, the section, as recommended by the Department, will probably reach the evil with more certainty. I think we had better commence in that way. I find that there is precedent for it. By the law of March 3, 1819, "regulating the payment to invalid pensioners," it is provided:

"That in all cases of application for the payment of pensions to invalids, under the several laws of Congress granting pensions to invalids, the affidavit of two surgeons or physicians, whose credibility as such shall be certified by the magistrate before whom the affidavit is made, stating the continuance of the disability for which the pension was originally granted, (describing it,) and the rate of such disability at the time of making the affidavit, shall accompany the application of the first payment which shall fall due after the fourth day of March next, and at the end of every two years thereafter; and if, in a case of a continued disability, it shall be stated at a rate below that for which the pension was originally granted, the applicant shall only be paid at the rate stated in the affidavit."

Now, sir, I am willing to agree to amendments which will authorize but one reexamination, leaving it to Congress to determine hereafter, on the results of the examination, whether or not they will continue it. As for the rest of the amendment, I think it had better be left as the Secretary proposes.

In regard to the addition of the last clause, we thought that, according to the principles which prevail in reference to military offices, there ought to be some such proviso in relation to civil offices. It seems to me there is no just rule, no good reason, for discriminating between the two cases. I said yesterday that I was willing to agree to the limitation proposed by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.] Or, if the Senate should object to that addition, in any form, I hope they will at least adopt so much of this section, with the amendment of which I have spoken, as was proposed by the Department itself. If it be the general sense of the Senate that we should strike out the provision requiring the reexamination to be every two years, I think we can unite on the amendment, and I hope the question will be taken on it without further debate.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, as I am obliged on this occasion, with great reluctance, to separate from my honorable and honored chairman, [Mr. HUNTER,] I wish to say, in a few words, why I feel compelled to do it. I am opposed to both parts of this amendment. The first part of it I am opposed to because I think it is a very immature and unsatisfactory attempt to make an improvement in the system of pensions, with a view to prevent frauds; but I am perfectly willing to go with my friend from Maryland, and my friend from Virginia, and any other gentleman, for the adoption of a wise and practicable system to prevent real frauds, and to make a just and proper discrimination between fair claimants and fraudulent pretenders. But I think it is evident, upon this discussion, that the amendment sent here, and proposed by the head of the Department, has not been maturely considered. So far as that is concerned, I see no reason why it should be absolutely necessary to pass this provision upon the deficiency bill. Let the communication of the Secretary of the Interior be referred to the Committee on Pensions, at the head of which is my friend who sits before me, [Mr. JONES, of Iowa.] Let that committee consider, with such aid as they can get from the Department and other sources, what is a proper provision, and let them report it in a separate bill. I am prepared to adopt whatever is wise, and just, and reasonable; but I am satisfied that the multiplication of certificates will not answer your purpose.

With regard to the mode in which these laws are administered in the Departments, I have not the same confidence which the honorable Senator from Virginia says he has. I impute no ill purposes; but I think a bad practice, originating in the subordinates of these Departments, is an idea that security is gained to the country in proportion as you multiply certificates and ceremonials. Now, I believe that the effect of such a multiplication of certificates and ceremonials is exactly the contrary. How do you defeat an attempt at a fraudulent claim by requiring a ceremonial? If a man sits down to fabricate a claim, he will get the law, and he will have all his memorials and papers in the most precise and accurate order for presentation. I do not believe, therefore, that that system will do anything good. But, at all events, I think this had better be carefully looked into instead of being now hurriedly passed.

Mr. President, it was long since said, as I have once before mentioned in the Senate, and, as I believe, truly said by Lord Mansfield, that the attempt made by the Legislature of England, by the statute of frauds, to guard against the proof of improper or fraudulent wills, by a minute and particular ceremonial, had, so far as that was concerned, proved abortive; but, as Lord Mansfield remarked, there had never been an instance of a forged or fraudulent will presented at Doctor's Commons that was not perfect in the ceremonial as of course it was to be expected it would be; and the only effect of the operation of the bill had been, in fact, to disappoint the real intentions of a testator because the formal requisites had not been complied with.

With regard to the second provision of this amendment, I cannot see any justice or propriety in it in any case. It is said that it prevails in the Army. It does; and it is most unjust and wrong that it should prevail there. I am willing to repeal it, but I am not willing to add another case of injustice.

Now, Mr. President, just let us look at this for one moment. Here are two officers in the Army employed in the same grade, rendering the same services, competent to render the same services, to which the law attaches a certain salary. One of them has lost a limb in battle. You stop his pension while he is in that service. I ask you if he is compensated upon a footing of equality with the officer who has not lost a limb? Why, certainly he is not. Does not every man know that his expenditures are necessarily increased, on account of the helplessness superinduced by the loss? Is $1,000 the same to the man who is possessed of all his limbs, and the man who has to hire an extra servant to put him to bed at night and to take him up in the morning, and separate into mouthfuls the food which he eats? Why, it is evident that it is not. If $1,000 is sufficient compensation for the duties of the office, why do you take away, in the supposed case, the $200 which the party received because he was disabled? It is in effect making a difference of $200 in the compensation of two men discharging the same duties in the same grade. If the man is so disabled that he cannot discharge the duties of the office, he ought no longer to hold it; but while he holds the office we presume that the compensation is justly due for the services which he renders. I think this provision with regard to the Army, and in regard to the Navy, is a blemish upon the legislation of Congress. The question for the repeal of that is not before us. I am ready to go for its repeal; but I am not willing to extend the provision further, because I cannot see that it is otherwise than a wrong and an injustice.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I know that it is desirable to take the vote on the amendment, and I am not disposed to detain the Senate by any observations upon it. I merely wish to give notice, that when the vote is taken on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware I shall move to strike out of the amendment of the committee the words, "and every two years after the date of such affidavit he shall, before receiving any further payment, produce to said agent a similar affidavit." The effect of this will be to obviate the difficulty of requiring the pensioner to make new proof every two years, but will still leave the pension office at liberty to apply the test which is recommended. I shall then move to strike out the last clause, so as to leave the section less objectionable, to my mind, than it now stands; though I shall not vote for it as thus amended.

Among other reasons why I cannot vote for it is the fact, that the two surgeons are to be "approved by the Secretary of the Interior." How is it possible that the Secretary of the Interior can know what two surgeons in each neighborhood throughout the whole United States are competent to investigate this matter? How can he know anything about them?

Sir, I only wish to add, that whenever a proposition shall be brought forward here to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, if he has a well-founded belief that any frauds are being committed, to institute an inquiry, and suspend fraudulent pensions, I am willing to go for it, let it be introduced whenever it may. But, with all due respect to the Secretary of the Interior, I do believe that the amendment which has been submitted by the committee is not calculated, in its nature, to effect the object desired by him, of ferreting out frauds; but I believe it trammels, and trammels unnecessarily, the poor pensioners. It is said, by the Senator from Virginia, that it will be a matter of convenience, or at least very little inconvenience, for a pensioner to secure the certificates of two surgeons approved by the Secretary of the Interior. How approved—in advance, or subsequently?

Mr. HUNTER. According to the regulations of the Department.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not wish to leave it to the Secretary of the Interior to make regulations. If you will leave it to the Secretaries to make regulations, they may strike from the pensioners all their rights; and this, too, under the idea that they are doing what is correct and proper. I speak from past experience—not of this Secretary, but of all others. I am willing to go for any law to effect the object intended by the Secretary, but for this provision I cannot go. It will, however, be much less objectionable to me if it be amended in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest that Senators had better let us vote upon the amendments, and make the proposition as perfect as its friends can make it.

Mr. CASS. I am inclined very much to favor the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi; and yet, if that does not prevail, I shall vote for the amendment of the Committee on Finance, when modified as the Senator from Virginia has suggested that he will agree to have it amended; that is, so as to provide for a single examination. I am willing to give full authority to the Secretary of the Interior to make the examinations as he pleases under the regulations to be prescribed by the Department. But, after all, it will be found that one practical difficulty (and it will occasion great differences among honest men) arises from the very nature of things, and that is the difficulty of tracing an existing disability back to an injury received in service. I know that, practically and personally, and I presume the honorable chairman of the Committee on Pensions knows, that it is the case nine times out of ten.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Certainly it is.

Mr. CASS. I will ask the Secretary to read a letter which I have received on this subject this morning, for, like my honorable friend from Illinois, there is hardly a mail which does not bring me applications for pensions, particularly connected with the war of 1812. The faster the years pass over us, the more the difficulty increases to trace an existing disability to causes arising out of an injury received in the service. When the war is freshly terminated there is little difficulty on that point. The officers, and soldiers, and companions are living, who can testify; but when years have passed by there is very great difficulty in proving this. Like the honorable Senator from Illinois, these applications occupy a great part of my time. I have received one this morning, which places the matter in a strong point of view, and I have received with it papers containing certificates as to the character of the injury received by the applicant, and the perfect belief of those who signed it, that his present disability arises from wounds received in the service, and yet he cannot get a pension. I ask the Secretary to read the letter.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

FLAGPODS, WASHINGTON COUNTY,
EAST TENNESSEE, March 15, 1854. }

DEAR SIR: Having recently learned that you was in the Senate of the United States, and you being all the officer, to my knowledge, that is living, I wish to drop a few lines, in order to try to get some information as to my service, and also as to a wound I received in service.

I am one John Martin, who enlisted in the year 1812, under one Cornel, who was a recruiting officer under Captain William Odear, and on arriving at headquarters, was transferred to one Captain William Bradford, and then being transferred to Captain James Hunter, and in the spring of 1813 we marched for Fort Stevenson. On or about the 1st August, Captain James Hunter's company, and a small detachment under Lieutenant Antney, was besieged by the British and the Indians, and then and there, while fighting, I received a wound over my right eye by a splinter off of a picket, which wound I have never recovered, having lost my eye, and am not able to do anything towards making a living. General Harrison was in command of the army at that time, but not present.

Believing that you learned the particulars of that engagement from Major Crohm, who was in command in that fort at that time, inasmuch as you took the command of the army immediately after General Harrison's resignation; and my time being out in a short time after you took command of the army, and soon after the close of the war, I became a resident of Tennessee; so I am, and have been, so far separated from any person with whom I served. I have never been enabled to secure any testimony that would secure me my pension; and for the last twenty years I have been lingering with great pain and disability of body, and I appeal to you, as my last resort, believing that you would grant me any aid in your power, in securing me the money due me from the United States. I will inclose a petition to you that was prepared by the Hon. Mr. Campbell, from this congressional district, whose honorable life we have to deplore, who lost his life before he took his seat. You will please do me the kindness to study the case, and do the best you can, as this is my last resort. So I will close by saying I still remain, your friend, &c.,

JOHN MARTIN.

To the Hon. General Cass.

Mr. CASS. This affirms what I stated, that there is extreme difficulty in this matter. For my own part, I think the Pension Office, (with all the securities which can be furnished, and they ought to be very great,) if they can, should be very liberal in the examination of the evidence connected with claims so manifestly just.

Mr. PEITIT. I do not rise to detain the Senate by arguing this question. If I wanted to reargue it I should only have to present a new edition of the speeches of the Senator from California and the Senator from Illinois; but I wish to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Finance the propriety of striking out the whole of this provision, and inserting in lieu of it a provision in substance the same as this:

"That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall have cause to believe that any pension has been procured by fraud, he shall have full power to inquire into the same, by such means as he shall adopt, and after such inquiry and examination to suspend the payment of such pensions temporarily or finally."

I wish to provide, in short, that he may strike from the list any person whom he ascertains, after full examination by the surgeons whom he may appoint and send out, or otherwise, is not entitled to it. I propose to leave him full latitude to inquire into these frauds in such manner, and by such means, as he shall adopt; and if he ascertains that a pension has been fraudulently procured, let him have the power to strike the pensioner from the roll. That he may do during the examination temporarily, and let him remove that temporary injunction if he finds that he was in error, and that the pension was properly granted, or let him finally strike from the roll any pensioner whose pension was fraudulently obtained.

While I am up, I will take occasion to say a few other words. I do not know by what right or what legitimacy of reasoning the last three provisions proposed by the committee have found their way into this deficiency bill. One provides for authenticating records and papers in the Department of the Interior; another for issuing and recording commissions under that Department. It is true it is not very important whether they should be here or elsewhere, but they certainly do not belong legitimately to a deficiency bill.

As to the last provision, the one under immediate consideration, allow me to say, I entirely agree with the Senator from Illinois, and the Senator from North Carolina; who have told you, that in the proportion in which you provide for affidavits, certificates, and formulae, you superinduce frauds; and that in the proportion that you require affidavits and swearing you increase the dangers, and multiply, in fact, the number of perjuries which are committed. You will not, therefore, in my judgment, with the increase of formulae, and certificates, and papers, and oaths, improve the morals of the country. But, sir, it is said that the two objects of this measure are—first, to relieve the Treasury from the onerous draft of paying pensions which have been fraudulently granted; and, secondly, to save the morals of the country.

While I grant it is possible this provision may have a tendency to prevent the first, it would, in my judgment, tend to diminish the latter; that is, it will increase immorality, perjury, and false certifying. I think that will necessarily follow on the adoption of this measure.

Sir, it will be the wily and artful who will be getting up these papers, and through sham pretenses be getting their pensions continued; while the really meritorious, honest, but poverty-stricken pensioners will shrink back from the continued and repeated gaze of the public, which you require before he can renew his certificate and renew his application on the bounty, or the generosity, or justice of his country for services rendered. I know that many a man, from the delicacy of his feelings, would rather suffer obscure poverty from being unable to work, in consequence of wounds which he had received in his country's defense, than continue to make this application in open gaze, year after year, as is provided for here; while he who would in the first place seek fraudulently to procure a pension would not hesitate to make the application.

There is another view of this matter: I am satisfied, that as you increase the difficulties of getting cases through the Departments the greater number will be thrown upon Congress. You require a man to travel perhaps the whole length of the State, from his residence to the pension agency, with his old pension certificate; he goes with the expectation that he will be paid as usual; but, on exhibiting it, he is told that there has been a new law, and that he must have a new certificate. What is he to do? He has to return home to his physicians again, go to the neighborhood of his residence, get certificates made out there, and return, and perhaps fearing that after all it will be a failure, he will abandon it, and give up his case. He will say, that if the doors are thus locked and barred to his country's justice and liberality, he will forego his application entirely. But it will not be so with the artful and the wily; their papers will be made out with the same ease and facility as their original applications for pensions.

Thus you will force upon the pensioners the necessity of making out their papers again, and they will be made out with the same difficulty, and will be attended with the same failures, which accompany original applications for pensions. It seems to me, from my experience, that there have been, I will say, five cases rejected where the claimants ought to have been pensioned to one fraudulent pension which has been settled upon the Treasury. The plainer and better a case is, the harder, it seems to be, to get it through the Department. Well, sir, failures will happen in these cases; and hereafter, when this provision shall have been for a few years in operation, you will find that the Committees on Pensions of the two Houses of Congress will be overloaded with petitions praying that the petitioners may be admitted to their pensions, followed with innumerable affidavits showing that by some slip or other they were not able to comply with this regulation, but that their right to the pension still exists. You will be passing special laws for the cases which will be rejected under this provision. That will be precisely the result of it. You will, therefore, be multiplying the immorality, multiplying the difficulties of getting pension, and the chances of fraud, and multiplying immeasurably the business of the Pension Committees here.

But, sir, as to the details of this provision: I cannot see, with the honorable Senator from Virginia, how it is that these men are to be examined in any practicable way by physicians or surgeons, to be "approved;" that is, appointed or selected by the Secretary of the Interior. In many of the counties all over the country, you will find from one to a dozen pensioners, located in different sections in each county, living entirely in obscurity upon the little pittance which the Government gives them; living, perhaps, with some kind friend, some son or daughter, or nephew, or niece, and taken care of in that condition. You heap upon them the necessity of going to hunt up physicians, for the physicians are not to hunt them up. How is the Secretary of the Interior to select these physicians in every county? If you say he shall appoint only two in a State, then you compel the pensioners in the large States of the West to travel to the seat of government, or some other given locality, where the physicians are located, and you impose upon them a burden for which their pensions will not compensate them.

How, then, will the Secretary of the Interior appoint these physicians in each neighborhood? How will he know them? How long will they remain there? As you open new territory further West, as Nebraska and Kansas shall be opened to settlement, as I trust they will at an early day, our people will emigrate. A physician who may to-day be located in one county, and be authorized to give these certificates, may be found next year in a new locality. And the poor old pensioner will be thrown upon the mercy of his neighbors, and have none of the benefits of that provision which the Government designed for him.

The section, in my judgment, is every way wrong. It is, I will say without disrespect, as I think, badly drawn, to express even the object of the committee; but if it were drawn ever so well the substance of it would work badly from beginning to end. I shall, therefore, vote against the whole of it. I shall at least ask the Senate to give me the yeas and nays upon it, that we may see how we stand. But, in all frankness, I suggest the amendment which I propose as a substitute; I am willing that that shall be adopted. It will vest in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior ample power to inquire into all the fraudulent cases, and to strike them from the roll, either temporarily or entirely. This is the Senator from Virginia's main object—to purge this system from its frauds and wrongs. That I certainly will do as readily as he.

The amendment of Mr. BAYARD to the amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the question recurred on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. ADAMS. I move further to amend the amendment, by striking out the words which I have suggested:

"And every two years after the date of such affidavit he shall, before receiving any further payment, produce to said agent a similar affidavit."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I now move to strike out the last proviso of the amendment, in these words:

"And provided further, That if any person entitled to an invalid pension shall be in the possession of a salaried civil office of the United States his pension shall be suspended during the time of his employment in said civil office."

Mr. HAMLIN. Before the proviso is stricken out I move to amend the clause by inserting after the words "salaried civil office of the United States" the words "exceeding $1,200 per annum."

Mr. ADAMS. Will not that have to be voted on as an original proposition? Mine is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think the question must be first put on the amendment which I have proposed, because if the whole clause shall be stricken out it cannot be afterwards amended; but if it is inserted it may be an inducement to the Senate not to strike out the clause as thus amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foor in the chair.) The Chair is of opinion that the question must first be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Maine. The clause may be regarded as an independent section, and may be perfected before the question is taken on striking it out.* The Chair will entertain the proposition offered by the Senator from Maine, upon that ground. The question is upon agreeing to his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN's amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, to strike out the last proviso of the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I desire to offer an amendment to that clause, so that the amendment shall apply to persons entitled to invalid pensions of more than twenty dollars a month. I do not wish to have it apply to those who receive small amounts from the Government.

Several SENATORS. We will strike out the whole clause.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. If the whole clause can be stricken out I have no objection, for I am opposed to the whole provision; but if it is to be agreed to I wish to have it amended in that particular.

The amendment of Mr. JONES, of Iowa, to the amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the question recurred upon the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. MASON. I understood the chairman of the Committee on Finance to say, that he should ask only for an hour to-day for the consideration of this bill. He has now had an hour and a half. If it is understood that the Senate will go through with this bill to-day I will forbear making the motion which I rose to make, and which the Senate understand; but unless we can have that understanding I feel called upon to make the motion.

Mr. HUNTER. We will endeavor to get through. I am not authorized to pledge anybody, but I hope we shall get through with the bill to-day.

Mr. MASON. I move that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until to-morrow, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope not. I hope we shall go on with this bill.

Mr. MASON called for the yeas and nays on his motion, and they were ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to suggest that we could perhaps save time and put forward the Executive business referred to if we go on with this bill to-day. We are now beginning to vote; and I think we can get through with it if we go on.

Mr. MASON. If the Senate determine not to postpone the measure with a view of going into Executive session I shall understand it to be the sense of the Senate (and I shall cheerfully acquiesce) that they will go through with this bill to-day, take what time it may.

Mr. SHIELDS. I agree with the chairman of the Committee on Finance that we should save time by going through with the bill now.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the motion to postpone, resulted—yeas 18, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bayard, Bell, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Mason, Morton, Norris, Pratt, Rusk, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, Weller, and Williams—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Cass, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Everett, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pearce, Pettit, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, and Wright—24.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to move further to amend the amendment of the Committee on Finance by inserting, in lieu of the words which have been stricken out on motion by the Senator from Mississippi, "blank forms of which shall be furnished by the Commissioner of Pensions to the agents for paying pensions for the use of the pensioners." The object of this is clear. The Department, I believe, always furnishes printed blank forms, to enable the pensioners to supply themselves with them, and this amendment will require the Department to furnish the forms for these certificates to the agents for paying pensions in the several States, in order that the pensioners may be supplied with them without additional expense.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. I intend to offer a substitute for the entire section, but I move first to strike out the words "approved by the Secretary of the Interior," as applied to the physicians and surgeons who are to make these affidavits. The utter impracticability of any such measure seems to me to be at once apparent.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope those words will not be stricken out. To strike them out would emasculate the section, and entirely destroy one of its great objects. I thought that perhaps the Senator from Indiana might desire to substitute a provision that the physician should be approved by the pension agents in the several States, or by some other persons. If he desires that, I shall be willing to modify the amendment of the committee so as to secure this provision, which would enable us to have the proper persons to make the affidavits.

Mr. PETTIT. The section now reads:

"That before any payment shall hereafter be made to any invalid pensioner, whose name shall have been upon the pension list for two years, he shall produce to the agent for paying pensions to whom he shall apply for payment the affidavit of two surgeons or physicians."

It seems to me that that is a sufficient guarantee and security, without saying, "approved by the Secretary of the Interior." It will be an utter impracticability to carry out that latter provision.

Mr. HUNTER. Suppose it were to read, "approved by the pension agent." How would that satisfy the honorable Senator?

Mr. PETTIT. I should have to object to that. In my State there are three pension agents on the Ohio river. The State is three hundred miles long, and the late examination shows that above half of the pensioners live north of the middle of the State. Hence they would have to come an immense distance to the pension agent to approve of the physicians. It would annoy them to come here, or go there, or elsewhere. It seems to me that the certificate and the affidavit of two physicians will be sufficient.

Mr. HUNTER. My idea is, that the Secretary of the Interior will prescribe regulations which will secure the certificates to be given by proper persons. He will prescribe the regulations; and I would therefore prefer that the amendment should be in its present form. I would be willing, though, if that would accommodate and satisfy the Senator who proposes this, to agree that the pension agent should approve of them; but there must be authority on this point vested somewhere. Some reliable person must exercise some sort of supervision with regard to the men who are to certify as to the disability.

Mr. PETTIT. I ask the Senator how he understands this language? Must these physicians be named and approved beforehand, or will it do to have them approved by the pension agent or Secretary of the Interior, after they have made the affidavit?

Mr. HUNTER. I do not understand that they are to be approved beforehand; but they are to be approved according to some regulation. I have no doubt that the Secretary of the Interior will direct the pension agent to approve them upon some certain criterion, some certain evidence. The purpose of the amendment is to exclude the certificates of physicians who are incompetent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana to the amendment, to strike out the words "approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. The existing law requires that the surgeons who certify, in the first place, to put these men upon the pension roll, shall have their character as surgeons certified to the Department before the pension can be obtained. That is the law now.

Mr. HUNTER. Then why object to it now? Mr. JONES, of Iowa. A certificate must be given as to their character as surgeons by a member of Congress, or a judge of a court of record. That certificate is necessary before the pension can be obtained.

Mr. PETTIT. Let the amendment say "two reputable surgeons."

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. That is the law now.

Mr. PRATT. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana, that possibly his view, as well as that of the Senator from Virginia, may be met by substituting in the clause which he proposes to strike out, for the words "approved by" the words "satisfactory to;" so that that part of the amendment will read "the affidavit of two surgeons or physicians satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior." That will necessarily imply that the satisfaction is to be subsequent to the affidavits.

Mr. PETTIT. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, to strike out the words "approved by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. PETTIT. I accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then is on the amendment as modified to the amendment of the committee, to strike out "approved by" and insert "satisfactory to."

Mr. BAYARD. The object of the amendment of the committee is to prevent fraud; and I do not see that the provision will be materially altered by the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland; nor do I see that there is any practical difficulty in the use of the words "approved by the Secretary of the Interior," because unquestionably we must leave some discretion in the performance of their duty to the Executive officers in regard to this approval; but I suppose they will perform it in a manner which will be according to the law, and so as to carry out its object. The object of the amendment is to prevent fraud. It is to give to the Government a check upon the selection of those surgeons whose selection by the parties, without any checking power on the part of the Government, would be liable to lead to fraud; because the Government would have no means of knowing as to whether they were competent to examine or not, or whether their certificates were worth anything or not. I do not say that we can prevent fraud altogether, even if you do have them approved by the Secretary of the Interior; but at all events, by having them so approved, the Government will have a check upon frauds arising from the selection by the individual option or caprice of an individual, who might design to defraud, and who might otherwise obtain persons to certify, as surgeons or physicians, who were not really entitled to the name. If you strike out that clause of the section, in my judgment you render it perfectly useless.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question; and declared that it appeared to be carried in the affirmative.

Mr. BAYARD. I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. HUNTER. I understand the honorable Senator from Indiana to accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. PETTIT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. We agree to that. We do not ask the yeas and nays upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware insist upon the call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. BAYARD. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, as amended.

Mr. PETTIT. If it is in order, I now propose to move a new section in lieu of that amendment, to strike out the whole of it, and insert a new section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is now in order, if there be no further amendment proposed to perfect the section as reported from the committee.

Mr. PETTIT. I move, then, to strike out the whole of the amendment of the committee, as amended, and insert the following:

That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall have cause to believe that any pension has been procured by fraud, he shall have full power to inquire into the same by such means as he shall adopt, and after such inquiry and examination, to suspend the payment of such pension temporarily or finally.

Mr. HUNTER. Personally that would be acceptable to me; but I am afraid that if it is introduced it will lead to the debate over again. I think we had better vote the amendment in or out, as the majority may decide.

Mr. PETTIT. I have no desire to debate it.

Mr. HUNTER. I find there are persons friendly to the section prepared by the Department who are not willing to sanction that proposed by the Senator from Indiana. For myself, I would have no objection to it; but I am not willing to prolong the debate further. I think we had better vote the amendment of the committee in or out, as may suit the majority of the committee.

Mr. RUSK. I suggest, also, to the Senator from Indiana I believe the amendment of the committee ought to be rejected. I am willing to vote to detect fraud, but I am not willing to subject the pensioners to the inconvenience which is proposed to be prescribed by our action here. The section is not properly matured in this respect by the committee. But it is now a matter of accommodation; and I suggest to the Senator from Indiana not to press his amendment, but let us vote down the amendment of the committee. The subject should be considered carefully before we adopt such a regulation as is proposed.

Mr. PETTIT. If we can reject the whole provision I shall be glad of it.

Mr. RUSK. I desire to see it rejected.

Mr. PETTIT. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. RUSK. I am willing to vote for any proper, well-matured plan to detect fraud.

Mr. PETTIT. I withdraw my proposed insertion; and shall vote against the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HUNTER. Let us vote on the section which the committee propose.

Mr. PETTIT called for the yeas and nays on the amendment, and they were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. If the section which the committee propose as an amendment is agreed to can I then move an amendment to it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir; after an amendment has been agreed to, it cannot be amended.

Mr. JONES. Then I have an amendment to it which I shall propose now. It is to insert in the amendment, after the words "that before any payment shall hereafter be made to any invalid pensioner," the words, "whose pension exceeds eight dollars per month," and that will make it read:

"That before any payment shall hereafter be made to any invalid pensioner whose pension exceeds eight dollars per month, and whose name shall have been upon the pension list two years, he shall produce to the agent for paying pensions, to whom he shall apply for payment, the affidavit of two surgeons or physicians," &c.

So as not to have it apply to the poor soldiers, whose pay never exceeds eight dollars, and who generally do not get more than four dollars a month. This provision would put them to an unnecessary expense. They do not get more than ninety-six dollars a year, at the very highest; and I want to except them from the onerous provision of this section. Let it apply to the larger class of pensioners, and not to those who get less than eight dollars a month.

Mr. HUNTER. Suppose it is proved that the disability of those who receive less than eight dollars a month has ceased; ought they to be entitled still?

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I do not want an examination gone into in regard to them. The amount which they receive is little enough for the services which they have performed and the injuries sustained.

Mr. HUNTER. If we adopt that it will destroy the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I think the honorable Senator from Iowa is right in proposing this; but at the same time I think it will be much better to reject the whole section, and let the Committee on Pensions mature a plan which will be satisfactory.

Mr. PETTIT. Let us reject the whole section proposed by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD. I can see no reason why the amendment to the amendment should be agreed to. The object of the provision reported by the committee is, as I presume, to prevent fraud. A fraud in a small sum ought to be detected and exposed, if you look to the question of public morals, as much as a fraud in a large sum. Nay, I am satisfied that the effect upon public morals more requires that you should investigate cases of that kind than cases where the amounts may be larger. The latter cases are more apt to be brought to the public notice and prevented than minor cases, so that the smaller cases may have a more deleterious effect on the morals of the community than the larger ones. I put this not only on the ground of public money, as a saving to the Government, but upon that of the public morals. The object is to prevent fraud; and that being so, there is no reason why a fraud in obtaining a pension of eight dollars, or four dollars, or one dollar a month should not just as much be exposed as any case of fraud in obtaining one of $500 a month. I am therefore opposed to the proposition of the Senator from Iowa. I think it goes completely to destroy the whole object and intent of the section reported from the committee.

Mr. TOUCEY. I am in favor of the amendment reported from the committee as it has been amended. It is substantially to require one examination in order to ascertain whether the invalid pensioners now on the pension roll are entitled to the pensions. That is the substance of the provision. The objection which is made to it is, that it is requiring too much to ask that there shall be an examination before two surgeons, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in order to ascertain whether the disability ever existed, whether it now continues, and if it does not continue to stop the pension. Now, it is perfectly well known that there are frauds committed to a very great extent. In some mode those frauds ought to be detected and exposed. I can conceive of no more direct and efficient investigation than that which requires that the pensioner shall appear before two respectable surgeons, and be personally examined; and when that is done, and the report is made, the whole object of this provision is accomplished. It is a measure that is called for by the Department. No substitute is proposed for it; but we are called upon to vote down this simple and direct application as it is, for proof—

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator permit me to say, that we want the Committee on Pensions, which is the proper committee to consider such subjects, to mature a provision on this matter and bring it forward. This is not in its proper place, anyhow, in this bill.

Mr. TOUCEY. Well, it may not be in its proper place. I can only say, sir, that, in looking back into the legislation of the country, the most effective provisions are those that have been introduced in this manner—those which cut up frauds by the roots—those which restrain the officers of this Government within the limits of law. This amendment of the committee is presented here. It is not out of order; and, for one, I cannot vote against giving the Department the power to examine into this matter in the simple mode which is proposed. It is said that it will be vexatious. I agree that as the amendment was originally presented I had an objection to it. I did not approve of the provision to require a repetition of the process of examination and certifying every two years. But that is stricken out; and as the amendment now stands it provides for but a single report. The opportunity being presented to me, I shall vote for it, upon the principle that I will in every case vote for a reform of what I know to be existing evils.

Mr. STUART. I desire to make a single remark in reply to the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS.] If the Committee on Pensions of the Senate will get up a separate bill, and embody in it the principle of this amendment, the chances are not one in fifty that it can be passed in the other House in two years. The reason is, simply, that such a bill, when sent to the House of Representatives, is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and whoever has looked into the legislation of this Government for the last few years will find that whenever a measure, new and useful in its character, has been carried through at all, it has been put upon an appropriation bill, which, by the rules of the House, can be reached at any time.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will say, that when the Army bill comes in, this provision, having been in the mean time matured, may be attached to it, and there it may be properly placed, but not on this bill. It ought to belong to that bill any how; and I think by the time it reaches us we can arrange the provision so that it will accomplish the object we have in view.

The amendment offered by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on agreeing to the amendment reported from the committee, as amended, was taken by yeas and nays; and resulted—yeas 22, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Evans, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gwin, Hamlin, Hunter, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Slidell, Stuart, Toucey, and Williams—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Brown, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Everett, Fish, Geyer, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Pettit, Rusk, Shields, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Weller, and Wright—20.

So it was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance have instructed me to offer the following amendment: To insert among the appropriations for the Interior Department, after the one hundred and forty-sixth line, the words:

For contingent expenses in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions for stationery, $1,000.
For binding books, $1,000.
For office furniture, $1,000.
For printing and engraving bounty land certificates, $1,500.
For miscellaneous items, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance have also instructed me to offer another amendment, to which I beg leave to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE.] It is to strike out of the bill the following:

"For paying pensions of invalids who were wounded on board of private armed vessels during the last war with Great Britain, from July 1, 1851, to June 30, 1854, $8,400."

And insert:

For payment of pensions of invalids who were wounded on board of private armed vessels during the last war with Great Britain, up to January 1, 1853; and to reimburse the pension agents such sums as have been advanced by them for that purpose, $2,662 20.

Mr. PEARCE. I will explain to the Senate briefly the object of the amendment. Privateer pensions were paid out of the privateer pension fund. That fund was created under acts passed in 1812 and 1813, which required two per cent. upon the sales of the prizes, and upon the salvage of the recaptures, to be appropriated to the purpose of a privateer pension fund. In 1814 an act was passed granting pensions to invalids and to the widows and orphans slain on board of privateers. These pensions continued to be paid, with some little modifications occasionally, down to near the year 1844. At that time the fund was exhausted.

The acts granting these pensions required that they should be paid out of this fund, and from no other source. That was the language of one act. Another act expressly provided that they should not be a charge upon the Treasury of the United States. In 1844, however, it was discovered that the fund was exhausted; and at that time a Senator from Maine, [Mr. George Evans,] who was then a member of this body, and chairman of the Committee on Finance, introduced an amendment to an appropriation bill, by which the Senate, at one dash, appropriated $18,000 for the payment of these privateer pensions out of the Treasury of the United States, contrary to the spirit and express provision of the acts granting the pensions.

Subsequently to 1850, Congress refused to pay these pensions out of the Treasury. There was, however, some little balance left in the hands of the agents, and it so happens that some of the pensioners have been paid up to the 1st of January, 1853, the agents not being aware of the refusal of Congress to make further appropriations. Some of the pensioners have been paid up to the 1st of January, 1853, but others have not been. We thought it was well to put all on a footing, and to make an appropriation which would be sufficient to pay all these privateer pensions up to the 1st of January, 1853, but not to continue the system of paying them out of the Treasury. It seemed, indeed, to be the duty of the Committee on Finance, whose business it is to recommend appropriations to carry out existing laws, not to recommend appropriations which were not necessary to carry out those laws, but which were in fact contrary to the provisions of the existing laws.

We propose, therefore, to make an approprition of the sum mentioned in the amendment, which will equalize the condition of all these privateer pensioners. Those who have not received pensions up to January, 1853, will, if this amendment be adopted, receive them, and be put upon the same footing as the others. But it is not recommended to the Senate to continue the payment of these pensions out of the Treasury. It is for the Senate to say whether they will reverse the intention of Congress as declared in the acts of 1814 and 1818, and other acts, and pay the pensions out of the Treasury.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, many of the constituents of my colleague and myself are interested in the amendment now before the Senate; I feel it, therefore, to be my duty to say a word in regard to it. The principle to be decided by the Senate in the adoption or rejection of this amendment has been correctly stated by my colleague. It is whether the pensions of this character shall be exclusively applied to those in the regular service of the country, or whether they ought to be applied to those who were engaged in the privateer service during the last war with Great Britain? That is the broad question, and I want it to be met.

By the act to which my colleague has referred, Congress did at one time recognize the propriety of paying them as other pensioners, and for that purpose appropriated the sum of $18,000 beyond the fund which was derived from their own captures, and which my colleague has said was exhausted, and to which the original pension law in regard to them applied. Now, sir, for myself, if we are to allow pensions to sailors who fought on board of our men-of-war, I cannot see why those who fought on board of private armed vessels should not also receive pensions when they are entitled to them for the same gallant services, and when they were recognized by the country at the time they rendered them as in the service of the country. We all know that letters of marque were issued to the privateers, by which their authority to go abroad and fight the enemies of the country was recognized by law; and they fought as gallantly as any part of those who were engaged in the war. No man can doubt that they did as much injury to the enemy, and rendered as much service to our country, as the regular Navy did during the war of 1812. I do not see, then, why they are not equally entitled to receive pensions as the regular sailors in the war of 1812. I therefore prefer the clause as it stands in the bill, because it appropriates a larger amount.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I can very well give my vote on the issue which my friend from Maryland, who last spoke [Mr. PRATT] has raised; and upon the case, as he has presented it to the Senate, I am very willing to vote with him. But, if I understand this matter correctly, I think my friend has not placed the issue precisely on the strongest point. In other words, I think both he and his distinguished colleague [Mr. PEARCE] labor under an error in this matter. They certainly are in error, or I am; and if I am in error I desire to be corrected. If I understand the original law, it provided that a fund should be created from the proceeds of the prizes captured by the privateers, out of which certain pensions were to be paid. Now, it is asserted here that that fund has been all consumed. I do not so understand. I assert, on the contrary, that the pensions paid at the Department in no year have equalled the interest of that fund.

Mr. PEARCE. If the Senator will allow me I will state the authority.

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. PEARCE. I remember very well the appropriation which was made in 1844, for I was then a member of this body. Certainly it would not have been necessary to make an appropriation out of the Treasury for the payment of these pensions if there had been a sufficient amount to the credit of the privateer pension fund. But here is the authority. It is a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, in which, among other things, he says:

"The act of June 5, 1844, appropriates $18,000 for the payment of invalid pensioners heretofore paid from the privateer pension fund, their pensions to commence from the time they were stopped in consequence of the exhaustion of such fund."

Then he says:

"By reference to the accounts of the receipts and expenditures of the United States, for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1844, it will be seen that the privateer pension fund was then reduced to a balance of $74 07. This date, therefore, may be assumed as that of the exhaustion of the fund."

I think the only error of the statement is, that the fund was exhausted a little sooner, because we appropriated at that very session $18,000 to pay these pensions, and there must have been a considerable amount of arrearages to require that sum.

While I am up, I will merely add, if the Senator will allow me, that the amount is small. I think the number of privateer pensions at this time is only about nineteen, and the amount of pensions which they receive is very small, perhaps something less than $2,000 or $3,000 a year. But if Congress adopt the policy of paying these pensions out of the Treasury, it can scarcely be doubted that new applications for pensions will be filed, and that seems, at all events, to be anticipated by the head of the Bureau.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not now understand the Senator from Maryland as meeting the statement which I made. It is this, and I think I am justified in it by the facts of the case: that the disbursements will show that they were in no year equal to the interest upon the principal amount of this fund. My friend from Maryland has not shown, and the statement which he holds in his hand cannot show, and does not show, the manner in which this fund was lost. Was it loaned by the Government? Has the Government failed to secure those loans? Has the fund been improperly diverted from the purposes for which it was originally intended? So far as I am concerned I care not what became of that fund; but if the Government has not annually paid an amount equal to the interest of it; if it has lost it by loaning it; or if Congress has appropriated it to another and a different purpose than that provided for in the original law; in either case Congress is bound to make it good. That is the position which I assume, and I think the statement which the Senator from Maryland makes fails fully to answer the position which I assumed. It is: that the fund originally created by this prize money was to be appropriated to pay certain pensions, and the Government has never paid annually the amount it was thus obliged to pay, because the interest was to be applied to this object.

A few years ago I had a critical knowledge of this matter, but it has escaped me at this time; and inasmuch as the Committee on Finance reported this bill originally, without recommending the striking out of this clause, I did not make that investigation into it which I otherwise should have done. If they had at first reported the bill, with the recommendation to strike out this clause, I should have endeavored to have before me full and accurate information, and I think it would sustain me in the position which I take. But they did not do so, and now we are met with this amendment, I must confess, somewhat to my surprise.

I am willing to vote for this clause as it came from the House, for the reason which has been so well stated by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT.] The services which these men rendered to their country, I think, were ample and adequate to entitle them to pensions, if they were injured in that service. But I think, above and beyond all that, there is an obligation resting upon us which demands that we shall continue these pensions until we can see, in figures, precisely the way in which the fund has been distributed; because if it were a fund taken from what belonged to those captors at a certain period of time, and, under a provision of law, that it was to constitute a fund out of which the interest was to be paid to these invalids, then, if we have disbursed it in any way, we have treated these individuals differently from what was the actual agreement under the provision of law. In either of these views, I think the bill, in this respect, should stand precisely as it came from the House.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, we have no knowledge of any waste of this fund by the Government. I never heard of its being invested in any funds which have been lost. It has been exhausted just as other funds have been exhausted.

Mr. HAMLIN. How exhausted?

Mr. PEARCE. I suppose the Senator imagines that the original law provided that only the interest of the fund should be applied to the payment of the pensions. If that is what he means he is mistaken. I have the law before me. It provides: "The moneys arising therefrom"—that is, two per cent. of the salvage or recaptures, and of the prizes for captures—"shall be held, and hereby is pledged by the Government of the United States, as a fund for the support and maintenance of the widows and orphans of such persons as may be slain; and for the support and maintenance of such persons as may be wounded and disabled on board of the private armed vessels of the United States," &c. That is, the whole fund was pledged, and not merely the interest. I have no doubt that the interest was not sufficient to pay the pensions, but that they were paid out of the principal. Unquestionably the fund could not have been exhausted except in that way. We know very well that the Navy pension fund was exhausted in that way, and so was the privateer pension fund. If the Government is responsible for the consumption of the fund by the use of it in paying pensions which were granted under the law, it is one thing; but there is no evidence, and I do not believe any evidence can be produced to show that there has been a loss of the fund by bad investments, or a wasting of it by any improper use. I think it has been consumed by its use, by the application of it to the purposes for which it was pledged. I do not mean to contest this matter at all. I leave it to the sense of the Senate to say whether it is proper that these pensions should be paid out of the Treasury or not; but I wish it to be understood that the Committee on Finance have made this recommendation in pursuance of their duty, which is to recommend appropriations according to existing laws.

Mr. HAMLIN. I did not understand that the original law provided that no more than the interest should be paid; but what I stated was this, that the facts at the Department would show that a sum not equal to the interest had been paid, and if that be true, I want to know where the original fund is?

Mr. PEARCE. I think the reverse will be shown by reference to the documents.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, if it can be established that the Government has moneys in its hands belonging to the privateer pension fund which it ought justly to pay, I have no doubt the amendment of the Committee on Finance ought to be rejected. Whatever we are properly responsible for to that fund ought to be distributed for the payment of these pensions. I cannot, however, bring myself to support the opinions or the doctrines asserted by my honorable friend from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] in reference to the privateer system. I do not mean to deny that, during our last war with Great Britain there were gallant actions performed by privateers; but I think the general sentiment of the country is against it, and I should certainly hesitate to place the privateers of the country on a footing with the regular forces of the country, as it regards either the honor or character of the nation, or the luster which was thrown upon that character by the deeds of our seamen. Sir, the principle of privateering is founded in public plunder and private plunder. It is a false principle as applied to a commercial nation, such as the United States. It is a false principle tested by the rules of humanity. It is one which our Government has repeatedly struggled to get abolished by the insertion of such provisions in our treaties with other nations as would prevent it in future wars.

What is the principle, what is the object of privateering, but to take out of the hands of Government the conduct of the war, and to give to individuals, who choose to fit out privateers for mere greedy gain, the right to war on their fellow-men, for private purposes and private plunder alone? That is the only basis on which the system of privateering stands. I think, if you take the general opinion of educated men in reference to the policy of nations who desire to avert the horrors of war, you will find that they will demand that the system of private war should be altogether abandoned. Most certainly in a highly commercial nation, such as the American nation is, it is a practice which ought not to be countenanced. There is no gentleman here who does not know that no war has ever yet occurred in which privateering has been extensively carried on that has not ended in piracy.

Sir, a line of discrimination between the two is very slight. The man who, under private authority from the Government, goes out for the purpose of plundering, for private benefit, the individual property of individual citizens of the enemy, will hardly, in the result, produce a more moral effect than the man who goes out for the purpose of private plunder, without the authority of the Government. My own convictions on this subject are so strong, and I am so strongly satisfied as to the impropriety of the system of privateering, as connected with any principle of humanity, and of the impolicy of a commercial nation like the United States recognizing the right of private war during the existence of public hostilities, that I shall never vote for placing those who have gone into the privateering system upon the same footing with those who have enlisted in the regular service.

Again, there is another objection to the system of privateering. During the war, individuals, under the hope of gain, fit out privateers, and they give an exorbitant amount to the seamen whom they thus engage; they thus prevent the regular Navy from being furnished with seamen, and cripple the Government in the prosecution of a public war while that system obtains.

I have seen recently, I think in the papers of to-day, that a proposition has been presented to the Parliament of Great Britain, that Great Britain and France shall declare privateering to be piracy under the laws of nations, and that they shall hang any seamen or officers caught on board a Russian privateer in the event of a war with Russia.

Sir, that is advancing the laws of nations in rather a summary manner; I believe without any previous treaty. It certainly is changing them; but it is a change which I consider desirable, and which I am sure the policy of this country, the laws of humanity and general morals require, in reference to future wars; though I admit the change must be made by treaty or by the common consent of nations. Everything tending to discountenance the system of privateering will always meet my approbation, and I shall always endeavor to sustain any principle which will have that effect. I cannot, therefore, consent, no matter how gallant may have been the men who fought on board privateers, to place them on the same footing with the officers in your regular Navy, engaged in the public service of the country, and performing that service with a view to the honor and character of the country. I cannot put them in the same condition with those who were in the employment of private individuals, whose great object was private plunder from the citizens of the public enemy, with a view to their own gain. There is an essential difference in the two modes of carrying on war. My opposition to the principle of privateering is so strong, and my conviction of the impolicy of a great commercial nation recognizing the principle in any mode is so strong, that I cannot bring myself to vote for any provision which shall tend to sanction it.

Entertaining these views as to the whole system, believing that it would be wise for this Government if it could by treaty, or by the common consent of nations, to abandon it completely, for all future time, I am unwilling to recognize the propriety of the system even in past time beyond the legal liabilities of the Government in reference to it. I admit, that if there are legal liabilities arising from a fund which has come into the possession of the Government to be administered, under previous legislation, to that extent we are bound to go, but beyond it I am unwilling to go.

Mr. PRATT. I certainly do not feel disposed to discuss the abstract question of morality or right which my friend from Delaware has discussed before the Senate. It is a question which this Government has already settled. It is not an original question. We are not to decide upon the policy of employing such persons in the service of the Government; but it is a question which is settled by the Government itself, in the declaration of war in 1812. Allow me, sir, to read that declaration:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That war be, and the same is hereby, declared to exist between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the dependencies thereof, and the United States of America and their Territories; and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized to use the whole land and naval force of the United States to carry the same into effect, and to issue to private armed vessels of the United States commissions, or letters of marque and general reprisal, in such form as he shall think proper, and under the seal of the United States, against the vessels, goods, and effects of the Government of the said Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the subjects thereof.

Approved, June 18, 1812."

Of course my honorable friend cannot deny that this law was passed; but I apprehend it takes from his argument the only ground on which it rests. That ground was the immorality and impolicy of employing these persons. Now, I show that the parties who ask for the continuance of these pensions are not persons asking to be employed, but persons who were employed, and to whom commissions were issued under the act declaring war with Great Britain, who were authorized to go upon the high seas, under the broad seal of the United States, for the purpose of making captures; and, therefore, we now have nothing to do either with the policy or morality of their original employment. They were employed by our predecessors, and the question now is, having been so employed, whether they are not entitled to receive the same pay as others who fought the common enemy?

Mr. President, what is the result of that employment? I understand that the effect of the employment of private armed vessels under this authority was this: Two per cent. of the amount captured by the privateers was set apart for the purpose of paying pensions to the widows of those who might be killed in battle, and for the support of those who might be wounded. There was, besides this, paid into the Treasury, (as I am informed upon the statement of a gentleman known personally to the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. EVERETT,] and in regard to whose character, and the correctness of the statement that Senator will vouch,) the sum of $3,000,000 derived by the gallant conduct of these men, the survivors of whom now come here and ask for this pittance. You have received, and not appropriated to any particular purpose, but for the general emolument of the Government, from the portion of the prizes which went under the general law to the Government of the United States, the sum of $3,000,000. That amount has gone into your Treasury, and you have used it for the common purposes of the country.

I understand, further, that of this two per cent. the original amount placed in the Treasury was $213,513, and that in 1820, some six years after the war, there remained in the Treasury unexpended $197,134 of the two per centum.

My distinguished colleague [Mr. PEARCE] has stated to the Senate, upon the authority to which he has referred, that the fund has been exhausted. How has it been exhausted? Bear in mind that this Government not only received the two per centum, but also received $3,000,000 for its proportion of the prize money; and it has appropriated these $213,513 by paying the pensions annually, and charging the payments to the principal of the fund, when the Government has perhaps loaned out the money, as it did at one time, by buying bonds for certain purposes in the States, which I understand was the fact. But if that is not so, we all know that, since the war, the Government has had occasion to use, and has used, all the money in the Treasury. Then, I say, the Government has used this fund, and should at least have given these pensioners credit for the interest upon the sum used. Now I undertake to say that if an interest account be stated by which we give these pensioners of 1814 credit for $213,513, which in 1820 amounted to $197,134, and if you charge them with all the pensions which have been paid since 1820, and give them credit for the interest on the principal of the fund, you will find that the Government is largely indebted to them. Then, I ask, in equity and justice, whether they ought not to be paid?

I do not desire to discuss, though I think, if we were now about to enter upon a war, it would be very well worthy of discussion, whether it would be politic and humane on our part to employ this arm of defense in the service of the country. That might be a question then, but it is not a question for discussion here and now. We, under the act declaring war with Great Britain, invited them to come. We told them that we would issue to them commissions of the Government. Those commissions were issued, and the individuals were engaged in the regular service of the country. Their prizes were divided, as were the prizes of the Navy, between the officers and seamen who took the prizes on the one hand, and the Government on the other, the Government receiving $3,000,000 from them.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not consider the question simply an abstract one. I admit that the Government, during the last war with Great Britain, authorized privateers. No one doubts that commissions were issued to privateersmen; and I said expressly that, to the extent of the agreement of the Government with these private plunderers, I was willing to be bound. The Government sanctioned then what I consider to be contrary to the laws of humanity—what it has repeatedly tried to get rid of since by its treaties with other nations. To the extent to which our engagements go, I am willing to go; but I am not willing to step one particle beyond that to sanction what is called the gallant conduct of those men who were engaged in privateering. Sir, I admit that there were individual exceptions of gallantry on the part of our privateers; and probably those who were the most gallant were the ones who poured least money into the Treasury. But I am unable to appreciate the gallantry of a man, who, in the command of a privateer, shuns the enemy's frigate or sloop-of-war, which is their general rule, and will plunder a merchant vessel of the private property of the individual citizens of a foreign enemy, where there is no chance of resistance, and no possibility of danger. I have no faith in the feeling or the spirit in general—I admit there are exceptions—of those who embark on board privateers. I think the line where that differs from common plundering on the ocean, is, that the one is a legal system of piracy, and the other is illegal, and the party is liable to be hung as a pirate, in case he is taken. I cannot draw any other distinction between them. The motive is gain in both cases; mere private plunder. The object of the privateer is always to avoid a contest with an equal force, or any force, unless he can obtain plunder, and will run the risk of hazard in obtaining it. If they can plunder private merchantmen without any resistance, that is always their object.

The system is demoralizing to the commander of the vessel; it is demoralizing to the owner of the vessel. I protest against such a system, though it was formerly adopted, as were many other things in the laws and practices of nations, which have since been abandoned. I admit that it was adopted in 1812, and I am perfectly willing to carry out the obligations which the Government has assumed; but my remarks were to show that I did not mean to go beyond that.

Now, what were the obligations which the Government assumed towards them in 1812? They were, that a certain fund, which these persons themselves created, should be held by the Government, and distributed for the purpose of paying them pensions. Did Congress put them on a footing with the Navy? No, sir; the provision as to the Navy was, that they should be paid out of the Treasury generally; but the provision as to privateers was that they should be paid out of a particular fund, and out of no other fund. That is the extent of our engagements, and that fund, too, was to be created by themselves. If you will show me, not on loose calculations here, but by obtaining the requisite information from the Department, that the Government has still that fund in its possession, and has misused it, I am willing to replace it, and pay the pensions out of the Treasury, so far as that misuse goes; but I am not willing now, with my views of the system of privateering, to go one iota beyond the strict engagements of the Government to these privateersmen at the time war was declared.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope we shall have a vote upon this amendment. There are several others yet to be offered by the Committee on Finance. The question has been discussed pro and con, and I hope we shall have a vote upon this amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope we may have a vote; but still, as this amendment has come upon us with so much surprise, I hope the chairman of the committee will not press us to a vote while there is anything to be said in favor of retaining the clause in the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. HUNTER. I will suggest to the Senator that it ought not to be a matter of surprise; because we recommended that this provision should be stricken out of the invalid pension bill, and the Senate did strike it out, and now it has come back to us in the deficiency bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is here in the deficiency bill; and the Senate Committee on Finance reported the bill originally, without recommending that it should be struck out. I do not, however, design to take up the time of the Senate, but I wish to add a word in relation to what has been said by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT.] I think that what he has said is a perfect corroboration of what I have before asserted, that the amount of pensions paid from the two per cent. fund, has never equaled the interest upon that fund at six per cent. per annum, and I do not understand any gentleman of the Committee on Finance to contradict that statement. The amount of captures must have exceeded $11,000,000, to yield a two per centum of $215,000. Now, I think I am right when I say that no instance can be found in the history of a Government, where a fund has been intrusted to its charge, and where it has assumed the character of a trustee, in which it has appropriated the original fund as trustee, without making any account of the interest. How is it with the Smithsonian Institution? In that instance, the Government loaned the fund, and lost part of it, and made it good by a direct appropriation. I think the distinguished Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] who proposes this amendment, would be the last Senator in this body to allow any diversion of that fund from its legitimate and appropriate object. If it had been lost by loan on the part of the Government he would be the first to require that it should be replaced. Certainly I assume upon this question precisely the position which that Senator would assume upon that—that the fund having been originally created by the reservation of two per cent., those who are entitled to it are entitled to the interest of that fund, and not to the principal. When I assert the fact, and when it is not contradicted by any Senator here, that the interest upon the two per cent. fund has never been exhausted, and that amount has never been annually paid, there is sheer justice, and nothing but sheer justice, in paying to this class of individuals those pensions, without regard to the other question, as to whether they are entitled to them for the services which they rendered to the country.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator from Maine say that no Senator disputes the assertion that the fund has never been exhausted?

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand no Senator to deny this: that the fund originally amounted to over $200,000, and that the amount paid from the Department in any year has never equaled six per centum on that fund. That was what I stated.

Mr. HUNTER. There are papers in the possession of the Senator from Maryland showing that the fund has been exhausted.

Mr. HAMLIN. Not at all, sir; not at all. Those papers show that the amount has been taken out of the fund without allowing interest. An account current stated here this day, with proper debits and credits, with interest on the two per centum fund, would show, I think, that the Government is very greatly indebted to these pensioners over and above the original fund. That is my understanding.

Mr. PEARCE. The papers do not disclose what is the fact in regard to it. They affirm the exhaustion of the fund. They do not show whether the accruing interest has been paid or not; but I presume the interest has been applied, because that was the case in regard to the Navy pension fund proper, and when the interest was exhausted they went upon the principal. But, sir, privateer pensions were much larger formerly than now; first, because up to 1844 we gave pensions to the widows of privateersmen. After that time all these pensions ceased, and we never gave any to widows. I do not know what the fact is; I have no official information upon the subject; but I presume the interest accruing on this fund must have been applied to the payment of these pensions, and when that was exhausted they went upon the principal.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. President, some few of the remaining pensioners on this list are constituents of mine, and I really feel it to be a duty to express the hope that this amendment will not be adopted. There are but very few of these pensioners now. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] has stated them at nineteen. My information is that there are about twenty-four of them. At any rate their number is small. They must be very far advanced in life. Some of them are the widows of those to whom the pensions were originally paid; and I think it would be a very hard case, just as they are passing out of this world, that you should withdraw from them this poor pittance. If it were an original question—if the Senate of the United States were now called to pass upon the question whether we should encourage the system of privateering—I do not know that I should differ greatly from the honorable Senator from Delaware. But, as has been already observed, this is not now an open question. It is a matter of principle and of practice settled in reference to these individuals forty years ago; and it would be a great hardship now to visit upon these poor old individuals, just dropping into the grave, and upon their widows, the scruples which we may entertain as to encouraging private warfare. I should be sorry to see it done, and I think the country would deem it a great hardship.

Well, sir, in reference to the statements which have been made on the authority of the paper which I hold in my hand. I know very well the person who prepared this paper. He has been a neighbor and a constituent of mine. He signalized himself greatly in the war of 1812, and I take it upon me to say that there was not an officer in the regular service who did more to carry on that war, who conducted himself with greater gallantry, and I will say, too, sir, with greater success. He was engaged in twenty or thirty actions. He was wounded; he was taken prisoner. In short, he achieved a reputation which, within the narrow circle of a private individual, might truly be called heroic. As to the idea of the Senator from Delaware, that these privateers always ran away from armed ships, and did nothing but make war upon the defenseless, I can assure him that it is a great mistake.

Mr. BAYARD. The honorable Senator will allow me to say that I stated expressly that there were exceptions; but, as a general rule, of necessity the course of privateers is to attack the defenseless for the purpose of plunder, and not to make war for the purpose of conquest against armed vessels. That is the general course; the other is the exception.

Mr. EVERETT. I do not mean to misstate the Senator, of course; but I rather think, if he will refresh his recollection of the history of that war, he will agree with me that the private armed ships conducted themselves in a manner fully entitled to the credit of patriotism, and even of heroism. Let me read a single paragraph from the statement to which I have referred: "From official reports, and other reliable data, the following facts are sustained: Of the fifty-six men-of-war and king's packets captured during the war, mounting eight hundred and sixty-six guns, the private ships captured twenty, mounting two hundred and twelve guns."

A quarter of the guns and a considerable proportion of the vessels numerically were taken. Fifty-six was the whole number of naval vessels captured, and the private armed ships took twenty. Then "of two thousand three hundred and sixty-nine merchant vessels captured, mounting eight thousand guns, the private ships captured two thousand and sixty-four." There is a blur in the print, so that I cannot make out the number of guns of the merchant vessels captured; but it may be placed at about a quarter. So that you have these private armed ships performing one fourth part of all that was done in capturing either public or private armed vessels of the enemy. I think this shows that those cases to which the Senator from Delaware alludes could not have been exceptions; but, on the contrary, it is more likely that they were the rule, and that wherever a private armed ship of the United States met anything like an equal force, the commander did not scruple to make battle. I know that that was the case with the gallant person who prepared this statement; for I have read over and over again the detailed accounts of the bloody actions which were thus fought by that individual, who is still living, and who, I hope, is not to be doomed to the mortification of hearing that this poor pittance which we are now giving to these most meritorious persons is about to be taken from them.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I rise only to mention a single fact. It has been assumed here, upon the authority of the paper which the honorable Senator from Massachusetts has, that the Government of the United States received a portion of the prize money; that in its distribution a part was allowed the Government. I find that that is not so. On looking at the law, I perceive that the whole proceeds were to be divided among the officers and crew of the vessel according to the agreement made between themselves in that respect. It is true, however, that the United States received a considerable sum of money from those prizes; but they received it in the shape of duties. The goods could not properly be brought into the United States without dispensing with the general law, and that law was dispensed with, provision being made that these goods should pay duties. The United States received some three millions of dollars in duties, but not as a share of the prize money. Then we cannot be called upon to apply these three millions to this purpose. Nothing but duties were paid to the Government as in other cases.

Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Brown, Butler, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hunter, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Rusk, Sill, Stuart, Toucey, and Welles—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Brodhead, Dodge of Wisconsin, Everett, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Morton, Pratt, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, and Wright—19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to offer the following amendment, to come in after the appropriations for the public buildings and grounds:

For completing the improvement of Pennsylvania avenue from Seventeenth to Twenty-sixth street west, $9,000: Provided, That all appropriations herein made for repairs and improvements of the public buildings or grounds within the District of Columbia shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment which the Committee on Finance have instructed me to offer is to insert:

For the transportation of Governor Stevens and his party, and for explorations made by him between the Mississippi river and the Pacific ocean, $25,000.

This is according to estimate, and I have before me a communication from the Secretary of War upon the subject, in which he says:

"From the foregoing statement, it will be seen that Governor Stevens has exceeded in his expenditures the sums allotted to the survey under his charge, and made arrangements to continue his operations beyond the period contemplated by law, and though, as soon as the information reached this Department, instructions (a copy of which are herewith transmitted) were dispatched, requiring him to close his operations, as originally directed, it will be necessary to provide for this deficit, with any other which may be found in the final settlement; and to this end I recommend that an appropriation of $25,000 be made to cover deficiencies for the survey of the route for a railroad from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I have another amendment to offer, by direction of the Committee on Finance. It is to insert immediately after the heading "miscellaneous," the following:

For contingent expenses of the Senate, viz:
For lithographing and engraving, $20,000.
For binding, $30,000.
For books, $12,691.

For clerks to committees and President pro tempore, draughtsmen, messengers, pages, laborers, police, horses, and carriages, $4,400.

For miscellaneous items, to replace this amount drawn by order of the Senate from that head of appropriation, in a payment to R. M. Young, as commissioner, to investigate charges against Hon. A. Ramsey, late Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Minnesota, $924 20.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment of the committee is to insert:

For the completion of the bridge across the Potomac river at Little Falls, and painting thereof, agreeably to the plan adopted under the direction of the President of the United States, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance is to add the following as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, there shall be, in addition to the
